At the time of this meeting on January 4th, I knew that the stated attitude of the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, was as Dr. Frey described it. I had, only a short time before that, in Dallas, at the meeting of the American Petroleum Institute, which he addressed, and where I talked with him, heard him in an open meeting state that; and I also knew it from other things that he had said and done during the entire activity of the Code in Washington.

It was in November, 1934 that I heard him at Dallas. I talked with him after the meeting, but he addressed 3177 the American Petroleum Institute, and dealt with this question. The copy of the Oil and Gas Journal, dated November 15, 1934, contains on page 40 a report of the speech that I heard him deliver on that occasion. The occasion for the delivery of that speech was the annual meeting of the Petroleum Institute, and Secretary Ickes was there to address the convention of all the members. It was a very large meeting.

(Marked portion of press release referred to is received in evidence as EXHIBIT 968, and read to the jury by Mr. Donovan.)

That is the substance of a part of what I heard on that occasion at Dallas, the speech made by Mr. Ickes on November 14, 1934.

At the meeting of January 4th, I asked for recommendations as to how the matter that had been discussed should be dealt with. There was a recommendation that as the subject was a very important one, a committee embracive of the different viewpoints and the different territories be appointed to study the matter, and to make a recommendation to me as to what, if anything, might be done. I am not sure who made that recommendation, but I think it was Mr. Majewski.

I took it under advisement, and later in the day appointed the committee. The members I appointed and the rea-3178 sons I made these particular appointments were as follows:

Mr. McDowell, the chairman, was the active head of the marketing of Mid-Continent Petroleum Company, located in Tulsa. He had been very cooperative in all industry matters. I felt that he had a very considerable and intelligent grasp of the industry's problems. He was active throughout the Mid-Western states. He was located in the heart of the Mid-Continent independent refinery district; and was known in a very favorable way by large refiners and small refiners. He had been very active in Code matters all through the Mid-Continent district, and had been in Washington on many occasions on Code matters.

Mr. H. T. Ashton, of Lubrite Refining Company, was formerly an independent refiner. He also had a very expert knowledge, I felt, of conditions; also had a very good acquaintance with the independent refiners, and was known by the large refiners; had a comprehensive knowledge of all marketing conditions; and in addition, was an active officer of the Western Petroleum Refiners' Association, which was an association largely composed of independent refiners.

Mr. Van Eeghen of Shell Petroleum Company, St. Louis, through the large distribution and important position of the Shell interests all through this Mid-Continent, 3179 both as a refiner and a marketer, I felt had a very comprehensive knowledge of the entire field.

Mr. Hughes of Phillips Petroleum Company, Bartlesville, was representing the knowledge of production, Phillips Petroleum Company being very active independent producers, and also had a very close relationship and understanding with jobbers and dealers with whom they did a very large business, and also at that time they were very active in retail marketing.

Mr. Karstedt of Continental Oil Company at Ponca City was representing a very large, if not the leading activity in the northwest, and had a knowledge, I felt, of the states in that part of the mid-west which was important.

Mr. O'Shaughnessy was head of an independent refinery, and had a knowledge of the difficulties that the independent refiner was laboring under, and also was one of those who had made the request that something be done, and I felt his contribution would be very valuable.

Mr. Bullock of Standard Oil Company of Indiana represented the leader, which I felt was important in that they had very large distribution in every part of the territory, in every state, and his very expert and very long understanding of this field, dating back a great many years, was a necessary and important element.

3180 Patrick Miskell of Empire Oil Refining Company at Tulsa was for quite a long time a well-known and a very practical refiner and active marketer in all the 10 states. He had not only had acquaintance with the independent refiners, but also with the independent marketers in the Mid-West, and also had a knowledge of the southeast and southwest which these ten states border on.

Now, you will notice that the experience of these men is pretty general, I felt, and that they were located at quite far points in this mid-western territory.

When I asked Mr. McDowell and these other gentlemen to serve on this committee, I stated that they had heard the problem as it had been presented by Mr. Majewski and Mr. O'Shaughnessy, that they knew that this was an important matter that had been before the industry for some time; that I would recommend that the committee take the matter under advisement, consider it from all angles, and then if and when they had anything to recommend to me, to let me know. I also stated that this matter was of a great deal of interest, it was quite important to the people back in Washington, the Petroleum Administrative Board, and that I wanted to inform them as to what we were doing, and developments, when and if they finally reported to me.

After the meeting of January 4th in Chicago, I went to Washington. When I returned to Washington I at-3181 tended a meeting of the Planning and Coordination
Committee, on or about January 8th or 9th. I remember conversations I had at that time with Mr. Franklin and others at that meeting, some of which related to the meeting which we had held in Chicago.

At the meeting of the Planning and Coordination Committee, I told them that this question of the plight of the independent refiner had been with us for a long time; that we had endeavored to deal with it, as they knew, without much success; that the matter had become urgent. I then explained to members of the Planning and Coordination Committee what Messrs. Majewski and O'Shaughnessy had said, and that I had appointed this committee, and I was hopeful that the committee might make some constructive suggestions, and furthermore, that I would hope to keep them informed.

I referred to the matter of the tank car price and its relation to crude in regard to the ever-present problem that had been before the Committee, and had been so frequently, from the very first, discussed with the Petroleum Administrative Board, namely, the bringing about for gasoline a parity with crude oil. When I say "parity" I mean a price for gasoline that would be relative to the price of $1 for crude oil.

At or about the same time I saw some members of 3182 the Petroleum Administrative Board, Messrs. Marshall and Meyers.

During the period prior to January 8th or 9th, I had had occasion, as chairman of the marketing committee, or as a member of the Planning and Coordination Committee, or under the letter of July 20th, to be very frequently in contact with members of the Petroleum Administrative Board.

With the beginning of the Code I was in Washington continuously for a great many weeks. While there our contact with the Petroleum Administrative Board was daily; it was at that period not only daily but at night. It was very common for us to be in consultation with them for hours and hours at a time, day after day. It was extremely close. In the matters in which I was in touch with the Oil Administration, my contacts were, with few exceptions, with the members of the Board rather than with the Secretary of the Interior.

After the appointment of the Planning and Coordination Committee, by the President, we began our operations in the Interior Department Building. I mention that because that was only for a short time. We were very near the office of the Secretary. He appeared sometime in early September. I remember it well. He was in his shirt sleeves; and informed us that as a cabinet minister his duties were very considerable; that he was unable to carry on himself personally all that would be necessary for him 3183 to do in connection with the administration of the Code; that he had chosen members for the Petroleum Administrative Board who were to act for him, who were to have responsibility and authority, and that all questions that we had were to be taken up with them, and it should be considered as if they were taken up with him direct; that he wished to assure us, not only was this his wish, but that he would be in constant touch, through his Board, with our activities, and if, on occasion, it was so required, he would have opportunity to contact with us, but that we were to look to the Petroleum Administrative Board in relation to the carrying on of our functions, and that they had the authority to do so.

Our contacts with the members of the Petroleum Administrative Board were necessarily informal.

Our contacts with these gentlemen in regard to interpretation of Code rules occupied a very considerable amount of time, day in and day out. It would have been practically an impossibility for our Committee, having in mind all the activities through the country, to be going to Mr. Ickes for attention or consideration.

This Petroleum Administrative Board was devoting its entire time to our industry.

Mr. Meyers and Mr. Marshall were connected with the Department of the Interior under Mr. Ickes, in some 3184 other capacity, before he appointed them to the Petroleum Administrative Board.

When I saw them in Washington, on or about January

9, 1935, I explained to them what had been a matter of grave concern to the Petroleum Administrative Board, and needless to say, to the industry, the matter of these retail price wars, and what we had done in the December meetings to deal with them.

I told them I was encouraged about what we had accomplished up to that time by the cooperation of the different elements in the industry and how the industry in the various states had given their time and attention to it.

I also told them of the meeting of January 4th, how this question of the independent refiner had come to the front and what I had done in appointing the committee.

I also discussed with Messrs. Meyers and Marshall what was then a matter of grave concern to us, and that was the very recent Panama decision of the Supreme Court, which had brought about in Texas a discontinuance of the Tender Board; and I was anxious to know what, if anything, was being done, because this was worrying all of us, and it would be very, very essential, we felt, that something be done to deal with it. The Panama decision was on 3185 January 7th. When I talked with them, that information had come down just a few days before.

Mr. Meyers and Mr. Marshall informed me as to what the administration was going to do about the Panama decision. They stated that they could quite appreciate our situation; that the Secretary and the members of the Board were doing all that they could in the preparation of a bill that they were hopeful of submitting to Congress that would reestablish the Tender Board in Texas.

Mr Meyers and Mr. Marshall expressed great interest in the statement I had made to them about what I had been doing in the Mid-West and hoped that we would be successful in maintaining the gains we had made in the retail market, and also expressed interest in regard to the formation of the committee, in connection with the tank car market situation in the Mid-Continent.

I don't recall that I saw Mr. McDowell again during the month of January, 1935, after my talk with Mr. Meyers and Mr. Marshall. I may have; but frankly don't recall it. I don't recall specifically any telephone conversation, such as you suggest was Mr. McDowell's recollection in testifying, that I had with him during that month, as to his committee becoming active and in which I had emphasized the importance of that work to him, although I wouldn't say he wasn't right; but I don't remember it.

During this period in January I was devoting my-3186 self to activities other than the tank car stabilization committee. The work that I was doing under the letter of July 20th took me into various sections of the country. I remember I was at Pinehurst, North Carolina during the first half of February, 1935. I recall a telephone conversation with Mr. McDowell while I was there. I would say that conversation took place February 5th or 6th.

I have heard Mr. McDowell's testimony and I remember he said that he had a conversation with me also on February 11. I would say that he was probably right about that.

I next saw Mr. McDowell in connection with this Committee on February 25th or 26th, in Chicago. By that time, the Committee may have been called the Tank Car Stabilization Committee. I didn't give it that name. I met with Mr. McDowell and Mr. Ashton, who was the vice-chairman of that Committee; told them that while they had in their telephone conversations told me something about what they were doing, what they were planning, I felt that I would like to have a full and complete statement of what they had to recommend. They gave me a statement of what was under way at that time.

They told me that the Committee had felt that this was a very serious situation, that the refiners of the country unquestionably were in distress, due to the price of 3187 crude oil and the realization of gasoline. Realization of gasoline is the price they were getting for gasoline on sales at their refineries. There was no doubt that the independent refiner did need assistance. They had endeavored to consider the matter from every angle. They had discussed the matter of recommending a reduction in the price of crude oil. In this respect, they knew the attitude of the administration had been opposed to it.

Furthermore, it was a question as to whether it would be supporting the crude oil situation in the producing states, the proration laws, and so forth. That after all their considerations, they had come to what they felt was a wise and reasonable recommendation.

Mr. McDowell said that consideration had been given to the effect of distress gasoline and that the question of distress gasoline was an outstanding factor in the situation, and that it had to be dealt with. He mentioned a quantity which they felt was comparatively small, having in mind total production of gasoline, which was in the hands of these independent refiners. It was gasoline they had no home or market for. It was distress gasoline. And unless there could be some way of helping these refiners to find buyers for that, it would be very difficult to do anything in the way of stabilizing the situation.

He mentioned the fact that there were known regular 3188 buyers in the Mid-Continent region who were buying currently, and that if these buyers had knowledge of the situation, knew what gasoline was being offered, it would undoubtedly prove of interest and might assist the situation.

The recommendation Mr. McDowell made to me in substance was this: That their committee would make current surveys of the Mid-Continent situation, that known sellers of gasoline would be put in contact with prospective buyers of gasoline, that buyer and seller would in their own way carry on their own negotiations as to price, quantity, specifications, shipping.

That the Committee would recommend to the buyers that they pay a fair, market going price. Second, that this proposed plan involve no pool, no contractual commitments. It would be entirely voluntary except as to the terms that the seller and buyer would arrive at individually; that there would be no percentage buying as to the quantity of gasoline that would be sold or bought, depending on the size of the buyer.

That, third, they would not advise that this program be put into effect until the hot oil situation in Texas had come under control, so that the refiners in Texas were shipping their products to the normal market for their products.

3189 They then emphasized particularly how this plan was different from the pools or contractual programs that had been tried in 1934. They pointed out that in those programs on the one side, that companies were required to buy gasoline regardless of whether they needed it or not, that in this proposed plan the buyer only bought such quantity of gasoline as he had actual need for. That in those programs there were definite contractual commitments; in this program it was voluntary. That in those 1934 programs the prices for which the gasoline was to be sold and bought were not only fixed, but they were fixed above the market. In regard to this plan the matter of price would be the fair market going price and be a matter of negotiation between the seller and buyer; that in those programs there had been a definite relationship between the quantity of gasoline that was sold and bought, depending on the size of the buyer; that in this program there was no such relationship. The seller sold what he had and the buyer bought what he chose.

Further, that in those programs, in the case of some of the refiners, their entire output of gasoline was sold; while in this program there was no such provision. It was only a matter of such gasoline as the refiner cared to sell.

3190 Those 1934 programs were approved by the Oil Administrator.

After stating this recommendation, they recommended to me that this plan be put into effect if and when the East Texas hot oil situation was brought under control so that the East Texas gasoline would be going into its normal market, and not slopping over into the Mid-Continent. At this time there was under consideration by the Government the Connally Bill, which had about that time been approved, as I recall it, on February 22, and the outlook, as a result of that, was very encouraging.

In respect to their recommendation, I told them that I felt that their plan was wise and reasonable; that I felt that they had considered the matter from every point of view; I felt that with the passage of the Connally Act and the prospect of a Tender Board, which had not been appointed at that particular moment, it was very possible; and that all in all I felt that the program was one that could be recommended. I felt, however, I wasn't ready to approve it and see the Committee put it into effect; that I felt that something else should be done first. And at that time I told them of a meeting that I had called sometime before to meet with the independent refiners in the Mid-Continent region at Kansas City on March 1st. I had 3191 notified the independent refiners at that time of such a meeting.

Exhibit 137 for identification is a telegram that I sent to one of the independent refiners. I sent similar telegrams to other independent refiners to meet on March 1st.

(Telegram referred to is received in evidence as EXHIBIT 137, and read to the jury by Mr. Donovan.)

When in that telegram I spoke of "many important matters that should be immediately decided", I had in mind that in our stabilization efforts I would like to contact with them and find out whether their representation in the work that we were trying to do was agreeable to them. I also had in mind this matter of allocations which was something that was very important to them and to us and to the administration.

I sent a letter, Exhibit 969 for identification, before that meeting to Charles Fahy of the Petroleum Administrative Board.

I attended the meeting in Kansas City on March 1st.

Mr. McDowell was unable to be there. Mr. Ashton attended it.

I opened the meeting. I told the group that I was very glad to meet them, there were many there that I had never met, that I came there in behalf of stabilization, not as a stabilizer of any one part of the industry, but as 3192 stabilizer for all parts of the industry, and that meant that I came as stabilizer to help the independent refiner in the Mid-Continent.

I told them that I appreciated that they had had a very difficult and serious development under the Code. I knew that it was so that some of them were on the brink of bankruptcy; I knew that some of them had closed their plants; I knew that others were on the verge of closing their plants; I knew that the matter of hot gasoline that had been coming over from East Texas and destroying markets in the Mid-Continent had seriously affected them; I knew that the Code had proven difficult for them. It had resulted in the pegging of the price of crude at $1 by the administration; it had brought the confinements of allocations; it had resulted in increased labor costs, lower hours, minimum wages; it had brought other troubles. I was there to find out whether I could help them; that I knew that they needed help, and I hoped that this meeting, thaf something could be accomplished that would relieve them from the distress they were in.

In the course of that meeting something was said about the plan which Mr. McDowell's Committee had recommended to me. I told them that the question of their serious difficulty had been presented at a meeting in Chicago, on January 4th, by Messrs. O'Shaughnessy and Majewski; that they had made a very strong plea for 3193 something to be done to assist them, and that everybody had felt that that statement was a correct one in regard to their plight; that I had appointed a committee, which no doubt they knew of because it had received considerable publicity, and that that committee had recently made a recommendation as a result of their study; that I was going to ask a member of the committee, Mr. Ashton, its vice-chairman, because Mr. McDowell, its chairman could not be present, to directly inform them as to what this recommendation was.

I asked them then if they would consider it and let us know what they thought of it, that it was in their behalf, and I hoped something constructive would come out of this recommendation.

Mr. Ashton stated to the group what I have already testified to in regard to the McDowell-Ashton report to me in Chicago on February 26th.

After his statement there was some discussion. As a result of that discussion, the group decided that we were trying to do something for them and wanted to co-operate in the consideration of their difficulties in every way they could. They stated they would like to know more of what Mr. Ashton had reported in regard to his committee's recommendation. As a matter of fact they wanted to see 3194 if they could not have more information than they had been able to get merely by his presenting it. As a result Mr. Ashton telephoned Mr. McDowell and then informed the group that there would be a meeting in the near future in St. Louis, and that the Committee which would meet there would be very glad to talk to a representative committee of their group that cared to attend, and at that time they would have an opportunity to find out more, as they desired, of the proposal.

I cannot be sure, but I think Mr. McDowell at that time was in Tulsa. As I recall it, the date of the meeting was fixed, March 5. The independents appointed a committee.

Exhibit 305 for identification is a letter that I sent to Mr. Marcell, dated March 12, 1935.

(Letter referred to is received in evidence as EXHIBIT 305, and read to the jury by Mr. Donovan.)

By "bad practices", in that letter, I meant that which the industry under the Code and under stabilization was trying to eliminate; that we would come under the laws of our Code; that we would take and use the proper, fair practices that the Code provided.

In regard to leaders, I referred to the major companies. In an industry such as ours, whether under a Code or under stabilization, the major operators, having in mind potential strength in all things relating to a market, would necessarily have to abide by the Code, be cooperative in stabilization in behalf of an industry and lead the way. If you didn't have the leaders, or the large distributors of an industry supporting a Code or stabilization, it would be totally impractical to deal with independent or small refiners or marketers.

Mr. Marcell is the general manager in charge of White Eagle Division of Socony-Vacuum Oil Company of Kansas, who operate, as I have explained, in a number of states adjoining.

Mr. Irwin is in charge largely of the refinery activities. That is R. R. Irwin.

After the meeting of March 1st, I recall hearing of the St. Louis meeting of the Tank Car Stabilization Committee which was held on March 5th at St. Louis. I heard that from Mr. Ashton by telephone. He told me that the committee of independent refiners whom they had chosen themselves, had been to St. Louis; that they had had an interesting meeting, and that they felt that some good had been accomplished.

Later in the day I had a further conversation with him. I told him that we had all been of the feeling that the proposals recommended by his committee, with the idea become effective as soon as possible. That, when those recommendations were made, we hadn't been able to approve them because of the East Texas hot oil situation. That I felt by that time, March 6th, that every indication was for an improvement; that East Texas gasoline, while still a factor, was apparently being better controlled; the Tender Board was operating with a degree of efficiency, and that I felt there should be no further delay, and that it would be all right for the Committee to make their recommendation effective.

I don't recall that I did anything after that time in connection with the activities of the Tank Car Stabilization Committee. I did not attend any of their meetings. I received information from Mr. McDowell or Mr. Ashton, or from both, as to what the Committee was doing. The nature of that information was an occasional memorandum that had to do with the surveys that they were making, and giving some idea of the prospective buyers of the gasoline that this survey showed was for sale. I don't recall receiving any memoranda that purchases had actually been made by the various companies. I don't recall that I ever got in touch with any prospective buyers in the Mid-Continent field and discussed their buying with them. Neither the Committee nor any member of the Committee asked my aid in that matter. If they had asked me, I 3197 would gladly have given it.

I have heard Mr. McDowell's testimony as to a meeting in Chicago on June 6 and 7, 1935, after the Schechter decision knocked out the N. I. R. A. I would say that my recollection is in accord with his testimony on that. The Schechter decision left us without any Code or stabilization, other than voluntary stabilization. This was a very important matter to the industry. I called that meeting, which I think was on June 7th, for the purpose of discussing the possibility of a code for the industry for marketing being submitted to the Federal Trade Commission.

Before going to Chicago I had attended the meeting of the Board of Directors of the American Petroleum Institute on June 3rd. At that time, action had been taken by the Board of Directors as to the formation of a Code of Fair Trade Practices, to be submitted to the Federal Trade Commission and as to the setting up of a committee to deal with that problem. The Executive Committee and the Board of Directors of the American Petroleum Institute appointed me as the chairman of a committee to prepare a proposed marketing code to submit to the Federal Trade Commission. It passed a resolution requesting and approving the various committees of the Planning and Coordination Marketing Committee contributing what 3198 they could to the preparation of such a code. Furthermore they understood that the Secretary, and the Planning and Coordination Committee, hoped that there yet would be legislation that would enable us to carry on in some form, maybe not the same as under the N. R. A., but in some form, a Code of Fair Practice.

I remember that the matter of a code was taken up with the Federal Trade Commission in the month of June. I did not personally take it up. That was a part of the situation which I reviewed with the group in Chicago on June 6th and 7th.

I recall that Mr. McDowell testified here that after the meeting of the Tank Car Stabilization Committee on June 6th and 7th, held after the June meeting, at which he spoke, he informed me that the Tank Car Stabilization Committee was going to continue its activities on a voluntary basis. I recall his testimony that I said to him that I thought it was a fine thing to do. I did think it was a fine thing to do.

After that time, I did not receive any information that I recall as to the activities of that Committee. There may be an occasional memorandum, but I don't recall any. I never was called upon after that time to have any contact with buyers.

Mr. McDowell and Mr. Ashton had told me that the amount of distress gasoline that was expected, as 3199 shown by their survey, in the Mid-Continent each month was between 600 and 700 cars.

The committee of independent refiners appointed to meet with Mr. McDowell's Committee at St. Louis on March 5, were Messrs. Boggs, Cocanower and Simmons. I did hear that Mr. Winget, another independent refiner, appeared there on his own.

I know Neil Buckley. I met him in February, 1935 at Pinehurst, North Carolina.

Dr. Lederer of the P. & C. Committee telephoned me on February 9 or 10, 1935 and said that he wished to introduce a Mr. Buckley, that I didn't know Mr. Buckley, but that he had something very important and very interesting that he wanted Mr. Buckley to lay before me. He remarked upon the fact that I had shown interest and activity in behalf of the refiners in connection with stabilization work and he felt this was a matter that I should know about; and Mr. Buckley and he were anxious that I give an interview to Mr. Buckley.

I knew Dr. Lederer. He was chairman of the Planning and Coordination Committee for labor in Washington in connection with code activities. He was also allocator of the East Texas field.

Mr. Collett at that time was the chairman of the Planning and Coordination Committee in Washington. Dr. Lederer stated that he had also talked with Mr. Col-3200 lett, regarding Mr. Buckley, and that he wished to add that Mr. Collett likewise felt that the matter was of importance and joined Dr. Lederer in asking that I give an interview.

In reply to Dr. Lederer I said that I was in need of rest; and had been in Pinehurst only a short time and would prefer his delaying the matter until I returned. Dr. Lederer said he felt the matter was urgent and was serious enough to justify me, if I would, in receiving Mr. Buckley. My only conversation with Mr. Buckley was that Dr. Lederer then introduced me over the 'phone to him and he asked when it would be convenient for me to see him, and I fixed the date of February 11th.

On February 11th, at Pinehurst, Mr. Buckley stated that he had been talking with East Texas refiners who had recently formed the East Texas Refiners Association; that he was rather discouraged in his accomplishment up to that time, and that he found that the industry that he had contacted had very little confidence in the sincerity of those refiners, and it was a question in his mind whether he was going to have very much success in his efforts.

He stated that he had taken up this work and had endeavored to make contacts with various important people among the major companies, but he had not been very come to me for advice, in fact, if I would, for assistance; that he appreciated that I would probably have some prejudice and some feeling of lack of confidence in these people, but he was there to tell me what he had done, that he had looked into the situation; he had deliberately analyzed it with as much care as he could, and he really felt that these refiners were sincere, that they had everything to gain by being cooperative with the industry and with the Petroleum Administrative Board in adopting good practices, obeying allocations, and all of those things that they had been so free and disregardful of.

I had never heard of the independent refiners' association in Texas. I told Mr. Buckley that what he said was of extreme interest. Needless to say, the industry had found the East Texas refiners one of the most demoralizing and the greatest disturbance that we had to contend with. I asked him a great many questions as to why he felt that they were sincere. I questioned him about why he felt that they were going to discontinue the purchase and use of hot oil. I questioned him as to why he felt they were going to abide by allocations. I called his attention to the fact that we had, on various occasions, endeavored to and all of those things had been disregarded by them, and I wanted him to tell me why he felt as he did. Whereupon, in his own characteristic way, he endeavored to do what he could. When he had finished, I still felt that there were a great many questions. I told him there would be many questions that the industry would want to know about.

Mr. Buckley told me that through the offices of this newly formed East Texas Refiners' Association, they wanted Mr. Buckley to find ways of contacting the large buyers so that they would find a market for their distress product. I told Mr. Buckley what the East Texas refiners would have to do, in obeying the orders of the Code Authority in regard to allocations. I told Mr. Buckley that there was one fundamental thing that he would have to consider, and that undoubtedly he would be called upon to explain to anybody that he talked to, and that was to overcome the prejudices and the marked doubt as to whether these refiners were really coming in under the Code authority and would carry on proper trade practices under the Code; would submit to allocations and keep themselves within those allocations, running legitimate crude, and purchasing only legitimate gasoline.

Mr. Buckley arrived in the morning, shortly after

At that time I knew that the hot oil situation in Texa was one of the most demoralizing things we had had in th industry. Hot gasoline from East Texas had gone into th Mid-Continent fields; had found its way into the southeas ern field; had gone into the eastern markets, and being produced, as it was, from illegitimate, or hot crude, at les than $1 a barrel, it made possible the sale of gasoline a substantially lower prices than the price at which those wh were running legitimate crude at $1 a barrel could sel their gasoline; and was precipitating price wars and general demoralization in all of these markets.

I told Mr. Buckley before he left, that I was stabilizer for the industry, and I assumed that my responsibility was to deal with every phase of the industry, even including East Texas; that while there were a great many doubts that would have to be settled, I would interest myself in what he had said to me, and if I could be of any service, I most assuredly would; that I would like an opportunity to think the matter over further, and when I returned to either Washington or New York I would further communicate with him.

I saw Mr. Buckley again, as I recall it, on February 25 or 26, in Chicago. I had told him that there would be 3204 a meeting on Texas stabilization matters, and there would be a fair number of people there, and he could come if he wished and in his own way tell the same story to those people that he had told to me. I had called the meeting in Chicago because in those extraordinarily busy days Chicago was recognized as a central point for those coming from the far west, from the east, and from Texas. Those were days when it was very difficult to get men from New York to Texas, and the meeting had to do with the chief executives of marketing of the companies that were located in Texas, in the far west, or in New York.

My original idea was that Mr. Buckley would talk to the group the early part of the first day's meeting. In my letter to Fahy, Exhibit 969, I referred to the meetings I was holding in Chicago on February 25 and 26. Mr. Buckley came there on the 25th. He was not at the meeting except when I invited him in.

I decided before calling the meeting that the matters in relation to Texas were considerable in importance and in size; that there was a likelihood that they might take a good part of the two days. In consequence of that, I informed Mr. Buckley I was going to hold the meeting with the Texas people and that I would let him know later when he could come in and address the group. I took up the Texas marketing matters at the opening of the 3205 meeting. Toward the latter part of the meeting I asked Mr. Buckley to come in after I had told the group what he was to come in for.

Mr. Buckley addressed the meeting. He said what he had said to me in Pinehurst. He added to that that I had raised a great many questions, and that he was hopeful that if the gentlemen present had the same questions, he could satisfy them as to the sincerity of the East Texas Refiners' Association and its members. Very few questions were asked.

I am not sure that I can remember all who were present at that meeting. It wasn't a very large meeting. There were present: Gulf Refining Company, Mr. Hartman; Magnolia Oil Company of Texas, Mr. Legge, who not only was representative of Socony-Vacuum but was the Planning and Coordination Committee Chairman for marketing for Texas; Mr. Dyer, who was his assistant in the Code work, and I believe eventually became his successor; Mr. Wright, of The Texas Company, from the western division of that company; later on in the day, Mr. Leach, of The Texas Company, who came from Texas; Mr. Carlisle, of Gulf Refining Company of Texas; Mr. Carnes, from New York, of Sinclair Oil Refining Company.

Mr. McDowell was not in the meeting. Mr. McDowell reported to me his presence in Chicago, and was await-3206 ing a conference with me on another matter. I might add that for a very short time, probably less than half an hour, Mr. Majewski and Mr. Ashton came in; but, as neither of those gentlemen were interested in Texas, they left. They were not there when Buckley talked.

After Mr. Buckley finished his statement there were very few questions during his presence. There was very little discussion after he left. There was almost unanimity in the expressions that they had no confidence in the East Texas refiners. All of these men, as you can see, were operators in marketing in Texas. They had lived a long and strenuous life, and had been the competitors of the bad practices of the East Texas refiners; and without hesitation they said on this occasion that they had no confidence that they were going to be any better in the future than they had been in the past, and so far as they were concerned, they didn't think they had much to say about it. After Mr. Buckley left, we proceeded with the meeting.

I saw Mr. Buckley again in Chicago later on that day. Mr. Buckley felt that his contact with this group hadn't been very encouraging. However, he stated that he had been accompanied to Chicago by Mr. May and Mr. Grogan, two members of the Association, and two independent refiners in East Texas; that these gentlemen were very 3207 anxious to talk with me, only for the purpose of meeting me and adding to what Mr. Buckley himself had said as to the seriousness of their situation, and their desire to cooperate with the industry. I informed him that the meeting was in progress and I didn't know whether I would be able to meet him that day, but would let him know later on.

I saw Mr. May and Mr. Grogan the following day and had a short conversation with them about the East Texas matter. It was more or less a reiteration of what Mr. Buckley had said. They obviously were worried, and hoped that they would find in me some assistance. They said that they knew how the industry felt toward them, but that they would be willing to do what they could to show that they were going to do all the things that they should do; that they were stopping their interest in hot oil, they would try to be legitimate marketers, and they sincerely trusted that I would do anything I could to assist Mr. Buckley in what he was trying to do for them.

Later on I had another conversation with Mr. Buckley in Chicago. Something was said to him about future conferences and something further I expected him to do. The meeting when I saw him was February 26th, at which time I told him that I might get in contact with him later; and later, before March 6th, I did get in contact with 3208 him.

I sent a telegram in which I asked those to whom I sent it to meet at the Waldorf in New York, on March 6, to hear the outcome of my meeting with the East Texas refiners, and to consider further action on surplus gasoline. I believe I remember to whom I sent those telegrams, approximately. There was Sun Oil Company, American Oil Company, Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, Sinclair Refining Company, Gulf Refining Company, Tide Water Oil Company, Pan-American Oil Company, Continental Oil Company, Pure Oil Company, Richfield Oil Company, Cities Service, Atlantic Refining Company and Shell Company

I sent a telegram similar to Exhibit 488 to these various companies or individuals of those companies that I have just referred to.

The Texas Company was on the list, but not the Standard of Indiana. I am not positive about that list, but I am willing to say that that was a list that presumably covered this type of refiner.

I have attended a great many meetings, and it is not always easy to be accurate, but, not in the same rotation. I remember Mr. Eckert of Sun Company. He is not a defendant in this case. Mr. Hartmann of Gulf Company, a defendant in this case, but not on trial. Mr. Gould of Shell Oil Refining Company; it is a defendant 3209 but Mr. Gould is not. We must make a distinction; there are different Shell Companies, and this gentleman was a representative of that company which operates on the Eastern Seaboard, whatever its correct name is, that I can't give you at the moment; but nothing to do with the same company that at that time operated in the Mid-Continent. It was not the parent company of the Mid-Continent Company. There are two or three companies. It takes better than a lawyer to keep them apart. I can't.

Mr. Stone of Atlantic Refining Company—neither Mr. Stone nor Atlantic Refining Company is a defendant in this case. Mr. Fritz Ewing of Socony-Vacuum. He is not a defendant in this case. I am not sure about this, but I think Mr. Collins of Tide Water. He is not, as I understand it, a defendant in this case. Mr. Frueauff of Cities Service—and again, I am not certain, but I think he was. I can't remember about The Pure Oil Company, who was there, because they had various representatives at various times, and I can't remember who. I think there was someone but I won't be sure.

Mr. Carnes of Sinclair Oil Refining Company. Mr. Burns, I believe, of Richfield Oil Company. Mr. Burns is not a defendant in this case nor is Richfield Oil Company. I probably sent a telegram to Mr. Stone as representing Atlantic Refining Company. They are not 3210 defendants in this case. Frueauff and Carnes are.

I mentioned Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, but I do not remember anybody of the Jersey Company being there. Standard Oil of New Jersey is not a defendant in this case. Mr. Blaustein of American Oil Company, I think, was there. I think it is Jacob Blaustein. They are not defendants in this case. I think Mr. Hatmaker of Pan-American Oil Company was there. They are not defendants in this case.

Those are, as I remember it, the men that I invited; and as nearly as I can recall, I have mentioned those that were there, but there is an uncertainty in my mind about some of them. I invited Mr. Dodge from Texas and there is confusion in my mind, but I think Mr. Dodge was there for a very brief time, probably an hour or less. As I recall, he had been very ill for one thing, and while I am not clear on it, I think he was there for a very short time and left.

All of these companies that I have named were companies that were particularly active on the Eastern Seaboard, and they were not companies that I invited there for any consideration in connection with the Mid-Continent. There were a great many major companies operating in the Mid-Continent that I did not invite to that meeting. Standard Oil Company of Indiana, Mid-Continent Petroleum Company, Shell Company that oper-
3211 ates out here, Phillips Petroleum Company, Skelly
Oil Company, Continental Oil Company, Barnsdall, Globe, Deep Rock, the local divisional operations of Socony-Vacuum, Standard of Ohio, Ohio Oil Company, Marathon Oil Company, Empire Oil—I might think of a few others. The companies that I have just recited were majors with two exceptions, Deep Rock and Globe.

The first names listed were people to whom I sent telegrams or representatives of companies to which I had sent telegrams. I said the companies like The Pure, I wouldn't be sure who it was sent to. So far as I can remember most of those individuals that I have named were present in the meeting, but I am not sure about it.

The purpose of that meeting was to bring in these gentlemen, and have them directly hear what Mr. Buckley had to say. I didn't invite all the other major companies because I had in the eastern activities of companies brought in the men who had been particularly interested in what Mr. Buckley had to say in regard to East Texas gasoline. The normal market, in explanation of that, for East Texas gasoline is Texas, the eastern seaboard and the Gulf. These gentlemen were all interested, as buyers and as users of gasoline, in that Texas gasoline. Mid-Continent refiners have no interest in that product, normally. The only place that there had ever been for
was the result of illegitimate or hot gasoline that during these demoralized situations had abnormally come into this territory. In other words, to talk to the normal people that would be interested about the East Texas refiners' sales activities and their surplus gasoline, because those were the refiners in the market where that gasoline normally belonged, and those were the refiners that were in the East and they were there that day.

I don't remember the name of the man in Continental invited to attend. As a matter of fact, I am a little hazy about Continental, and there again, they didn't come to very many meetings. I don't know to whom it had been sent. Like the case of Pure Oil, with Continental I think I would address it to the company because they were not as clearly in my mind because it was not usually represented in meetings of that kind.

Mr. O. D. Robinson, president of Republic Oil Company, an independent refiner, had taken up that gulf situation with me. Neither Mr. Robinson nor Republic Oil Company is a defendant in this case.

I know Mr. Mike Benedum. He was connected with Republic Oil Company in the sense that he is the principal stockholder, if not the entire one. He was a 3213 member of the Planning and Coordination Committee. He was not one of the industry representatives. He was one of the three representatives appointed by the President to represent the interests of the Government. The other two were Mr. James Moffett and Mr. Richberg. All the members of the Planning and Coordination Committee were appointed by the President, but these three represented the interests of the Government.

When Mr. O. D. Robinson talked with me before this meeting, he stated that he had come to me in his own behalf and in behalf of the independent refiners in Texas and on the Gulf who were in distress; that due to the price wars, subnormal levels, and below cost selling of gasoline, they had reached the point where they couldn't afford to continue even selling their gasoline; that they did feel that they would have to go on and store this gasoline with the hope that something might improve the situation; that already they had stored some 8 to 12 cargoes among them. That they had met on several occasions in order to find out if there was anything they could do, and at one of the very recent meetings it had been recommended that he act as spokesman and contact with me, and also by the recommendation of Mr. Benedum, he had come to tell me what their situation was in the hope that I could give him some advice and help.

3214 Storage on the Gulf is different than elsewhere. The difference is that these independent refiners on the Gulf coast are a little more substantial than most of the independent refiners in the Mid-Continent; they are larger and their resources are larger. They are more established in the retail marketing. They cover a larger territory, in that they ship cargoes to the bulk terminals on the Eastern coast, and they are more firmly entrenched in the industry's marketing activities. However, there is a limit to what even they can do, but they are somewhat more substantial and have larger facilities than the small independent refiner in the Mid-Continent. It is obvious that it is necessary that they have storage in order to provide their trade which is very largely in cargoes to the Eastern seaboard. They accumulate gasoline as they currently make it, and endeavor to ship it to the eastern seaboard bulk terminals, and then when they reach the point where that is overcrowded, they are in very serious difficulty. They have to store the gasoline as it comes until they get a full cargo. I think one of those cargoes holds 375 to 400 cars. A car has 200 barrels approximately, which gives you the number of barrels that a cargo will have.

I had a talk with O. D. Robinson as to the activ-3215 ities of the Gulf coast in connection with the Code. I reviewed with Mr. Robinson the fact that the Gulf coast independent refiners had not been over-cooperative in observing the Code. They had not, in their sales practices, been very constructive. I recognized that they had surplus gasoline, and that it was necessary for them to dispose of it, but that they simply had little regard for the manner in which they dumped that gasoline up and down the Eastern seaboard; and brokers had been very active in selling this gasoline below cost at distress prices. In other words, they had contributed to the demoralization in the markets their product was offered in.

I took up with Mr. Robinson in a general way the question of refinery allocation. I didn't especially go into that, except to inquire from him what they were doing. From what he said, they hadn't been very cooperative. He explained this was by necessity.

The only further communication I had with Mr. Robinson between the time he came to see me in January and this meeting on March 6th in New York was to invite him to the meeting and state that if he desired to do so, it would be an opportunity for him to tell the group what he had said to me. I also invited Mr. Buckley for the same purpose to attend the same meeting. Both 3216 Mr. Buckley and Mr. Robinson were at the meeting on March 6th.

I regarded the meeting as of extreme importance, as referred to in the telegram, Exhibit 482. I regarded anything that had to do with the East Texas refiner, who had been one of the most demoralizing influences in the markets of this country, who had ignored state and federal laws, and who had disregarded the allocations and violated the Code, through below cost selling, and all that, as of outstanding importance, particularly when a representative of that group was making the offer of sincerity and cooperation as explained by Mr. Buckley. I assumed this industry ought to hear that and deal with it.

At the meeting of March 6th I briefly addressed the group, telling them that I knew what the East Texas refiners had done and how non-cooperative they had been with the Administrative Board, the Planning and Coordination Committee, and in respect to stabilization; that I knew that there were strong prejudices as to their sincerity and even their honesty; however, that I had received a visit from a Mr. Buckley, who was not known to very many of them, as he was not known to me until I met him; and that I assumed it was my duty to have Mr. Buckley address them, so that they could see what 3217 could be done to bring about an improvement in the situation. I felt it ought to be considered.

I made the same address to them in regard to the Gulf group, telling them that O. D. Robinson had come to me as a representative of that group; that I had not known Mr. Robinson before that occasion, and likewise that that was an important group that influenced many markets that they were interested in, and that likewise I thought he ought to be heard.

I told them that the purpose of both of these men was to try to find buyers for the gasoline of their group. We then invited Mr. Buckley and Mr. Robinson to come into the meeting. Mr. Buckley said more or less the same thing as he had said in Pinehurst and Chicago. Mr. Robinson more or less repeated what he had said to me about the distress of his group, and what to him was very important, the accumulation of gasoline in storage that I have mentioned.

After that had been done, there were a number of questions that these men would naturally ask who had, based on past experience, little confidence as to the real sincerity of the East Texas refiners. After these questions had been asked, I suggested that both of these gentlemen withdraw, that we might want them to return, which they did.

In answer to one of the questions that the group 3218 asked, O. D. Robinson mentioned these eight or ten cargoes that had been accumulated in storage. He further stated that they would undoubtedly have for the next 4 months surplus gasoline of 2 or 3 cargoes per month.

They were without prospective buyers, and if forced to sell these 20 or 22 cargoes, they would have to sell materially below their cost, and that was something that they just could not face.

In answer to some inquiry Mr. Buckley was unable to give any definite information and said that he did not know how much surplus East Texas refiners would have. He mentioned a few figures, but they were not given much attention because he admitted that he did not know.

Then Mr. O. D. Robinson and Mr. Buckley withdrew from the meeting. After they left there was general discussion in the meeting as to what Mr. Buckley had said. It was always a question in the minds of those gentlemen as to whether this very important change had really come to this East Texas group. There were those who felt that the matter ought to be looked into further. There were those who felt that there was a great deal of justification to seeing what could be done to assist them; and there were those that definitely said they had no confidence in this presentation of Mr. Buckley, and as far as they were con-3219 cerned, would have nothing to do with it. So the opinion ran altogether from the complete negative to that of those who felt that it ought to be dealt with constructively.

There were a great many questions of quantities raised in the course of the discussion. There was the serious question as to what was the quantity that these refiners were going to be authorized to produce under allocation at their refineries. It was the natural inquiry from those at the meeting, to want to know what was involved. In response to the inquiries in regard to it, O. D. Robinson was clear as to the quantities of gasoline that had been accumulated. He also said what they expected to produce as surplus. But he didn't seem to be very clear or give a clear statement as to whether that so-called surplus was going to be within the allocations. And Mr. Buckley seemed to have very little information as regards to quantities; and when it came to what they were going to produce within the allocations, he, again, wasn't very certain, because he didn't know what the allocators were going to give this group, and so there wasn't very much in the way of reliable information for the group to consider.

As a result of that discussion, I called attention to the fact that in about another week there was going to be a general allocators' meeting in Washington in which 3220 all the field or district allocators, including the allocator from East Texas, would be present.

The allocators' meeting, which was part of the Planning and Coordination Committee's organization, was to deal with the national allocation sent by the Government. It is divided by regions for the purpose of balancing the demand of gasoline in each and all of those regions with the production allowable of those regions. When these district allocators come to this meeting, they come with information as to what each refiner in their particular district claims is going to be his individual demand. And so the allocator from East Texas, to illustrate, would go to this particular meeting in March and have before him the quantity of gasoline that each of these refiners in that district said that he would like to have the privilege of manufacturing. It was to that meeting that there was reference in the discussion following the talk by Mr. Buckley and Mr. Robinson.

The group felt that they could not get anything very reliable at that time from these gentlemen, because there was not only the question of the quantity of legitimate gasoline that the allocators would authorize them to manufacture; but the question also as to what was going to be the attitude of the allocators in connection with the hot oil that 3221 these refiners had been running. Were they going to give them allocations that would legitimize or approve in quantity what they had been running in hot oil? Or was it going to be something less than that? So there were many questions that had to be settled; and the allocators, whose responsibility it was to do that, were the people that this group felt they would want to talk with.

So a committee was formed to go to Washington with me to meet the allocators; if they would see us, to lay this matter before them, and also have present at that meeting Mr. Buckley and Mr. O. D. Robinson, to tell the allocators just what they had told us.

I appointed that committee. The members of the committee were Mr. Fritz Ewing of Socony-Vacuum, the chairman, Mr. Gould of the Shell Company, Mr. Hartmann of Gulf Refining Company, Mr. Eckert of Sun Company, and Mr. Carnes of Sinclair Oil Refining Company. Mr. Carnes and Mr. Hartmann are defendants here. Mr. Ewing, Mr. Eckert and Mr. Gould are not defendants.

We went to Washington after the Waldorf meeting of March 6, which I have just described. The district allocators' meeting was on March 13th. I was in Washington on the day before that, the 12th. On that day I had a talk with Mr. Fahy, Chairman of the Petroleum Administrative Board. I told him of the East Texas situa-3222 tion as it had been developed and as I have just described it. Mention was made of the fact that the committee and I were meeting with the district allocators on the following day.

The committee and I attended the district allocators' meeting of March 13th. All the committee was there but one member, Mr. Eckert. Mr. Buckley and Mr. Robinson also attended.

I think Exhibit 69 for identification is a copy of the minutes of what occurred at that meeting.

(Transcript of minutes referred to is received in evidence as EXHIBIT 69.)

I have read that transcript. The words are hardly recognizable in all instances, so far as my comments are concerned. I am not so definite that I can recite what everybody said at the meeting, but in the main I think it is accurate.

After that meeting of the district allocators, I called a meeting for New York for March 15th.

(Documents previously marked for identification are received in evidence as EXHIBITS 331 and 332, respectively.)

Exhibit 331 is a telegram that I sent to Mr. Dodge of Texas Company. I also sent Exhibit 332. That simply changed the time of the meeting.

3223 (Exhibits 331 and 332 were read to the jury by Mr. Donovan.)

As I recall it, I sent similar telegrams to other gentlemen who had been invited to the meeting of March 6th in New York. With few exceptions, I would say that the same group, substantially, attended the meeting on March 15th as attended the meeting on March 6th.

The surplus gasoline referred to in the telegram, Exhibit 331, is the gasoline that we had been talking about with Messrs. Buckley and Robinson, which they had spoken of to the group when they had met with them in Chicago, in New York, on March 6th, and at the allocators' meeting. By the statement in that telegram that this question must be finalized, I meant that here were spokesmen for these two groups who had come to us, one in the previous January, a month and a half before, and the other in early February, a month before; and who at that time had stated their serious condition, and had asked for whatever assistance the industry could give them and that I felt we had reached the time when something ought to be said to them as to whether anybody was interested because it was a serious matter, and they had to have some idea of what to look forward to.

I recall some such memorandum as that Mr. Buckley mentioned as submitted to the meeting by Mr. Carnes.

After the allocators' meeting, I went to my office 3224 in Washington. Shortly thereafter, the different members of the New York Committee that had gone to Washington with me drifted in, sat around, and some one or all roughly put down some figures as to the information that had come out of the allocators' meeting. Mention was made of the companies who were regular buyers of East Texas and Gulf Coast gasoline, and their names were put down merely to see, as they said, what it would look like if all buyers of gasoline were to consider this surplus gasoline represented by the figures that had come out of the allocators' meeting.

One of the members of the committee, Mr. Gould of Shell Oil Company, definitely said that he would not have anything to do with it because of his lack of faith in these refiners in Texas. None of them said they would. There was no comment of that sort, wasn't even any discussion about it.

I don't think all of the committee that was present at the allocators' meeting were at the meeting on March 15th. Those who were there told the general meeting what had occurred at the session of the district allocators at Washington. Then there was a general discussion of it. Someone, I don't remember who, but I do recall that when Mr. Buckley was on the stand he said he believed it was Mr.
Carnes, it may well have been, although personally 3225 I don't remember that, looked at this memorandum that had come out of this figuring in Washington, and stated this would be the picture of the quantity of surplus gasoline, and this was what it would look like if all the known buyers of gasoline were all to take a part of it. Nobody at that meeting made any reference to being individually interested in buying this gasoline.

After the meeting I had a conversation with Mr. Buckley. I was leaving the meeting room, and Mr. Buckley came up and thanked me for my consideration and courtesy, stated he felt quite discouraged that he had nothing to encourage him, that he felt that the attitude of those that he had talked to was not a friendly one, even after he had made his best endeavor to win interest and regard to these East Texas refiners, that he felt that his mission hadn't been very successful, and that he was returning to East Texas with very little. I told him I could appreciate the way he felt, that I could understand why there had not been any friendly response to what he had said. On the other hand, that I knew these men were all cooperative men. There were some stabilizers in the group who understood conditions. And I told him that I wouldn't advise him to be discouraged, that I thought it would be wise for him to keep up his courage because I thought he was trying 3226 to do the right thing, and that probably these men would give it further consideration, and something might come out of it.

I next saw Mr. Buckley when I was in Washington on March 20th to attend stabilization meetings of the Planning and Coordination Committee. I saw Mr. Buckley at that time for a very few minutes and had a short talk with him. He told me that he was still moving around to see if he could accomplish anything, but he was on his way to Texas, and asked me how I felt about it. I told him that I thought there was some promise. I told him that companies like Sinclair Company were large purchasers of gasoline in Texas, and I knew Mr. Carnes was a very cooperative, constructive gentleman, and that probably he might get some orders from Sinclair Oil Company. I didn't know, but I thought that he would. I felt personally justified in thinking that if Mr. Carnes thought they were all he represented, there was no reason why he wouldn't favorably consider him.

I remember telling him that Gulf Refining Company were likewise very substantial buyers of East Texas gasoline, and I didn't see any reason why Gulf might not be interested in gasoline, if they felt that the reliability of these refiners had been established. I heard somewhere, I 3227 can't tell where, that Cities Service was about to put in some orders, and with those things in mind, I felt that probably with the sincerity of the East Texas Refiners Association, and it was very sincere, and I felt that with the able way that Mr. Buckley was trying to represent their interests, there would be an interest in those refiners in the East Texas Association.

In Washington on March 20 I had a very short talk with Mr. Hartmann of Gulf about the possibility of buying. It was very general. It was along the line that Gulf Refining Company were large buyers and that they had heard of what Mr. Buckley was trying to do. Certainly if the East Texas refiners had come in in a cooperative way and were complying with the Code and stabilization, we felt they had eliminated the use of hot or illegitimate crude, it would be well worth the consideration of Gulf Refining Company. Mr. Hartman said it was worth thinking about, assisting these East Texas refiners if they were going to be cooperative. They had been great disturbers, and this was an important thing; if they were to discontinue their methods, he would be interested in supporting what they were trying to do.

I accidentally met Mr. Buckley as I was going from one room to another. I don't know why he was 3228 there, I think he was talking to somebody else or hoped to talk to somebody else.

I don't recall having any further contact with Mr. Buckley before Excelsior Springs in early April, 1935. He mentioned that he had been carrying on this work to get buyers for this Association and that there had been some development, but he didn't see very much. He said something about leaving the work at that time. He said that he had been giving a great deal of his time to this matter of the East Texas Refiners' Association, that, in fact, he had been compelled to neglect his duty with his own company, Cities Service Export Oil Company. And that he felt he had reached the time that he would have to give up this work and devote his time to his own job.

I did feel it was important that Mr. Buckley remain in this work because he had demonstrated himself as a very serious-minded, sincere and conscientious gentleman. I had observed that he had really tried to do the job he had agreed to do when he took up the cause of the East Texas Refiners. It probably was one of the meanest jobs that a man could have been called upon to do, having in mind the attitude of the entire industry towards those independent refineries, and I felt that he had gained the respect of all elements in the industry 3229 including the major companies that he had had contact with. And it was evident that the independent refiner, himself, highly regarded Mr. Buckley; and that was a very important and unusual thing. And that he had been a distinct value in the work that he was doing to bring that sort of understanding and stabilization into the East Texas situation.

As I recall it, I was in Excelsior Springs in April, 1935, for a meeting of one of the large trade associations. I think it was the Western Petroleum Refiners' Association. Mr. Buckley came up from East Texas. We met in the corridor casually.

I think the reference in Exhibit 18 to our conversation might well be the conversation I had with Mr. Buckley at Excelsior Springs. I never recall any suggestion by him of the name of his successor. I know of no reason why he should take it up with me who his successor should be, excepting Mr. Buckley did talk with me and ask my advice at times. He wrote me a letter in the middle of April saying he would have to give up the work.

Mr. Buckley had mentioned, at Excelsior Springs and on other occasions, the subject referred to in paragraphs two and three of Exhibit 18.

I have no recollection of what companies Mr. Buckley had in mind in the letter, Exhibit 18. I did make 3230 efforts of the nature referred to in that letter. I have no recollection of the date or time or with whom, but I remember the principle which was involved in here which he talked to me about. It was the principle that these refiners needed markets for their gasoline as it was produced and the fact that buyers of this gasoline, regardless of who or how large they were, seemingly gave little thought as to how or when they placed their orders; and the thought was that if these buyers who would and did eventually buy the gasoline any way would have regard for a little more orderly, systematic buying, it would very much contribute to the assistance of these refiners.

Mr. McDowell was at the January 5 meeting, and then he came back to report to me. Those were the only two meetings at which I saw him.

Exhibit 369 is the telegram that I sent to Mr. Carnes. When I sent that telegram I was on my way to Atlanta, Georgia in connection with demoralizing price wars that were raging through the southeast. Mr. Carnes was a member of our Stabilization Committee and I expected him to go down there. The statement in that telegram refers to the conversation I had with Mr. Buckley at Excelsior Springs. By the statement "Necessary you, he and I go over program together", I meant that it was not at all out of the way for Mr. Buckley, and 3231 I had in mind that if he was going to retire it would be desirable that he tell us what he had in mind about the East Texas Refiners' Association carrying on. I thought it would be of profit to all of us to sit down and hear what Mr. Buckley had to say, and to get his information.

I cannot say that I knew definitely what effect Mr. Buckley's withdrawal might have on the ability of the East Texas refiners to secure purchasers at the seaboard. I would say that I thought it might have an adverse effect. The plan that I had in mind that I referred to in my telegram was to listen to what Mr. Buckley had to say, and to find out how these refiners were going to continue. I also had in mind the reference in Mr. Buckley's letter to Mr. Brandli that it was desirable to convince buyers to do buying on a less hand-to-mouth basis. That had always been one of the things that Mr. Buckley was always urging upon us, and up to this time unsuccessfully.

In this telegram I asked Mr. Carnes to bring the records with him. Mr. Carnes had a very close contact with the companies in Texas; he had a very expert representative there, Mr. Tracey, and I felt that he would have very close and good information of what was transpiring. The industry recognized that Sinclair Oil 3232 Refining Company is very expert and very capable in up-to-date figures as to facts that extend throughout the territory.

Mr. Buckley did not come to Atlanta.

Mr. Buckley had said that he wanted to have a talk, if he had an opportunity again, and had written me, and then I had told him in response that if there was any meeting that would be called in which the group he wanted to contact with would be present, I would let him know. Mr. Buckley did see me in my office in New York on May 27th.

After Mr. Buckley had come in to see me that morning I had a talk with Mr. Coates. Mr. Coates was the president of Cities Service Export Company with whom Mr. Buckley worked. Mr. Coates was also a member of the Planning and Coordination Committee in Washington. That is the Coates that is a defendant in this case. That conversation with Mr. Coates was to express to him the appreciation in my own behalf and in behalf of the industry for what we felt was the fine, sincere and good work that Mr. Buckley had done while he was representing and speaking for the East Texas Refiners Association. At my office Mr. Buckley had resigned, or told me he had resigned the work he was doing for the East Texas Refiners Association, and this was my way of expressing myself for the industry to Mr. Coates and his com-3233 pany which I did, and we all thought it was generous in sparing Mr. Buckley for this work. Mr. Coates expressed his appreciation and was glad to know that Mr. Buckley had been so helpful.

I do not recall that at that time he said anything about being willing to let Mr. Buckley continue in this work.

Another event on that day was the decision of the Supreme Court in the Schechter case that made unconstitutional the N. I. R. A. under which our Code was approved and had been operating.

I saw Mr. Buckley at a meeting on May 29th. That was a meeting that I had in New York, and it was a meeting I had invited Mr. Buckley to, that I referred to formerly, at which he said he would like to be present and say a few words. A fairly large group of major company representatives were present. It was more or less the same group I have mentioned before. He made a few brief remarks at the meeting.

The discussion at that meeting was in connection with the decision that had been made by the Supreme Court, abolishing the Code; and it was a meeting in which there was general comment and talk of what had transpired, and the fact that the industry didn't have any Code for guidance or anything by which it could cooperate. I remember making a statement at that meeting, in me and saying in substance, "Well, Arnott, you are an ex-stabilizer." My reply was this. At the time of the beginning of the Code our industry was in a terribly demoralized condition; we had worked for a Code and with a Code, and a great deal of benefit and understanding had come from it. This decision of the Supreme Court had suddenly left us without anything; no Code; no stabilization; nothing with which the industry could work cooperatively and constructively together. That I, as far as I was concerned, felt that I was going on, and I was going to observe the good practices, and all those things that the Code had brought to us; and whether we had a Code or whether we had stabilization, as far as I was concerned, in my viewpoint and in my activities I was going to be more of a stabilizer than ever.

I may have seen Mr. Buckley in New York after May 29th. I haven't at the moment a clear recollection as to that. I remember having seen him once or twice outside of New York. I saw him in Los Angeles and had a talk with him there. As I remember, it was in November, 1935 on the occasion of the yearly convention of the American Petroleum Institute.

Mr. Buckley approached me; said he was up there for a few days; that before leaving he had heard from 3235 some of the East Texas refiners that several of them were in very desperate plight for need of orders, and he asked me whether there was anybody that I thought would help out, and whether I could give him any help. I told him that I didn't know but would gladly see what I could do.

I communicated there with several of the larger buyers that I thought might be willing to render assistance. I couldn't tell you whether my company bought. I don't recall any buyers that I talked with on that occasion. I would say major companies of the same general group we have in this case.

I remember being in New Orleans in January, 1936. I was there in connection with the proposed Federal Trade Commission Code of the Independent Refiners.

I sent Exhibit 35, a telegram to Harry Frueauff, Cities Service Company, 60 Wall Street, New York City. I sent it because Mr. Buckley had on that day telephoned me from Tulsa. It was in reference to the same thing, that there was need of some orders for several of these refiners, and he wanted to know if I could help. As I recall it, he mentioned that there was a possibility of Cities Service, at that time, and one or two others, being in the market for gasoline, and I sent this telegram. I never knew whether Cities Service did actually buy.

3236 As to what I meant then by stating, "East Texas situation needs prompt handling in order to keep in line"—I testified that the East Texas refiners produced gasoline in those individuals' plants currently. Most of them had a surplus, and it was most essential that that surplus reach the market shortly after its production. If those refiners didn't have orders for that surplus, their alternative, and the thing they usually had to do, was to dump it in the market, at any price that they could get for it. When I sent that telegram it was based on what Mr. Buckley reported to me, that in the case of those few refiners they were just in that situation, that if they couldn't have in a more normal way these orders, they would have to seek a place for them at any price they could get. I sent the telegram in January, 1936 because I felt that that would be destructive to the interests of everybody, and it was the proper thing for anybody to do to help.

On December 18, 1934, I had occasion to review with Messrs. Frey and Fahy, members of the Petroleum Administrative Board the progress that had been made at a series of stabilization meetings in Chicago in the first part of December, in restoring prices in retail markets.

3237 I had had contact with this Board ever since the beginning of the Code in September, 1933. I explained to them on December 18th what we had done in regard to the restoration of retail markets in the December meetings. I covered the matter of those thousand points that we had put up to normal, those that had gone part of the way, and those that we had up to that time been unable to meet at all; and I told him that, to follow this up, we were planning another meeting in the very near future, and that eventually was the January 4th meeting.

My next conference with members of the Petroleum Administrative Board on any phase of my work was on January 8th and 9th, with Messrs. Myers and Marshall.

In January I also had a communication with Mr. Fahy. I was holding an important stabilization meeting in New York, and I had invited Mr. Fahy to attend that meeting. I am not sure what date; it might have been January 7th or 8th. Mr. Fahy communicated with me and said that something had developed, and he could not come.

I know Mr. O'Shaughnessy. I had appointed him a member of the McDowell Committee. He represented the Mid-Continent independent refiner on the P. and C. Committee.

I believe the Committee to which Mr. O'Shaughnessy 3238 referred in his telegram to Mr. Fahy, Exhibit 893, was the committee on which I had appointed him with Mr. McDowell.

Mr. O'Shaughnessy was quite right in his statement that the lack of parity between a dollar crude and refinery prices for gasoline was threatening to break down the results we had been securing in stabilizing the retail market.

The decision referred to in Mr. O'Shaughnessy's telegram was the decision of the Supreme Court in connection with the Panama case, which brought about the discontinuance of the control by the Tender Board of illegitimate crude and products, in interstate commerce. And that resulted in uncontrolled shipment of hot gasoline into the Mid-Continent territory; and that, as has been stated, was a demoralizing destroyer of markets, and had caused a great deal of distress in the industry, especially to the Mid-Continent independent refiner.

The portion of the letter of Mr. Fahy to Mr. O'Shaughnessy, Exhibit 894, which reads this way: "I am sure you know that the tank car situation in relation to the price of crude is one about which we have no disagreement", was in accord with my understanding of the attitude of the Oil Administration. I knew what that attitude was because the matter of parity between crude oil and the realization at the refinery for gasoline was a subject that the Plan-3239 ning and Coordination Committee and the Petroleum Administrative Board and the Secretary himself had labored with from the first days of the Code; and it was an outstanding problem, that had repeated consideration, and had been before the industry from the first. It had been a problem that had not been successfully met up to that time.

The reference in Mr. Fahy's letter to a report of a special committee which the Secretary had appointed "to look into this kind of thing and make recommendations," was to the Blazer report. That report was made by the Blazer Committee which was appointed by the Secretary.

During the latter part of January and the forepart of February, 1935, I was at Pinehurst. After I returned from Pinehurst, I wrote a letter to Mr. Fahy.

(Letter referred to is received in evidence as EXHIBIT 969, and read to the jury by Mr. Donovan.)

The meetings in Chicago and Kansas City I referred to in that letter were the Chicago meetings of February 25th and 26th, and the meeting in Kansas City on March 1st.

Mr. Fahy at that time was chairman of the Petroleum Administrative Board. I remember what the Rhode Island matter was that is referred to in my letter to Mr. Fahy.

I wrote that letter because I wanted the Petroleum 3240 Administrative Board to know what I was doing in connection with this matter of distress gasoline that was such an important factor in the restoration of markets, which had been a matter of conversation between us and was the objective we were working for. When I say "between us", I mean the members of the Administrative Board and the Secretary and myself.

I remember that at the time I was in Chicago on February 25th, I saw Dr. Frey of the Petroleum Administrative Board. Dr. Frey was passing through Chicago. I think I was in the meeting that I have spoken of in connection with Texas State stabilization matters. He sent word to me that he was there; I saw him; told him what was transpiring at the meeting, that it was a meeting where there was some airing of difficulties between the Texas state operators and those outside; asked him whether he thought it would be wise to come in, having in mind this was for the purpose of bringing free expression on the part of these gentlemen, to which he replied that he did not think it was. I told him of the developments of Mr. Buckley, and that Mr. Buckley was going to appear there that day and tell the group what he had already told me, and also gave him some particulars of the Mid-Continent developments, both of which I have testified to here.

3241 I believe it was March 12th in Washington that I next saw any members of the Petroleum Administrative Board. Mr. Fahy and Dr. Frey were present at that meeting. I am not sure about Mr. Swanson. I have no recollection of anyone else.

In the March 12th meeting I told these gentlemen of what had transpired in regard to the retail development and in regard to the report that the McDowell committee had made to me.

Before I made that statement, when I came into the meeting, Mr. Fahy said to me that he was glad to see me; that on the return from Chicago of Dr. Frey, Dr. Frey had informed him of what I had told Dr. Frey there about the Mid-Continent and East Texas developments; that he was quite interested, wanted to help, and asked whether there was anything in this that was not in line with the letter of July 20th concerning the anti-trust laws.

I replied to that by just what I have stated. I gave him the full picture of the Mid-Continent development, the report of the McDowell committee, what Mr. Buckley had said and done, and I further gave him a general outline of the allocators' meeting. I said in substance about what I said at the allocator's meeting. Mr. Fahy expressed him-3242 self as being very interested and said he would be glad to know how things came along.

It did not occur to me to ask for any approval. What I described to Mr. Fahy I thought was an informal cooperative plan. Apparently Mr. Fahy thought so too. He did not say anything about approval. It would seem to me that if he had anything to say he would have said it.

My state of mind when I left that meeting was that I had fully told those gentlemen of the plan, and that both Mr. Fahy and Dr. Frey thought it was a good one and hoped that it would work. I never told the Petroleum Administrative Board or any member of that Board that I did not want their approval. In fact, I wanted them to know what I was doing, and to have anything they had to say to me. I did not say at the March 12th meeting that the buying activities were being carried on on my own responsibility, or anything like that.

I have heard Dr. Frey's testimony here on the stand. I remember Dr. Frey referring to his testimony to something said about the buying activities being carried on on my own responsibility. In my judgment, he is confused about that, in that the statement in regard to my own responsibility was made in connection with an entirely different matter that came up at the May 8th meeting.

My interpretation of the letter of July 20th was 3243 that I had been asked to do a job; and it was my purpose to seek, according to that letter, to bring about, through cooperative measures, the stabilization or the restoration of price levels, which had been depressed by price wars; and in doing this, to bring about a relief from the economic and physical waste referred to in that letter. I did not consider the letter of July 20th as giving me authority to violate the law.

I never made any statement in substance to Mr. Fahy or to Dr. Frey or any member of the Petroleum Administrative Board that this matter of buying activity was one with which they had no concern, and that I would proceed whether they thought it was a good thing or not.

Neither Mr. Fahy nor any other member of the Petroleum Administrative Board at this time or at any other time directed or requested me to discontinue the Tank Car Stabilization Committee or its activities. On the contrary, I felt from my talk with them as to the Tank Car Stabilization Committee's activities, that they thought the plan was a good one, and hoped that it would work.

I was in Court when Dr. Frey testified with reference to the meeting that some others and I had on May 8th with members of the Petroleum Administrative Board. I 3244 recall what happened at that meeting. At that meeting of May 8th I have no recollection and would say there was no discussion during the meeting of the buying program. It was in relation to entirely different matters. After the meeting broke up, there was a reference to it by Mr. Fahy, in conversation with me, including Dr. Frey. Mr. Fahy asked me, "How is the buying coming along?" And my reply was, "All right, so far as I know." I did not on that occasion say to Mr. Fahy, "I accept full responsibility for this buying program." I do remember such a remark in connection with other matters.

The Petroleum Administrative Board had raised three points in regard to general stabilization in a letter to me of April 22nd. The first one was that there should be no stabilization meeting without a representative of the Board being present. Second, that every activity in the industry should be heard from before any decisions were made. Third, that no general instructions be given under the authority of the letter of July 20th.

In answer to that, and in the discussion that followed, I stated that, in line with the letter of July 20th that had been sent to me, that necessarily in carrying on the stabilization work I would, and I felt the letter required, make decisions when they were necessary. Furthermore, in making 3245 those decisions, there were times when I would have to use my discretion. There was a matter of bringing different elements in and different subjects to discuss at stabilization meetings, and in bringing them together and discussing them I had to use my own discretion, and do it on my own responsibility. And in the matter of these meetings, in the matter of these decisions and using my discretion, I was taking the responsibility for them.

I recall no statement at the meeting of May 8th, by me or by any member of the Petroleum Administrative Board, that I had no authority under the letter of July 20th or under the Code for operating a buying program.

I attended a meeting with Mr. Fahy, Chairman of the Petroleum Administrative Board, on May 10, 1935. At this conference there was a reference to the buying activities in the industry in the spring of 1935, which I have described. The meeting was in Mr. Fahy's office in the Petroleum Administrative office, Department of the Interior. In that connection, they had their own official building; they were not in the Interior Building itself.

That question came up in connection with the Blazer report.

On April 8th, or the early part of April, the Petroleum Administrative Board requested the Planning and Coordination Committee to review and comment on the 3246 Blazer report and to see the Petroleum Administrative Board regarding it.

As a result of this request, I sent a telegram to the members of the marketing committee.

(Copy of telegram referred to is received in evidence as EXHIBIT 970.)

Exhibit 920 for identification is the communication that was sent by Mr. Fahy to Mr. Collett of the Planning and Coordination Committee.

Mr. Donovan: I offer that in evidence.

Mr. Chaffetz: We object to that. That was twice offered before and it was objected to and the objection sustained. It is now re-offered.

Mr. Donovan: But it was an entirely different situation, this is, in relation to the subject matter of this telegram which has been admitted in evidence.

Mr. Lewin: If it was inadmissible then it is inadmissible now.

The Court: Just a minute. The record may be different then than it is now.

The Court: Objection sustained. Exception allowed.

(Exhibit 970, previously received, was read to the jury by Mr. Donovan.)

On the marketing committee referred to in Exhibit 970 were Mr. Allan Jackson of Standard Oil of 3247 Indiana, a defendant in this case. Mr. Dodge of The Texas Oil Company. He was a defendant in this case. Mr. Russell Williams representing the trackside operators located at Indianapolis. Mr. Cowden of Kansas City, representing the co-ops. Mr. Carnes of Sinclair Oil Company, who is a defendant in this case. Mr. Bateman of Redbank, New Jersey, representing retailers, particularly from the eastern part of the country. Mr. Barney Majewski, representing the independent refiners of the Mid-Continent and the jobbers. Mr. C. L. Jones of Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, New York, who is a defendant in this case. Mr. Eckert of Philadelphia of Sun Oil Company. Mr. Harold Stone of Atlantic Refining Company, Philadelphia. Mr. W. Schuh of Milwaukee, representing the retailers of the country, being head of the national association. I believe I have named them. And Mr. Hadlick who was secretary. He was at one time and is representing jobbers. I was chairman of that committee. That marketing committee under the Code was appointed under the P. and C. Committee.

The Marketing Committee were called to make the recommendation in response to the Secretary of the P.A.B. He asked them to come back and treat with this Blazer report.

Not all of the members of that Marketing Commit-3248 tee attended the May 10, 1935 meeting. A committee of three appointed by the Planning and Coordination Committee attended that meeting to respond to the Administrator's request. They were Mr. Collett, the Chairman of the Planning and Coordination Committee, Mr. Majewski, and myself, and we met there, with Mr. Fahy, to discuss the report. This meeting was at Mr. Fahy's office in the Petroleum Administrative Board Building, at Washington.

Exhibit 924 for identification is the Blazer report to which I have referred. At that meeting with Mr. Fahy the committee and I discussed the Blazer report with Mr. Fahy. As I recall it, it was sometime in late February or March, 1935, that this report was filed with the Petroleum Administrative Board. Exhibit 924, page 4, was discussed between our committee and Mr. Fahy at that meeting on May 10th, at the office of the Petroleum Administrative Board. The portion entitled on the top of page 4.

Mr. Donovan: I offer that in evidence.

Mr. Lewin: Objected to. That is the same portion of the Blazer report that was offered before.

The Court: Objection is made to this. It will be sustained; but let me ask the witness this question.

3249 Q. When you met the committee, what did you discuss?

A. We discussed the position of the independent refiner. We discussed the recommendation that they had made.

Mr. Donovan: Q. Who had made?

A. That the Blazer Committee had made, to the effect that it would be very helpful if major companies would buy distress gasoline from the small independent refiners. Shall I go on?

The Court: Well, what else did you discuss there?

A. When that part of the report was referred to, those of us present, Mr. Majewski and I informed him that we already had buying of gasoline in effect, in which case Mr. Fahy replied, "That is quite so and disposes of that part of the report," and we went on to other phases.

Mr. Donovan: Now, your Honor, in order to make the record clear, I re-submit that portion of the report being the first four paragraphs of page 4.

Mr. Lewin: And the Government still objects to it, thinking it is totally immaterial.

3250 The Court: The objection to that is sustained. Exception allowed.

Mr. Donovan: And it is sustained as to my further offer?

The Court: Yes. Exception allowed.

Prior to our meeting of May 10th, Exhibit 923, being a press release, dated May 7, 1935, issued by the Department of the Interior, had been released by the Department. The subject matter of that release was discussed at the meeting.

Exhibit 916 for identification is a duplicate original of a telegram dated May 14, 1935, received by me from Charles Fahy.

Exhibit 971 for identification is a certified copy of a duplicate original of a telegram dated May 17, 1935, received by me from Charles Fahy.

(EXHIBITS 915, 916, 971, 972 and 973 for identification were offered in evidence by Mr. Donovan.)

Mr. Donovan: Q. From your experience with the Petroleum Administrative Board and its members in relation to the subject matter of the exhibits for identification that I have just submitted to you, did you have the impression in your mind that the Petroleum Administrative Board desired you to continue the buying activities?

3251 Mr. Chaffetz: I object to that question as leading, having no proper relation to these exhibits—

Mr. Lewin: Irrelevant and immaterial.

Mr. Chaffetz: (Continuing) —irrelevant and immaterial.

Mr. Donovan: Your Honor, when these were offered before, this witness was not on the stand, and no such question as I now ask had been asked.

I offer it for the purpose of having evidence here to show on what basis, or what if any impression this witness derived by reason of these exchanges of communications between the Petroleum Administrative Board and himself in relation to buying activities.

Now as to that, your Honor, I think it is highly material.

I am offering it to show the state of mind of this defendant by reason of these actions and of this experience with the Petroleum Administrative Board. And, furthermore, your Honor, it bears up on the question as to whether or not there was administrative interpretation here.

Your Honor, as I have said, here is what it amounts to: He has stated that he had gathered an impression from his meetings with the Petroleum 3252 Administrative Board that they considered that this buying activity was a good thing, and should go on. Here is confirmation of that report, by concrete action on the part of the Board. I offer it for that purpose.

Mr. Chaffetz: We object to that for the reasons I have just stated.

(The following proceedings were had in the absence of the jury.)

Mr. Chaffetz: In the interest of saving time, although we think those Fahy letters are not material, we are inclined to waive any objection to them, and to later ask your Honor to instruct the jury properly as to them assuming that your Honor—we just leave it to your Honor's judgment as to what to do about it. But we do want to press our objection as to this thing in connection with the Pennsylvania documents—we do want to press our objection to those Pennsylvania documents.

The Court: I will say this: I have considered the Pennsylvania documents, and the objection of the government will be sustained as to these. (Exhibits 915, 916, 971, 972 and 973.) Exception allowed.

(The following proceedings were had in the presence of the jury.)

3253 Mr. Donovan: This is the question, your Honor, as it appears on p. 1735 of the Record:

> "From your experience with the Petroleum Administrative Board and its members in relation to the subject matter of the exhibits for identification that I have just submitted to you, did you have the impression in your mind that the Petroleum Administrative Board desired you to continue the buying activities?"

Mr. Chaffetz: That question is objected to.

The Court: Objection sustained. Exception allowed.

I received from Mr. Fahy a telegram dated May 28, 1935 and a letter dated June 3, 1935, and I wrote him a letter dated June 12, 1935.

(Certified copies of documents referred to received in evidence as EXHIBITS 975, 976 and 977, respectively, and read to the jury by Mr. Donovan.)

I have already testified that on the occasion of my talk with Dr. Frey and Mr. Fahy, I formed an impression as to the wishes of the Board or of Dr. Frey as to the buying which I described to them and its continuance.

I believed that the Petroleum Administrative Board and particularly Dr. Frey were cooperating with us in our buying activities.

3254 I would at that time have discontinued these activities had I believed that Dr. Frey or the Petroleum Administrative Board disapproved of them, or had Dr. Frey or the Petroleum Administrative Board told me to do so.

In my mind there was no doubt but that at that time that the Petroleum Administrative Board and Dr. Frey were authorized by the Secretary of the Interior to deal with the stabilization of both wholesale and retail markets throughout large areas of the United States.

I would say the tank car market is the wholesale market in the Mid-Continent area.

Q. You have spoken, Mr. Arnott, of having received a letter dated July 20, 1934, from Secretary Ickes. Will you tell the Court and the jury the circumstances under which that letter was written to you?

Mr. Chaffetz: That is objected to, your Honor.

The Court: Objection sustained. Exception allowed.

I asked for a legal opinion in connection with that letter. I asked that opinion from Mr. Louis Titus, who was chairman of the Planning and Coordination Legal Committee, and general counsel for the Planning and 3255 Coordination Committee. I thought it would be helpful in my work in stabilization.

Exhibit 891, the letter of July 20th, referred to, is the letter that I received.

Mr. Donovan: I offer that letter in evidence.

Mr. Chaffetz: That is objected to.

The Court: Objection sustained. Exception allowed.

Exhibit 892 is the opinion that I referred to, as having been prepared at my request by Mr. Titus.

Mr. Donovan: I offer that opinion in evidence.

Mr. Chaffetz: We object to it because it is irrelevant, immaterial and incompetent; and for the additional reason there is nothing in that opinion that would indicate that this witness was authorized to do the things charged in this case.

The Court: Let me take time to read it. I have read it once before—

A price war is one where the close inter-relationship between the retail and the wholesale tank car market has to be dealt with, and considered together. You cannot have a—

The Court: Let me ask you: Is a price war this: Where one retailer is underselling the other in some 3256 locality, cutting the price, and the other retailers try to meet that price? Is that what was known as a price war?

A. As I explained the other day, one meets the other. That starts the retail competition of that character.

Q. What is the price war itself? Is it the cutting of prices in one locality that necessitates others to cut the price continuously?

A. That is right, and the result of that works back—

Mr. Chaffetz: I object to that.

Mr. Lewin: We don't want the results.

The Court: What I wanted to know is your definition of a price war. Does it correspond to what I have said?

A. That is only part of it. That is what I am trying to tell you, that the close relationship—I will make this definite statement: You cannot consider a price war from a retail angle only; it cannot be done. A price war that is talked of or considered from a retail point of view involves the wholesale market; and if you consider the wholesale market, you must in turn, because of that very close interrelationship, consider the retail market; they are 3257 one. You can't deal with one without you deal with the other, no matter at which end you begin.

And everybody in the industry that knows the industry's problems knows that without question.

The Court: I have ruled out the letter, and I am going to consider this other exhibit.

I was here while Mr. McDowell was testifying. I recall his testimony as to the fact that the letter of July 20, 1934 and the opinion of Mr. Titus were read at the first stabilization meeting. And I recall his testimony that he relied upon that letter and that opinion in accepting the position on the committee to which I appointed him.

Throughout my activities I had in mind particular statements made by Mr. Ickes in relation to the work of the code. The statements in Exhibit 978 for identification, being Press Release numbered 76,204, dated September 18, 1933, issued by the Department of the Interior, purporting to be the remarks of Mr. Ickes before the Planning and Coordination Committee at a conference in the Mayflower Hotel, September 18, 1933, are the statements to which I have referred. I was present at that meeting at which those remarks were made. I heard him make those 3258 remarks. This meeting of the P. and C. Committee was held at the beginning of its work under the Code.

I relied upon those statements there, during my activities under the Code. I have read this press release of September 18, 1933.

(Document referred to is received in evidence as EXHIBIT 978.)

(Mr. Donovan then read Exhibits 978 and 979 to the jury.)

3259 Cross-Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

I did not say anything in my direct examination about a letter to me from Mr. Ickes, dated April 2, 1935. I recall that letter. Maybe I have the original of that letter. I haven't it here.

I would say Exhibit 980 for identification is a true copy of a letter received by me from the Secretary of the Interior, dated April 2, 1935.

(Document received in evidence as EXHIBIT 980, and read to the jury by Mr. Chaffetz.)

I became president of Socony-Vacuum Company in 1931. I wasn't the chief executive officer of Socony-Vacuum Company; Mr. H. L. Pratt, chairman of the Board, was. He was the man recognized as in active charge of that company.

I testified on direct examination that I stepped down from the presidency sometime during 1933 and became the vice president. I continued at the same salary when I became the vice president. I don't recall definitely how long I continued under that salary, but it may have been a year and half or more. Then the salary was decreased. I don't know if my opinion would say it was substantially, I think anything in the way of a decrease in salary is probably one way of calling it substantial. My salary at that 3260 time was $85,000 per year. As near as I can remember, the change was made about a year and a half later. It was changed to $60,000 a year. There has been no change in my salary since that time.

My duties as vice president are to represent the board in the general direction of the marketing in the Mid-West.

I don't know that I would call it succeeding to the position that Mr. C. L. Jones had. I do everything that an executive officer in charge of a division of a company would be called upon to do in directing the affairs of that company. I receive reports from time to time from the active men in the field, and I instruct them as to the policies of the company. I have been doing that from the first of 1937, or thereabouts.

During 1936 I was devoting my time to activities with respect to the Federal Trade Commission, and such Board activities as I had.

My duties with the company during that year were not specific.

The decrease in salary that I spoke of took place I think at the same time that all executive officers took more or less the same decrease.

I am also a stockholder in Socony-Vacuum Company. I would not consider myself a substantial stockholder 3261 in the company. Other members of my family are not to my knowledge stockholders of the company. I have been a stockholder since the time I became president.

I would describe Socony-Vacuum Company as one of the large major oil companies, engaged directly and indirectly all over the world in the production, refining, transportation and marketing of petroleum products. I wouldn't venture to say what is the annual gallonage of gasoline of Socony-Vacuum Company in the United States. Its world-wide total business is much larger, I would say, than that of Standard Oil Company of Indiana. I don't think there would be so much difference between its total United States business and that of Standard Oil Company of Indiana; they are approximately the same.

I don't recall testimony in this case that Standard of Indiana sells over a billion gallons of gasoline a year.

I again say I wouldn't want to venture a wrong opinion about the gallonage of our company. I am not avoiding your question, but I just don't recall.

I have been here throughout this trial every day. I think I have listened to all of the evidence and all the arguments of counsel, both in the presence of the jury and out of the presence of the jury.

My recollection is, we do about ten million bar-3262 rels of business, of all products, in the Mid-West. At the moment, I can't tell how much gasoline. I would say there are 42 gallons to a barrel. If that is correct, that would be 420,000,000 gallons of products. Most of that is gasoline, although there is an important lubricating oil business with that, and you can't overlook other products such as fuel oil and refined kerosene.

I wouldn't venture to testify to what the size is of the spot market business in the Indiana territory, in relation to other business, because I have no direct contact with it. I could not answer as to what part of all the gasoline sold in this area is sold by jobbers under contract with major oil companies. I would have no idea whether it is 20% or 70%.

I did not know that in 1935 and 1936.

C. L. Jones of our company was in charge of the operations of our company in this territory during that period. I wouldn't say that he dictated the policies of our company in this territory. He carried out the policies of our company in this territory. I would say the persons active in the field here took instructions from him.

In the sense that I think you are asking the approximate time when I first became interested in stabilization 3263 work, I would say that that began with the N. R. A. Code. I had occasion to discuss problems with some people in the industry prior to that time and I would say I had occasion to call and preside at meetings of refiners prior to the N. R. A. Code.

It may have been 1931, but I don't recall that it was.

Those meetings, when they were held in Chicago, were usually held at the Blackstone Hotel.

I wouldn't call them a series. There were meetings, several in each year, from 1932 on.

I recall being present after having called a meeting in the Blackstone Hotel in Chicago on June 7, 1934. That was more than a month prior to the receipt by me of the July 20th letter that I referred to.

Q. Yes, and do you remember what the occasion was for that meeting?

A. I was at a great many meetings, Mr. Chaffetz. I am not avoiding it at all, but I can't think of any particular subject at the moment; maybe I could if I knew more about the meeting. That was not during 1932, 1933, 1934 and so on.

I appointed a great many committees, on many subjects. There is a distinction between after the beginning of the Code, and after the end of the Code. Now, this is the 3264 period during the Code, and during that period I appointed many committees, usually at every meeting. If I appointed a committee on June 7, 1934, it was under the authority that we had in connection with Code matters. I would say that if the industry were dealing with the matter of jobbers' contracts or any other matter, they were gathered there to consider the question under the Code; and I would appoint a committee to consider situations and developments and activities, and give me the benefit of what they had to say after their examination of it. And that was before I had the letter of July 20, 1934. I thought I had the authority under the Code to consider any matters that related to the Code, on marketing.

I would like very much to tell you what events transpired at that meeting of June 7th, but, as I say, meetings were frequent, in my case daily over the period of the Code, and for me, after a matter of nearly two years, to specifically remember what transpired is beyond my ability. If you will be specific I will be glad to deal with it. I do not recall that particular meeting on June 7, 1934. I might have appointed at that meeting a committee of which Mr. McDowell and Mr. Lakin, defendants in this case, were members. I appointed committees in which they were members in other cases. I do not remember appointing such a 3265 committee at this meeting. I may well have appointed McDowell on some committee prior to the time I received the letter of July 20, 1934. I do not recall specifically, but I would be perfectly willing to say I may have. Very likely I did. I did not show him authority then or any other time, or anybody else, under which I appointed him on any such committee.

It would be very difficult, if not impossible, to tell what companies were represented at that meeting June 7, 1934, but when I had occasion to discuss anything with the operators that had to do with marketing in the Mid-Continent, there were recognized people that I usually discussed it with, and it may well have been that some of them, maybe most of them, were there, but to say exactly, I could not do it. Generally speaking I would say there were representatives of major companies who were marketing in the Mid-Western area.

In my direct examination I referred to some stabilization meetings that I said took place in December, 1934 at the Blackstone Hotel, and I said that there were representatives of jobbers and dealers and major companies and others at those meetings. The meetings lasted 4 to 5 days. Those meetings might have been held in one of two rooms in the Blackstone Hotel. They might have been in the 3266 so-called Marble Room which would accommodate a large crowd, which I think was the room; or it might have been in the Elizabethan Room which was on another floor and accommodates not quite so many. In fact, I think we had them in both rooms.

I did not hold the meetings myself in the Marble Room. Mr. Ashton by my request was acting as chairman. I would not say I excused myself from that meeting because I wanted to hold another meeting at the same time. I would not say that was necessarily not true. I will give you the reason if you ask me. I did not, at the same time these big meetings were being held in the Marble Room, conduct meetings in a different room in the Blackstone Hotel. Outside of the first day, I was not present at other meetings in the Blackstone Hotel during the period these big meetings were being held in the Marble Room.

It so happened the first day of their large meeting that I did meet with a few people in another meeting. But remember I did not hold any meetings. I would not remember who were the few people I had meeting on that day. They would be among the group that were present at the meeting June 7th that you referred to. I think they would be representatives of major companies marketing in this area, and include many of the defendants 3267 in this case. I would say that that meeting had to do with Code matters. I am unable to go to any specific meeting and out of my recollection claim to state exactly what the subjects were. If you want to produce the subjects I will very willingly say whether I recall them or not. I cannot recall every meeting over a period of two years, and what the subjects were. Maybe you can recall it to me.

It may be that we discussed the subject of a uniform jobber contract.

In my direct testimony I referred to the speech Mr. Ickes made in Dallas in November, 1934, when he and others and myself were there.

Referring to this page from the National Petroleum News for November 21, 1934, which you show me, this reference to a statement made a day or so after the speech by Mr. Ickes that I referred to in my direct testimony did not come to my attention then, and there wasn't anything that he said that anybody knew down there at the time. It was a public statement made to the press for the purpose of publication and I later heard of it and that Mr. Ickes had said something to the effect that he had suspended a particular buying program that he referred to on the grounds, among others, that he was advised 3268 that it was illegal.

I referred in my direct examination to some so-called stabilization meetings on January 4 and 5, 1935. There were other meetings of that type. There may have been meetings between January 4, 1935 and the expiration of the Code on May 27th, held in Chicago. There may have been meetings between January 4 and 5, 1935 and January 16, 1935, within the next two or three weeks, but I couldn't say definitely. I didn't refer to any other meetings after the meetings of January 4th and 5th, on my direct examination, until a meeting in February. I could not recall any such meeting now.

Q. The meetings on January 4th and 5th were called by you?

A. That is correct.

Q. Did you preside at those meetings?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At both of them?

A. At both of them.

Q. On both days?

A. Yes.

Q. You would be the chairman of that stabilization committee, and present at those meetings, if anybody was?

3269 A. I presume so.

Mr. Chaffetz: I ask that this document be marked. (Handing witness document.)

(Document referred to marked Exhibit 982 for identification.)

Mr. Chaffetz: Q. I ask you to look only at the second page of those two documents that are clipped together and see whether the contents of that page refreshes your recollection as to the subject matters, or any of them, taken up at the meetings on January 4 and 5, 1935, at the Blackstone Hotel in Chicago.

The Witness: Will you please read that question?

(Thereupon the pending question was read by the reporter.)

A. I was not present when this matter was taken up. You have referred to meetings on January 4th and 5th. I was not present on both days.

Q. Didn't you just say a few minutes ago you were?

A. You asked me, I understood you to say, did

I call the meetings. If I said that I was present at both, I was incorrect. I was only present at the January 4th meeting.

3270 Q. Who would be the chairman of the stabilization committee at that meeting?

A. As I recall that particular subject, it was not discussed in the meeting that I was chairman of, on the 4th. I think it was a matter of some other, who, the following day, of that group that was there on the 4th, who discussed—do you want me to mention it—the question of Michigan. And those that were particularly interested in Michigan, were those that gathered the following day. I wasn't present, and I couldn't tell you who they were, or who was that chairman. I don't know whether there was a chairman.

Q. Were there two persons, or anybody besides yourself, who could have been referred to as the chairman of the stabilization committee?

A. There were many chairmen of stabilization committees?

Q. I am asking you about the chairman of the stabilization committee.

A. The chairman of the stabilization committee may be one of fifty committees.

Q. You think there were fifty stabilization committees?

A. I think there were more than that throughout the country.

3271 Q. How many different stabilizers were there?

A. I don't know as there was one.

Q. You have no recollection at all of the discussion of these subjects at the meeting at which you attended?

A. What you presented to me refers to Michigan, and I was not at that meeting.

Referring to the meeting of February 25, 1935, the facts were, as I testified, I didn't see Dr. Frey appear at the meeting. He was in Chicago. I didn't say he wanted to attend that meeting. It is not true that he wanted to attend.

The effect of what I said to him was not necessarily that I thought it was unwise for him to appear at that meeting in view of the matters that were being discussed there.

I repeat what I said this morning; that Dr. Frey was coming from the West. I didn't know it. He appeared unexpectedly in Chicago at the Blackstone Hotel where we were holding the meeting. He sent word in that he was there. It was natural that he would. Whenever Dr. Frey, or any member of the Petroleum Board, was in easy distance, or close by, we always got together to discuss our mutual problems.

Dr. Frey sent word into that meeting that he was 3272 outside. I left the meeting and, as I testified this morning, I told him what the meeting was, something that he had quite a comprehension of. The background of that meeting makes it easily understood why he wouldn't want to go in. I explained to him what the meeting was, and I said, "Under those circumstances, what do you think? Is it wise for you to come in?" He was perfectly welcome, and he knew it. He knew what the meeting was about, and he said, "I agree. It wouldn't be wise for me to be there if you want this free expression."

I didn't make that suggestion to him, and he didn't, seeing that I didn't want him there, acquiesce, not at all. I am positive of that.

I mentioned a meeting on March 15th in New York, at which Mr. Buckley and Mr. O. D. Robinson were present. And I testified that in the course of the discussion I invited Mr. Buckley and Mr. Robinson out of the room.

When you invite a representative of the East Texas refiners, and when you invite a representative of the independent Gulf refiners, refiners that had been very non-cooperative; refiners that due to their activities, in every way failing to cooperate with the objectives of the Administration and ourselves; and when they come to you with statements that are not understood, and which involve a great deal of skepticism, doubt, and really antagonism; and 3273 after you hear them, I think it is very obvious that you wouldn't want them to remain there while you discuss what they represented to you. As stabilizer, I wanted to have a free and open expression from these gentlemen, so they would give us the benefit, and give all the benefit of their consideration as to the things that these gentlemen, which were quite serious, had laid before us; and something that you would not get, if you understand meetings, by having those gentlemen remain. And so I asked them to go out while we could have a consideration of the matters that they had proposed, and also told them that later we would invite them back, which I did.

I don't call any meeting a public meeting, no. I don't know what you call a public meeting. I wouldn't call the meeting of March 15th a public meeting in the sense that I call a public meeting. I would call this, maybe, a public meeting; maybe you would not. The public is here, I did not exclude Buckley and Robinson. I excused them for a few hours, a very great difference. It was a meeting that Mr. Buckley was invited to, and not a public meeting in that sense. Representatives of only major companies were present at that meeting.

I am not prepared to say on exact testimony about the relations of American Oil with other companies. I 3274 am not so sure that American Oil Company is affiliated with Standard Oil Company of Indiana. I think it is affiliated with another company that is affiliated with Standard Oil Company of Indiana. I think that other company is Pan-American. I would say that American Oil Company and Pan-American are both major oil companies, or affiliated with major oil companies. I would say that there is some association with Standard Oil Company of Indiana.

I don't think Richfield Oil Company that I mentioned in my direct examination was then affiliated with any major oil company. I am not so sure whether there has been anything brought about; there have been many, many negotiations. I don't know whether they are now so affiliated. Richfield Oil Company does business on the Pacific Coast, and they do business on the eastern seaboard, and they may do some business at the southeast, I am not sure. It is a question, but I would say they were bordering on being a major oil company.

I thought I testified very completely about just who was present at that meeting of March 15th. I testified that I really tried to remember. The Pure Oil Company was in many meetings, if you speak of this matter of the East Texas gasoline, on which there were only a very few 3275 meetings, and taking the meeting of March 6th, as I testified, I can't recall who were the representatives of The Pure Oil Company. There might have been one, two or three gentlemen. It might have been Mr. Morris; it might have been Mr. McElroy; it might have been Mr. Watson; and on occasion there were one or two others that did represent them. ~~I don't recall~~ Mr. Watson in any of those meetings. Mr. Watson is located in the west, and occasion for him to come east is very infrequent. I may well have addressed my telegram to The Pure Oil Company to Mr. Watson on one occasion but usually I don't think it was my practice, for the reason I explained. It wasn't for me to choose, out of four or five or six men, whom they wanted to send; so in that instance, I did them the courtesy of addressing it to the company, and let them decide it. It made no difference to me; so long as we had them in our constructive work.

I recall that letter now, Exhibit 23, Buckley to Brandli, dated May 25, 1935. I never made any engagements of the character that that inquiry suggests. I can tell you what I think it means. That was his own request; that it was impossible for him to contact these individuals individually, that he asked if he would have the privilege of meeting them when we had our meetings, and they 3276 would all be there. I would say very much the same group that I have described that was at the March 6th and the March 15th meetings was at the May 29th meeting. I did see Mr. Buckley on May 27th, but the meeting was May 29th.

I think it would help a little bit if I would give whom I think I recall that I invited; I testified that I can't be sure of exactly who came that I invited. I can come very near it. There would be Atlantic Refining Company, Mr. Harold Stone; Sun Oil Company, Mr. Samuel Eckert; Richfield Oil Company, Mr. Burns; Cities Service Company, if that is the correct name, Mr. Frueauff; American Oil Company, Mr. Jacob Blaustein; Pan-American Oil Company, Mr. Hatmaker; Gulf Refining Company, Mr. Hartmann; Tide Water Oil Company, Mr. Collins; Sinclair Oil Company, Mr. Carnes; Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, and I am not clear or sure of this, it might have been Mr. Hasslam. I don't recall Mr. Holbein, he is not a gentleman I have a close acquaintance with. I don't recall him. There would be Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Mr. Fritz Ewing. It would not be L. B. Davis, he is a local manager, has nothing to do with matters of that character. There would be Shell—May 29th—now, there was a change in the representation of executive market interests in the Shell 3277 Company. I don't know exactly when that took place. But if Mr. Gould was still in the capacity he was before, he would be the man; but if he wasn't, it would be whoever succeeded him or who in the interval between represented them. It was not Mr. van der Woude. Shell Eastern, I suppose that would be. There was a change whereby their company adopted a more national name and type of representation, where before they had had three, with a different sort of overhead management. When that change took place, is what I am not clear of, and that is the reason I am giving you these possibilities of who it might have been. As to the Texas, I wouldn't question that I sent them an invitation, but my mind doesn't place anybody from there, for reasons that I can give you if you care to ask me. I doubt whether Continental was included. I have seen Mr. Batson on occasion, but it wasn't a regular thing for Mr. Batson or any Continental representative to come to the meetings in the East. I do recall him in the meetings. I was always anxious to have anybody from Continental.

I didn't leave out anybody. There may have been others.
Mr. Collins was the usual representative of Tide Water Oil.
I don't remember of Mr. Noel Robinson attending any of those meetings. I remember seeing Mr. Robinson 3278 once. I know he was at the allocator's meeting, at the Washington meeting, and I remember seeing Mr.
Robinson at some one meeting in New York and he came in with Mr. Collins. If you ask me why or wherefore, I couldn't tell you, but I remember it impressed me because it was so unusual. I don't know whether it was one of those meetings where we discussed the East Texas situation, because I don't remember the meeting.

I would have invited Pure, but, there again, it is obscure. I don't remember whether Mr. McElroy was there, or Mr. Morris.

I don't recall having any correspondence with Mr. Buckley during that period, 1935 and 1936; it was so small, I just couldn't think what it might have been or what the occasion might have been. If there was occasion for such correspondence, I should have it. I didn't make it a habit or otherwise during that period to keep correspondence of that character. My correspondence, in our large organization, is taken care of as other correspondence. I have not a personal file that I know of. My secretary and those in my department file as the company officials file everywhere. I don't know how it is kept. If a letter comes from Mr. Buckley, after I have read it ordinarily I think it would go into the files of the company, Socony-Vacuum, in the usual way. I am not able to say whether my files are 3279 in the Socony-Vacuum Company. I don't regulate the files or have anything to do with them or know how they are kept. The company has its regular practice in that regard, and my correspondence moves as anybody else's correspondence moves. I don't know whether there is any distinction between personal correspondence and company correspondence by anybody. I will have to ask our filing department whether they take executive correspondence and segregate it for any reason or whether they have it kept in the regular way or in some other way. I can't tell you, except this: They have the correspondence, and it is properly kept, I am sure. A Christmas greeting from Mr. Buckley would not go into the company files after I noted it and took such action as I do with such things; I would have no reason to keep it.

By the Court

If a letter from my broker asking about a certain investment for my own personal affairs, having nothing to do with Socony-Vacuum Company, had anything of any particular personal importance to me and had information of worthwhileness in it that I should have kept for unusual or for some business purpose, I would keep it, but if it is like what I usually get from brokers, I think it would go into the waste basket.

3280 If it is something of a personal nature, I do not have a personal file for that. I don't keep personal files. I don't think my secretary has a personal file for me.

May I explain? We have a huge building that is very large, and our activities are organized for efficiency, and it is not usual in a matter of this sort to keep a file on all the activities by every individual, even though he be an officer or executive, in every department. It is centralized. I don't know that is done, but it might well be that, in the centralization, the filing department would keep the ordinary correspondence and the more personal or executive correspondence apart so that an executive, if he wanted to deal with his correspondence, would have a known place, but for me to have an individual file over here in one corner of the office, I know of no such correspondence.

By Mr. Chaffetz

I would say that I did not have occasion to look back and pick out pieces of correspondence during the years 1935 and 1936 for use in connection with this case.

I wouldn't keep the correspondence, copies of telegrams, for example, from me to Frueauff, in which I asked him to come to meetings in New York. I wouldn't keep copies of these at all. I wouldn't think of it.

3281 I kept the letter of July 20th to me from the Secretary, right on my desk. It was on my desk most of the time. I would say all of the time. I wouldn't be sure, but I thought I kept it there. I would keep it, anything as valuable to me as that.

I have a good deal of correspondence. It may be in folders, and it may be on those subjects that I might have been interested in.

When I say, "on my desk," I don't mean spread out on my desk. I mean in folders on my desk.

If I wanted the correspondence exchanged between myself and Mr. Buckley in the summer of 1935, I would ask my secretary in the offices of the Socony-Vacuum Company in New York to bring it to me.

I haven't the faintest recollection of writing to Mr. Buckley in the summer of 1935, calling his attention to the fact that I had a report that one of the independent refiners in East Texas was going to increase its runs and asking him to find out the facts and report to me. If there is such correspondence, I will certainly ask my secretary to locate it.

I will ask my secretary for any correspondence I may have had with Mr. Buckley in the months of June, July or August, 1935, either communications which I sent him or he sent to me.

A great deal of correspondence was subpoenaed by 3282 the Government. I never saw the subpoena or the correspondence. If you haven't got it, I don't know where it is. The correspondence that was asked for under the subpoena of my company was handled by my company and not by me. The Government will have to inquire of them as to what they sent to you, as the Government has already done.

Obviously the company and its counsel and its representatives had access to all of my correspondence. They had it. Whatever there was was in the custody and possession of the company. I didn't have it in my personal custody. I don't know of any such thing. I suppose and think they have access to it now if it is still there. A subpoena to my company would produce it quickly, of course, if it is there. I don't see why, if the Government issued a subpoena, it didn't get it before.

I referred, in my direct testimony, to a meeting on June 6, 1935, in Chicago where I said that I discussed a proposed new Federal Trade Commission Code. Subsequently, I submitted a code to the Federal Trade Commission for approval.

Q. I ask you whether in the meeting of June 6, 1935, you discussed inserting into the code a new provision which would authorize you to deal with the subject of distress gasoline?

3283 A. I don't recall any such thing.

Q. There was no discussion at all at that meeting?

A. I wouldn't say that. You asked me whether I asked the question or anybody discussed the question of inserting me in that relation. I don't remember any such thing.

Q. Do you remember any discussion at that meeting, on the subject of whether the purchase of distress gasoline by major companies should be provided in the proposed new Code?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Was it ever considered in that meeting or any subsequent meeting? By "it" I mean seeking the approval of the Federal Trade Commission for the major companies to purchase distress gasoline in the manner in which they did it.

A. What do you mean by "considered"?

Q. Discussed.

A. I don't remember any such discussion.

Q. And if there was such a discussion, you think you would remember it?

A. I certainly would.

Q. So you are pretty sure there was no such discussion?

3284 A. I wouldn't say pretty sure; I don't remember.

Q. You also said if you don't remember, you are pretty sure it didn't take place?

A. I would say so.

Q. So you are sure now that there was no discussion in the meeting of June 6 or any subsequent meeting?

A. I don't recall any such discussion.

Q. Along that line?

A. I don't recall any such discussion.

When the Code was presented to the Federal Trade Commission for approval, there was no request in it for any provision which would authorize the major companies to purchase distress gasoline, or to purchase gasoline from independent refiners, whether distress or not, or to enter into any activity with reference to distress gasoline. There was nothing on that subject at all.

I have some recollection, not over clear, but I have some recollection about attending a meeting in Kansas City on October 14, 1935. I think it was a meeting of the independent refiners. I don't know who called it. I think Mr. Boggs was the chairman of the meeting. October would be 4 or 5 months after the Code had expired. I don't 3285 remember any discussion at that meeting as to a major company buying program. I would say no such discussion took place while I was there. I made some comments and recommendations.

I do not remember receiving any memorandum from Mr. Buckley in the summer of 1935 in which he set forth the crude connections of each of the independent refiners in East Texas and compared them with the crude connections that they had at the time the buying in East Texas started, and suggested that I draw my own conclusions. I will very gladly have a search made of my files and see whether I have such a memorandum.

I remember that portions of the minutes of the allocators' meeting in Washington on March 13 were read yesterday in which there was reference to one company down there in North Texas that has a large stock that has been embarrassing. I do not recall what company it was. It could have been Waggoner Company. I would not like to say, but it might well have been because it was a company there that might be in that position.

There was also reference in those minutes to the way in which the idea of the East Texas Refiners' Marketing Association developed, and this was said:

There did not seem to be any spokesman for them, meaning the independent refiners, or any way in which they could approach those who might help them, so they discussed their troubles with 3 or 4 of the larger com-3286 panies in Texas, and out of the discussion came a tentative plan for a central sales agency.

I do not think I would know who the 3 or 4 of the larger companies in Texas were that are referred to. The only person that I talked to whom they had discussed that with was Dr. Lederer. He told me that some of those refiners had come to him. I had not remembered Buckley saying that at the allocators' meeting. I wouldn't remember.

At the moment I do not remember a telephone call from Buckley to me in Chicago on April 21, 1936. The statement that April 21, 1936 was at a time after the subpoenas had been issued by the Government for witnesses to appear before the grand jury that was investigating this matter, does not refresh my recollection as to any telephone conversation I may have had with Mr. Buckley.

I may have had such a conversation with Mr. Buckley, but I do not recall it. I do not recall having any discussion with Mr. Buckley after the grand jury had been called to investigate this matter.

The statement that the record in this case shows he telephoned me at Chicago on April 21, 1936, and he charged that call to the East Texas Refiners' Marketing Association does not refresh my recollection as to the sub-3287 ject of such call.

I remember the meeting of the independent refiners in Kansas City on Monday, November 25, 1935, at which I was present. That was not a meeting called by me. I could not say whether it was called by Mr. Boggs. I think Mr. Boggs presided at the meeting. I would say it was he.

I did not discuss subjects pertaining to the buying program in the Mid-Continent at that meeting. I do not recall who invited me to that meeting. I was not present throughout the meeting. There was no discussion of the buying program while I was there. As far as I am concerned, I have no reason to suppose that any discussion of the buying program took place at that meeting.

While I was there, I was talking to them about whether or not they wanted a code, and that was discussed. We had been working on one that I had presented to them, and I wanted to know their views, how we could get an industry response before we presented it to the Commission.

Q. A buying program was going on at that time, wasn't it, in 1935?

A. I would not say a buying program was going on then.

3288 Q. In the Mid-Continent?

A. No.

Q. Had it ceased?

A. I don't know as there was a buying program in the sense you refer to that had ever gone on.

Q. I did not say in any sense. I just said a buying program; your counsel has referred to a buying program.

A. I had no reason to know that any buying program was going on at that time.

Q. Or at any time?

A. There was the program that we have been talking about before the Code went out.

Q. And you think it did not continue after the Code went out?

A. I have reason to suppose that some buying was done, but I would not say under any program.

Q. Didn't you testify on direct examination that at the meeting of June 6th that you said it was a good thing and that you were going to continue with it?

A. I said at the meeting of June 6th, I said if these gentlemen cared to go on and voluntarily buy and receive information as to where gasoline was located, it was a good thing for the industry to know it.

3289 Q. Now, I want you to tell me the difference between the program that existed before the Code went out, and what went on after the Code went out.

A. The difference, if there was any difference, would be—

Q. In the way in which they operated?

A. That during the Code and under stabilization a recommendation had been made, there had been discussion—

Q. No, I am not asking that. Now, you know what I want.

A. I am trying to give you what you want.

Mr. Thomas: He had asked for it. Now, let him make his explanation.

The Court: Just a minute. I don't want any discussion. Just make your objection if you have any. Ask your question.

Mr. Chaffetz: The witness referred to a program that was going on during the Code, and then what was going on after the Code. Now, I want to know the way in which they functioned, not the way they started, not the recommendation. I want to know the functioning of the thing, how it differed after the Code.

A. How it differed?

Q. Yes.

3290 A. The only difference I can say is that there was no stabilization in respect to anything that I had to do with or that the P. A. B. or the government had to do with. It was entirely a matter as to what anybody wanted to do in a voluntary way, and entirely on their own, while before they were not entirely on their own, having had the supposed approval.

Q. Is that a difference in the way the thing functioned?

A. I think there is a difference in the fact that you work to get something that has approval under a program, and after a certain point somebody agrees to go along voluntarily—

Q. Now, just a minute.

A. I think that is different.

Q. You think the only difference then, they thought they had approval before the Code, and they did not think they had approval after the Code; otherwise it was exactly the same; is that right?

A. Before the Code they had what I felt was a recommendation and a suggestion they put it into effect, Mr. Chaffetz, and after the Code they had no approval, they had nothing from me whatsoever, and anybody who bought gasoline, he did it on his own.

Q. Otherwise the functioning of the thing was 3291 identical after the Code as it was before?

A. I don't know as I know very much what the committee did after the Code. I did not keep in touch to find out; it was not a matter that I was concerned with.

Q. You were sitting here during the testimony, and you heard McDowell testify that it continued to function exactly in the same way after the Code expired as before, didn't he?

A. Did he say exactly the same way?

Q. Didn't he?

A. I don't think he put it that way.

Q. You know that on November 25, 1935, the day you attended that meeting in Kansas City, the major companies were buying distress gasoline from independent refiners in the Mid-Continent field, much the same way they had been buying for many months prior thereto, didn't you?

A. I would not say that, no. I will answer that in another way if you want me to.

Q. Tell me some more about approval—

A. I don't know what they were doing after that meeting. That some of these gentlemen needed gasoline and were buying gasoline I have no doubt, but the same thing implies a great many things.

Q. You knew the winter was coming on, and the independent refiners knew that the winter was coming on, in November, 1935, and one of the things 3292 that concerned them was whether the buying program was going to continue functioning as effectively during the summer; isn't that true?

A. Meaning it affects who? You say it affects "them". Whom do you mean?

Q. I did not say it affects them. I said "as effectual".

A. Whom are you referring to?

The Court: Read the question.

(The question was read by the reporter as follows:)

"You knew the winter was coming on, and the independent refiners knew that the winter was coming on, in November, 1935, and one of the things that concerned them was whether the buying program was going to continue functioning as effectively during the summer; isn't that true?"

A. Exactly. Who do you mean, "concerns them"?

Mr. Chaffetz: Q. Whom do you think I might mean?

A. I am asking you.

Q. Whom do you suppose I meant?

A. You might mean the majors or you might mean the sellers.

Q. I mean both.

A. You mean both?

Q. Yes.

A. I had no reason to think it, a major, was concerned about buying continuing. I would say a 3293 refiner at any time would be concerned about selling his gasoline, summer or winter, if it was distress gasoline.

Q. And if there was a buying program going on, and that buying program was maintaining the price, and had been for months, they would be concerned whether that buying program was going to go on and maintain the price; isn't that true?

A. I would not put it that way. I would say if a man had a demand for gasoline, and he was selling his gasoline at or near the going market price, he would have every reason to be concerned if he had not the price for that gasoline.

Q. And if he thought that gasoline was being bought under a program, then he would be interested in knowing whether that program was going to continue?

A. I cannot say that he was interested in it.

Q. Do you have any doubt?

A. About what he thought?

Q. Yes.

A. I think anybody would be concerned about losing orders for consumption of gasoline which was a product he had no business for.

Q. And he would be concerned about whether the price was going to be maintained?

A. Why, I could not say he would be concerned about it.

3294 Q. Do you know that Mr. Boggs had concerned himself with allocations of products during that period?

A. No, I had no reason to suppose that.

Q. What did you think Mr. Boggs was doing?

A. I have no reason to suppose what he was doing. I had no contacts with him.

Q. Weren't you the one that suggested at the meeting in March they elect a leader who would work together with the major companies?

A. I did not say that.

Q. Did you say something to that effect?

A. I did.

Q. And in your letter—

A. Did you want to ask me what I said?

Q. I will tell you what you said in your letter to Mr. Marcell of March 12, 1935—this is with reference to the meeting of March 3rd:

> "Each company present agreed to join in our efforts and also to support the Executive Committee of their own choosing who will sit in our major group meetings representing independent refiners. In this way, we will have one > 3295 group and I think will be able to move forward even more definitely and constructively than we have in the past where this group was depending on Messrs. O'Shaughnessy and Majewski to keep them informed and to represent them."

That is when Mr. Boggs became chairman of that Executive Committee as you described, of the independent refiners; isn't that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. And didn't you know that he continued in that capacity after the Code, and was in that capacity when he was acting as chairman of the meetings?

A. You haven't asked me just what I said in that letter—

Q. I am asking you another question now.

A. No, I haven't any such idea. I had no contacts with Mr. Boggs after the Code; as a matter of fact, very few during—

Q. You had a contact with him at this meeting in November?

A. I did, certainly.

Q. That is a contact, isn't it?

A. That is.

3296 Q. Didn't you just say you had no contacts with him after the Code?

A. I said very few.

Q. You said very few, did you?

A. I did, and obviously he was at the meeting you have just referred to.

By the Gulf coast I referred in my testimony to the coast of Texas and Louisiana. That is where the independent refiners are located who were referred to in the allocators' meeting, companies like Chalmette, Corpus Christi, Republic, Crown Central, etc.

It was considered at that meeting whether the refiners who operate on the East coast would take the distress gasoline of the independent refiners located on the Gulf coast.

I do not know what companies bought that distress gasoline.

I know Mr. O. D. Robinson. I am acquainted with Mr. Corner. I did not have any discussions with Mr. Robinson and Mr. Corner about anything which I would call a Gulf coast buying program in the spring of 1935.

I had some discussions with Mr. O. D. Robinson and Mr. Corner about major company buying of distress gasoline from Gulf coast independent refiners in the 3297 spring of 1935. I know that there were orders for gasoline being placed, for cargo shipments from this group. By whom or in what quantity, or when, I didn't know. It was being done as a result of the efforts of Mr. O. D. Robinson who was speaking for them.

Naturally it was, generally speaking, the refiners who did business on the East Coast who bought that gasoline. I couldn't answer the question whether Tide Water Company, Atlantic Refining Company, American Oil Company, Socony-Vacuum Company and Gulf Companies were all buyers. I know that Socony-Vacuum, who were buyers of cargo gasoline, bought some. I couldn't tell you from whom they bought. They may have bought from Eastern States Petroleum Company. I know they had bought some before that. I certainly know that if there was any buying on the coast, Socony-Vacuum was one of the companies that did that. I don't know what other companies.

I didn't know Tide Water Company was actively interested in the purchase of distress gasoline on the Gulf coast. As a matter of fact, I think Tide Water Oil Company were not buyers. I don't recall that they were ever interested in cargo buying. If they were, I don't recall it.

3298 The Gulf Company is a very large buyer of gasoline. They may have, but I couldn't remember that they had bought distress gasoline on the Gulf coast.

Mr. O. D. Robinson didn't have any program for buying distress gasoline in the spring of 1935. He was representing the independent refiners, trying to get major companies to buy the gasoline of independent refiners down there, but that doesn't constitute a program. I certainly do not call that a program.

I wouldn't call what was going on in the Mid-Continent a program, either.

I do not know of meetings, during this time, that were being held on the East coast by representatives of major companies and the Gulf coast independent refiners, with respect to stabilizing the tank car price, and the barge rates for gasoline along the East coast.

I know who L. B. Davis of my company is. I have a very slight acquaintance with him. He is no longer with the company. I believe he was with the company in the spring of 1935. He was a manager of a division. He was interested in the price of gasoline on the East Coast, insofar as his immediate branch of the territory was concerned. I wouldn't know whether he was meeting with other representatives of major companies, trying to 3299 consolidate the effects of the buying of gasoline on the Gulf coast by actually fixing and stabilizing the price of gasoline on the East coast.

Mr. Davis at that time was manager of a branch office. As manager of that branch office, his responsibility was to another officer, and that other officer was responsible to the man in charge of the East; and I had nothing to do or was not interested in what was going on in the East, in local markets.

I was interested in stabilization in every respect. If there was a stabilization of markets on the East coast, that would have been of interest to me, if it was a matter that properly should have been brought to my attention. There were many activities of that kind all over the country. It wasn't a matter for me to know about all of them. They were local.

I never heard of any meetings called by Mr. O. D. Robinson of companies interested in the price on the East coast, during the period from January, 1935, all through the summer of 1935, with reference to the price of gasoline on the East coast. I am sure of that.

Q. Now, coming back to the situation in the Mid-Continent—directing your attention to the early part of January, when the so-called Tank Car Stabilization Committee was appointed, I think you 3300 testified that it was decided not to commence the purchase of distress gasoline until after the Connally Act had been passed; is that right?

A. That is true, and—

Q. Now—

A. (Continuing.) —I also testified to something else in that respect.

Q. That is all I asked you about, was with reference to this, and I think we will get along much faster if you just answer my questions.

That distress gasoline that was in the Mid-Continent field, that was in the hands of the Mid-Continent refiners, was legal gasoline, wasn't it?

A. I would say it was.

Q. There was no reason why any company wouldn't want to buy it if they needed it, is that right?

A. I should think of no reason.

Q. Yes. And if major companies needed gasoline, or thought they were going to need it; and if that distress gasoline was there in January and February, 1935, and its existence was called to their attention, we will assume, they would have bought it; isn't that right?

A. Why should I assume that?

Q. Can you think of any reason why, if they needed the gasoline, it was good gasoline, it was 3301 there, and it was called to their attention, can you think of any reason why they wouldn't have bought it?

A. I can answer that, if you will allow me.

Q. I wish you would answer my question. Can you think of any reason why they wouldn't have bought that gasoline?

A. If they knew about it?

Q. If they knew about it.

A. No, I don't see any reason.

Q. No. And if it was the desire of the major companies, beginning in January of 1935, to assist the independent refiners; and if they could have used the gasoline, whether they needed it or not; they could have assisted those independent refiners by buying such distress gasoline as existed in January and February of 1935 in the Mid-Continent field. That is clear, isn't it?

A. They could have, yes.

Q. Yes. No question about it, is there?

Mr. Lewin: It would help the independent refiners.

Mr. Chaffetz: Is that right?

A. If they had all that they eventually knew, they could have.

Q. And that would have helped the independent refiners, wouldn't it? 3302

A. It would have been of some assistance.

Q. Yes, and if they bought that distress gasoline from them in January and February at a fair market price, that would have helped the independent refiners, wouldn't it?

A. Yes, if they could have.

Q. Yes. But the way you wanted to help the independent refiners was by raising the published tank car price for gasoline in the Mid-Continent; isn't that right?

A. No.

Q. You deny that explicitly?

A. As you say it, explicitly.

Mr. Lewin: Give him the Marcell letter.

Mr. Chaffetz: Q. I ask you again, wasn't the purpose, your purpose and the purpose of the Tank Car Stabilization Committee, to get the tank car price of gasoline up?

A. Not as you state it, no, sir.

Q. In your letter, Exhibit 305, to Mr. Marcell, of March 12th:

> "I spent all day yesterday with the Allocating Committee in Washington so as to acquaint them with full details and have a check on the figures of the allocation of these particular refiners so that the program we are working on would not 3303 in some way show later that these refiners were not standing by their promises. The outlook is good and if we can hold it together, as I think we can, there ought to be a real improvement in the tank car refinery price."

That is what you reported to Mr. Marcell?

A. That is what I stated.

Q. As your objective, isn't that right?

A. That is what I stated to Mr. Marcell.

Q. Yes, and that was true, wasn't it?

A. What I state in that letter?

Q. Yes.

A. Quite so.

Q. Yes. What you were interested in, then, was getting the tank car price up?

A. Not for the purpose of getting the tank car price up, no.

Q. For what purpose?

A. Do you want me to explain that?

Mr. Lewin: Answer the question.

Mr. Chaffetz: Go ahead.

A. The purpose I had was that an independent refiner—you have asked me this question, and I hope you will let me tell it to you—

Mr. Chaffetz: Don't take all day.

3304 Mr. Thomas: I object to the remark of counsel.

The Witness: Do you want the answer?

The Court: Go ahead and answer, without any—

A. To bring the independent refiner into a position where he had an allocation of a quantity of gasoline that he could make, and when he made that gasoline and had no market for it, that was distress or homeless; that, first, he would have a normal demand for that product; that that demand wouldn't be artificially created by dumping it on the market; and the most essential thing was that he, in his location, he, with the quality of his product, he, with the quantity that he had, would be recognized by buyers who were interested in all of those. And if you could not find people who normally and properly, in connection with their allocations, could buy that product, a matter of price was of no consequence. The independent refiner had no place in the industry, and this was an endeavor, Mr. Chaffetz, to give him that place, where he would fit in with his product in the demand for his gasoline, and it would be a normal, proper, recognized demand.

Mr. Chaffetz: Q. And what did the Connally Act have to do with that, then?

A. What did it have to do with that?

3305 Q. Yes, so far as the Mid-Continent was concerned?

A. Why, because, before the Connally Act, the dumping of distress, illegitimate gasoline created a demoralization for the legitimate product of the man who made that product.

Q. Yes, but the Mid-Continent refiner, whose gasoline was not hot, whose gasoline was legal gasoline, he was working under allocations, as you say, and he had some surplus gasoline, as you say. Now, couldn't you have helped him by buying that distress gasoline from him, irrespective of whether the Connally Act was ever passed?

A. You mean with hot gasoline all over the Mid-Continent, you mean with gasoline selling here at two, three, four and five cents below—

Q. What has that got to do with buying the surplus gasoline of the Mid-Continent refiner? It wasn't illegal—

A. Why, for the reason that the Mid-Continent gasoline was gasoline that they had no reason to buy, with that competition of that sort, they would buy from—they were all buyers of gasoline. They paid for the gasoline, however, what price? Distress. The gasoline was bargain gasoline.

3306 Q. Why didn't they pay a fair price for it? This was legal gasoline.

A. Because the supply and demand, and the conditions under which gasoline was selling, it couldn't be a fair price. It was a most unnatural, unfair price.

Q. They could have bought it at the going market price, at any rate, couldn't they?

A. Do you mean to say that with hot gasoline prostrating markets, where the levels were subnormal to three and four cents, that a buyer of gasoline could go to the independent in the Mid-Continent and pay him premiums above the market of two and three cents?

Q. I said he could go and pay him the going market price, whatever it was, couldn't he?

A. I think he did buy that gasoline, where he found it through the broker, at distress prices. He had no reason to pay more than those distress prices. He couldn't pay more.

Q. Now, just a moment, Mr. Arnott. You told me in answer to my question before that you weren't interested in raising the price; what you were interested in, as you said, was to give the independent refiner a normal outlet for his surplus gasoline; isn't that right?

A. That is true, yes.

3307 Q. Regardless of how much hot oil there is on the market, if the independent refiner has a surplus of gasoline and that is legal gasoline—I am talking about the independent refiners in the Mid-Continent—he could get a normal market for that gasoline by major companies buying it, whether or not the Connally Act was ever passed; isn't that true?

A. That is true. You are asking me, however, you want to know what was in my mind, or why he didn't do it—

The Court: You have answered the question.

Mr. Chaffetz: Very well.

Q. The reason you wanted to wait until the Connally Act was passed, was that you knew you couldn't get that tank market price up, you couldn't get the published tank car price up so long as there was hot oil that was competing with the legitimate gasoline that was being sold. Now, isn't that true?

A. Mr. Chaffetz, don't misunderstand me, I am trying to exactly answer your question. You asked me why—

Q. No—

A. If you will bear with me—

Mr. Lewin: Have the question read.

Mr. Chaffetz: I want the Reporter to read that question.

The Court: Just a minute. Read that question, and see if you can answer it.

(Question read by Reporter, as follows:

"The reason you wanted to wait until the Connally Act was passed was that you knew you couldn't get that tank market price up, you couldn't get the published tank car price up so long as there was hot oil that was competing with the legitimate gasoline that was being sold. Now, isn't that true?")

A. That is one reason.

Mr. Chaffetz: Q. Yes. Now, when the Connally Act was passed that did take care of hot oil, didn't it?

A. To a large degree.

Q. To a very substantial degree?

A. To a very substantial degree.

Q. And then before you got to operating the buying program in the Mid-Continent you still had to take care of any surplus or distress gasoline that existed in East Texas, because that would come up and compete with Mid-Continent gasoline; isn't that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And that was done through the activities of Mr. Buckley and the East Texas Refiners' Association, isn't that right?

3309 A. That had something to do with it. It wasn't the entire thing.

Q. The effect of that was to keep gasoline from —at cut prices from coming up into the Mid-Continent and competing with Mid-Continent gasoline, isn't that it?

A. There was a factor that you have to consider.

Q. What was that?

A. There were price wars that were still raging, and in the demoralization of that market, the North and West and other refiners were unable to carry on in Texas and their gasoline was coming up, and that wasn't normal for them.

Q. The Connally Act didn't affect Texas?

A. Yes.

Q. In the demoralization of that market?

A. Yes.

Q. And it did force other refiners to move out?

A. The West and North—

Q. I am including the West and the North—I am going to deal with them as the Mid-Continent, as they were considered by the Tank Car Stabilization Committee—isn't that right?

A. They were in that group.

3310 Q. They were considered as Mid-Continent refiners in the Tank Car Stabilization Committee?

A. The other production wasn't sold in the Mid-Continent. It was largely sold in Texas.

Q. You said in the allocators' meeting: "When I say Mid-Continent that means, as we look at it, North Texas, West Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Kansas, and so forth"?

A. That is quite correct.

Q. Now, the Connally Act kept hot oil from depressing the price in the Mid-Continent area, and in the East Texas buying by major companies there was the East Texas Refiners Association preventing cut-price gasoline from coming out of East Texas and into the Mid-Continent area, isn't that right?

A. That is true.

Q. And then you were able to deal with the prices in the Mid-Continent area through the operation of the Mid-Continent buying program without fear that your activities in the Mid-Continent field would be interfered with, either by hot oil or by East Texas gasoline, isn't that right?

A. I don't like the way you put it, "without fear", I was able to do—the industry was dealing with this situation, and the industry was able—

Q. That was true of the industry as a whole?

3311 A. That was true of the control of hot oil and allocations had a very large part in it.

Q. And then when the purchase of gasoline commenced in the Mid-Continent area on the spot market, you still had to have the full cooperation of the independent refiners who were selling on the Mid-Continent spot market, isn't that right?

A. That was very important.

Q. Because even if the major companies undertook to buy 600 or 700 or 800 cars of gasoline in the Mid-Continent as so-called distress gasoline, if the refiners in the Mid-Continent produced more gasoline on account of the fact that they were selling some of their gasoline to the major companies, your plan wouldn't have worked?

A. Better repeat that question. It is a little involved for me.

Q. Perhaps it was involved. What I am saying is this: The mere purchase of distress gasoline, no matter what quantity, by major companies in the Mid-Continent wouldn't have had the effect of bringing the price up, the spot market price up, if a substantial number of the independent refiners in the Mid-Continent field increased their production after they sold some of their gasoline to the major companies?

3312 A. Of course. Why not?

Q. So you had to have, as you, yourself, pointed out very forcibly at the allocators' meeting, you had to have the cooperation of the independent refiners as a group to restrict the output of surplus gasoline to the amount that the major companies were buying?

A. No. That doesn't state it.

Q. Isn't that true?

A. That doesn't state it.

Q. Isn't it true?

A. Not as you put it.

Q. Is it true in substance?

A. Not as you put it.

Q. Didn't you just say—

If the independent refiners in the Mid-Continent area, finding a new outlet for a portion of their gasoline to the major companies to the extent of 600 or 700 or 800 cars a month, said, "Well, now, we'll produce a little more gasoline than we have been producing, and we will see if we can't sell that in the open market, so we will have in addition to what we had before, our regular customers, we will have our regular customers, and we will sell so much through the committee, the stabilization committee, to the major companies, and then if we can produce a little more, we may be able to force it on the 3313 market, and our total sales will increase;" if they did that, the plan wouldn't have worked?

A. I must answer that, Mr. Chaffetz: It wasn't the plan. That would be a matter of allocation. That is not my plan or their plan. If you are saying to me, "They wouldn't have obeyed the allocation," of course, you are right. The allocation—what they produced, what they were prevented from producing, nothing.

Q. Now, if they could come to you and sell more gasoline, they could raise their allocations?

A. Yes.

Q. That wasn't your concern?

A. No, excepting I wanted to know what those allocations were.

Q. And the reason you wanted to know what those allocations were was because you wanted to be sure that they weren't going to sell some of their gasoline to you, and then increase their production and have the same amount of gasoline available for the market as was available before the major companies were going to buy?

A. What every man in the industry—

Q. I don't care "what every man in the industry"—I want to know what you think of it?

A. But you can't separate me from the rest of the industry.

3314 Q. I can, if the Court permits me.

A. That is true.

Q. Let me read you some of your own language, reading from page 5 of the allocators' meeting, Exhibit 69:

> "And there we come to the principle that we are here to talk to you about, because if there is going to be any movement to consider what is established month in and month out, to be definitely reckoned with, homeless or surplus gasoline and anybody is to give consideration to taking that regularly, and a buyer or an individual could buy that product from a refiner or an individual seller, then it can't be expected that if it is brought about in an organized way, in a month or two months we are going to be informed that it is unfortunate but there is some more accumulation in somebody's tanks, and therefore this matter of what has accumulated in the tanks of any group of refiners, if dealt with, if removed, if taken out of the picture, immediately becomes question that it must not be duplicated and again accumulated, because then we would have a sub-structure or an understructure that would be undermining everything constructive that we are trying to do."

Do you remember that speech of yours?

A. That is, what I referred to—

Q. By counseling dealing with surplus gasoline, you were dealing with the subject of a buying program?

A. I was dealing with the quantity of gasoline those people would have to sell.

Q. And you wanted to be sure they didn't have any more to sell after you had bought the amount of distress gasoline you wanted to buy?

A. Yes, that is absolutely so.

Q. So we have this situation: You had to be sure when you started this buying program that when sales were made through the committee, or, purchases were made through the committee by the major companies of so-called surplus gasoline, that the independent refiners throughout the Mid-Continent would not thereupon increase their production and try to force that increased production on the market, isn't that right?

3316 A. You would have to obey the allocations.

Q. And to get increased allocations?

A. That was quite all right, if they had the demand and could justify it. That was for the allocators, not for me.

Q. Yes. Now, another factor besides this question of restricting the amount of surplus to a known, definite amount, as you described it: If the independent refiners in the Mid-Continent sought, we will assume, to increase their sales during the time that the buying program is functioning, by cutting the price—suppose they want to take customers away from each other or from the major companies and they said, "The price today is 1¢ higher than it was a few weeks ago. A few weeks ago we were selling gasoline at 4¢, and the price today is 4½¢. We will shade the price to 4¼¢ and get more business;" if the refiners in the Mid-Continent area in any substantial number or to any substantial extent engaged in that kind of practice, it would have defeated the purpose of the buying program, wouldn't it?

A. I don't think I can quite catch the significance of that. Better read it.

The Court: Read it.

A. Rather vague.

3317 (Question read by the reporter.)

A. I don't understand the question.

Mr. Chaffetz: Q. Suppose during the time the surplus gasoline was being purchased by the major companies through the stabilization committee the independent refiners in the Mid-Continent, selling on the spot market, in order to increase their business, shaded the published spot market price to any substantial extent, the spot market price would not have gone up, would it?

A. No.

Q. And that would have defeated the purchase program, wouldn't it?

A. I can't answer that yes or no. I can't answer yes or no.

Q. You wrote to Mr. Marcell, on March 12th; "The outlook is good and if we can hold it together, as I think we can, there ought to be a real improvement in the tank car refinery price." May I suggest to you that one way in which you had to hold the situation together was to make sure that the independent refiners didn't shave the price so as to prevent the refinery price from going up?

A. The comment in that letter has no reference to this matter of gasoline buying.

3318 Q. It has none?

A. None. That very statement, if you want to ask me what it is—

Q. Let's see. "There has been considerable development in regard to 'homeless' surplus gasoline coming from the three main independent refinery centers, East Texas, Gulf, and Mid-Continent. I have been devoting a great deal of time to this, especially to the Texas end of it, and definite progress has been made which is already reflecting itself in the attitude of these groups which are cooperating in an outstanding way."

You meant the Mid-Continent, East Texas, and Gulf?

A. That is right.

Q. You say, "Which are cooperating in an outstanding way?"

A. That is right.

Q. "I spent all day yesterday with the Allocating Committee in Washington"—

A. That is right.

Q. (continued) "So as to acquaint them with full details." So that was not buying programs?

A. No.

Q. Why did you spend that day with the Allocating Committee?

3319 A. Well, to find out what the allocators legitimately gave these refiners as the proper quantity of gasoline that they would have to offer.

Q. Didn't you testify that you came to that allocators meeting to explain to them their purchase plan?

A. I did not.

Q. Didn't you go to that allocators meeting to tell them what you were doing in respect to major company buying of distress gasoline?

A. I did not.

Q. And you didn't so testify in your direct examination?

A. I did not.

Q. You came to them, why?

A. Do you want me to tell you?

Q. Yes.

A. I explained to you; give me time to tell this, because I don't think you understand it. I came to them from the result of Mr. Buckley, from the result of Mr. Robinson, who came to me, and to the industry, and told us of their difficulties, and said, "This surplus gasoline, we have no place for it." If you will allow me to tell—

Mr. Chaffetz: I will ask your Honor to instruct—3320 The Witness: This has to do with the allocators meeting.

Mr. Chaffetz: He is starting off again in a way with his whole story.

The Witness: I am not. If you will allow me I want to explain—

The Court: Q. You appeared before the allocators meeting?

A. Yes, your Honor.

Q. For what purpose?

A. To tell them, and ask them, as I explained in my testimony, as the result of the talks we had had with these people. "What is the gasoline you are talking about? Are you talking about legitimate gasoline or are you talking about illegitimate gasoline? What is it that you are talking about?" That involves us in what allocations the Government were giving them. So we go to Washington and the purpose to say to Washington, to say, "We want you allocators to hear what these groups are saying to us. They come to us. We don't know what they are trying to say in regard to quantities. Now, allocators, your job is to tell each of these refiners what they can produce. What is it you are giving them the right to produce?"

3321 And that is the reason we went to the allocators,—to tell them we had been approached by these people, and "Mr. Allocator, what is the legitimate quantity of gasoline these people will have the privilege to manufacture?" That is the reason we went, and not about any buying programs.

Q. Let's see what you told Mr. Marcell about it; "I spent all day yesterday with the Allocating Committee in Washington"—

The Court: Who is Mr. Marcell?

A. He is the executive in charge of the White Eagle Division in Kansas City for Socony-Vacuum. This was a letter that I wrote to him in response to his letter to me.

Mr. Chaffetz: Q. You said to him this: "I spent all day yesterday with the Allocating Committee in Washington so as to acquaint them with the full details and have a check on the figures on the allocation of these particular refiners."

A. That is right.

Q. (continued) "So that the program we are working on would not in some way show later that these refiners were not standing by their promises."

A. That is right. Do you want me to explain that further.

Q. No, that explains it sufficiently to me.

3322 A. That is exactly what I said.

Q. In the very next sentence: "The outlook is good and if we can hold it together, as I think we can, there ought to be a real improvement in the tank car refinery price."

Do you mean to tell me, when you referred to the improvement in the tank car refining price you were not referring to the major company's buying of distress gasoline?

A. Do you want me to tell you what I meant?

Q. I want you to answer my question.

A. No.

Q. All right. I will let the jury decide that.

A. I am very willing to tell you what I meant.

Q. I will let the letter speak for itself.

A. You are misinterpreting the letter.

Q. Now, I want to get back to the subject I was dealing with a minute ago. I again say to you that at the time that Mid-Continent buying program commenced to function, if the independent refiners did not cooperate, but instead tried to increase their business by shading the published spot-market price, that price would have gone up, would it?

A. They would ruin their own markets.

Q. Yes, and that would have prevented the 3323 effective functioning of the buying program?

A. People might still have bought this surplus gasoline at the reduced price.

Q. Do you think that the major companies would have continued to buy that gasoline if the price did not go up?

A. Why not?

Q. You think they would?

A. Why not?

Q. I am asking you, you are not asking me.

A. If I am a buyer of gasoline, I will buy at one price, or if I can buy at another price, there is no reason why I should not.

Q. You think that those major companies would have continued to have bought that gasoline, in the same quantity, taking all of this distress gasoline, of 600 or 700 cars a month, even if the price did not go up?

A. I have no reason to think otherwise.

Q. And buy just as regular?

A. That I don't know.

Q. You have no reason to think otherwise?

A. I don't know.

Q. You have no reason to think otherwise?

A. No.

3324 Q. We discussed the situation in January and February. We found that the major companies were not interested in commencing their program in January and February, although presumably the amount of distress gasoline was the same as in March; the same amount was available, so the testimony shows, and if they were each buying only what each of them wanted to buy and needed, they would have bought it in January and February as well as March. I thought we had agreed on that.

A. We have agreed on that as to your assumption of what the majors would have done, but you haven't asked me what I did. You have talked about what the majors would have done. I am not able to tell you why the majors did this or that. You haven't asked me why I didn't do something about it earlier. Is there anything more you want to say—

Q. I want to go back again to the situation in January and February. I want to distinguish it. I want to compare it with the situation in March. We understand each other to the effect that the amount of distress gasoline that was available in January and February was about the same as was available in March. You say major companies always bought 3325 gasoline, but in January and February no program was organized to buy all distress gasoline that was available; isn't that right?

A. That is true.

Q. In March a program was organized and did function, and all the distress gasoline was purchased, isn't that right? I am talking about the Mid-Continent field.

A. To be exact, I am not sure that all of it was. I don't know.

Q. Don't you assume that most of it was?

A. I assume that all of it was. I think some of it was sold in the market.

Q. Practically all of it was bought?

A. Practically all, if you want to be accurate.

Q. I again want to ask you this question; in your opinion, and you were close to the situation would the major companies have bought practically all of the distress gasoline in the Mid-Continent area in March, in a program, if they didn't believe that as the result of their purchases the tank car price—the published spot market price wouldn't go up?

A. That would only be one factor, and by no means the whole.

Q. I would like an answer to that question.

3326 A. As you ask it, no.

Q. No, you don't think so?

A. I don't think that alone would do it.

Q. You think if the price didn't respond in March, the price didn't respond in April, the price didn't respond in May, the major companies would have continued in that program nevertheless?

A. I have no reason to say that they would not.

Q. You think that they might have?

A. They might have.

Q. Now, you think that they would have continued through the rest of the year, buying distress gasoline, in whatever way they did?

A. I have no reason to suppose what they would do the rest of the year. That is a long time in our business.

Q. But you have no reason to think that they would not.

A. Well, you are asking me to assume a lot for a lot of people. I think that is a difficult question for me to say yes or no to. You asked me what the major companies in the Mid-West are going to do for a year. I will say, no. I am in no position to answer that kind of a question.

Q. You said you could answer it for January, February, March, April, and May, for 5 months; you can answer it for 5 months, but not for a year.

3327 A. That is a very peculiar way of putting it.

Q. Now I want to assume for a moment that the purpose of the buying program was to get the—as you said in your letter to Marcell, to get real improvement in the tank car refinery price.

Mr. Donovan: I object to the form of that question, your Honor. There is no such thing as that said in the letter. I object to that assumption.

The Court: Take the letter. Get the correct language.

Mr. Chaffetz: Q. You said, in your letter to Marcell here, "The outlook is good and if we can hold it together, as I think we can, there ought to be a real improvement in the tank car refinery price."

A. I asked you to ask me what I meant by that.

Q. I don't care what you meant by it. I will let the letter speak for itself. I want to assume now that what you meant by it is what I thought by it, and what I am going to ask the jury to think what you meant by it.

Mr. Donovan: I object to the question, your Honor. I object to the question. This man is appearing here as a witness. He is a witness who is testifying as to facts. He should be asked simply as to facts, and not assumptions, and particularly assumptions that do not exist.

Mr. Chaffetz: Counsel wants to assume we can—

The Court: Let's have no discussion. State your question and I will rule on it. Did you finish the question?

Mr. Chaffetz: I will ask a new question.

3328 Frankly, I don't just recall the companies that participated in the Mid-Continent buying program. I remember Jacobi named them when he was on the stand. I didn't follow up and ascertain who bought the gasoline, so I am not sure I can list those who participated with any intelligence. I can list those that I think might have been buyers, but to actually say I know they were, I can't say that I can. I knew some of the companies who were buying in the Mid-Continent buying program.

The ones that I knew were buying in the Mid-Continent buying program were: I think Standard Oil Company of Indiana was one. I knew Socony-Vacuum Oil Company did. Cities Service and Continental Oil Company, I wouldn't know. Gulf Company, I would say I don't think they did in the Mid-Continent. The Pure Oil Company, yes, I think they did. Sinclair Refining Company, I knew they bought some. Texas Company and Tide Water, I wouldn't know. I think Mid-Continent did. I know Phillips Petroleum Company did. Skelly Oil Company and Barnsdall, I wouldn't know. Now, you have The Globe Oil & Refining Company here. I think I remember that they did do some buying; and I think Deep Rock Oil Company did some buying. I have named only those that 3329 I know of my own knowledge bought, or that I knew about at the time as having participated.

I didn't talk with any individuals connected with any companies concerning the subject of the Mid-Continent buying program during this period in 1935 and 1936. I don't remember talking with any of them. I don't remember having any occasion to go to them about their buying gasoline. If I ever did talk with any, it must have been a here and there, very informal mention of it, but I never had any definite approach to any of them on that matter, and I am very sincere in that statement.

Mr. McDowell is a representative of Mid-Continent. He was on that committee. If you mean in that respect, I can say this, I did talk with some of the committee.

In respect to the Socony-Vacuum people, I did talk with them. Among the Socony-Vacuum people, I talked with Mr. Ashton. I may have talked with Mr. Jones. I don't doubt that I did. He was the man responsible for executing the policies of our company, with reference to the buying program. I wouldn't exactly say he was the man in my company with whom I talked about our participation in the buying program, because that matter was in his hands entirely, but I no doubt talked with him. I don't remember any occasion of talking to Mr. Brown. I 3330 may have, but I don't remember any occasion. I talked to Mr. Marcell, Mr. Irwin, Mr. Bryan Reid, and Mr. Maguire. I would say each of these gentlemen whom I have named was fully familiar with the subject and knew that it was the policy of our company to participate. They were the heads of their individual divisions and were responsible for the participation of their own division in the buying program. They were buyers.

I don't remember particularly discussing it with Mr. Ewing. His interest was entirely in the East, and I don't think I would have any occasion to discuss it with him. I may have, I wouldn't deny it, but I don't recall it.

I don't remember discussing it with anybody in the Indiana Company. I don't think I did. I did not talk with Mr. Bullock about it. My contacts with Mr. Bullock are very infrequent. I didn't attend any of these meetings;

I never had occasion to talk with people. That was done by the Tank Car Stabilization Committee. I didn't get into that fully.

Now, Cities Service, I don't remember talking to anybody about that. Not Mr. Frueauff. I would have no occasion. Mr. Frueauff's interests, in my estimation, were entirely eastern. In discussing with him the East Texas situation, I don't think I discussed with him the 3331 Mid-Continent situation. I don't remember at that meeting of having occasion to discuss the activities of this Committee.

In Continental Oil Company, I may have discussed that with Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Cramer. I have a distinct recollection of, some place or other, discussing it, because they were gentlemen I didn't see very frequently; they are out in that Rocky Mountain region. And I remember something about it—I am not clear, but I would say that I did talk to both of them. I rather got the impression that they weren't very sympathetic with it. That is the reason I remembered it, because there was something I think they raised with me, that they knew of it, and didn't seem to be very enthusiastic about it. I would say that that meeting was right in this period, maybe March or April or May; that would be a guess, but it might be along in there.

Gulf, I don't remember, because they are not very active out here, as you know; Michigan, mostly, and Indiana; and I don't think they would be interested.

As to Pure Oil Company, I may have talked with Mr. Morris about that. I remember them as being substantial buyers, and I think probably I talked to Mr. Morris. I never mentioned it to Mr. Dawes. I don't 3332 talk very often with Mr. Dawes about company operations. He and I were members of the P. and C. Committee. He was in Washington during that time. I saw him very frequently down there. I don't think I discussed with him at that time the subject of the buying program. Really, our activities down there were night and day, and we discussed many things—This was one of the things we discussed. This is very important to Government counsel; as to us, it was not very important. As to the buying program, I don't remember speaking to Mr. Dawes at all. I don't talk with Mr. Dawes in regard to operation matters but very, very seldom, because his company is, as I observe it, managed by gentlemen who are in those various relations, in charge.

I may have discussed it with Mr. Watson, probably I did. I can't remember when, but, having in mind his relations to that business, I wouldn't say that I didn't. I think it is fair to assume that I did.

Now, in regard to Mr. McElroy—you see, I have stated that I sent an invitation to The Pure; and I can't remember whether or not they were at the meetings. Now, if they were at the meeting in New York, Mr. McElroy was there; then, of course, I did; but I can't be sure.
3333 I can't remember that I talked with McElroy at any time other than during the meetings—there again, I don't see Mr. McElroy very often.

Now, Sinclair Refining Company, I did talk with Mr. Carnes.

Wherever there was a meeting on this subject, with reference to buying, either in East Texas or the Mid-Continent, where major companies were represented and I was there, I would say that almost invariably Mr. Carnes was there. Mr. Carnes was very active in stabilization, and represented very large interests all over the country.

The subjects I discussed with Mr. Carnes were of independent refiners, allocations, surplus gasoline, finding buyers for them, and hoping to see them get a fair realization for their gasoline, all within that scope. I may well have said I hoped the tank car prices would improve. I think if I talked with Mr. Carnes about these buying programs, one of the important things I talked with him about was the level of tank car prices in connection with parity to crude. I didn't go into questions of what the levels of spot markets were. When I use the term "net back to the refinery," I mean the price at which the gasoline is at that refinery. When I started this work with reference to 3334 buying gasoline, what I said was that a matter of great concern to all of us is the matter of net back at the refinery. I meant by that the price for gasoline that they got at the refinery, "all of us," independents and otherwise. I wouldn't say otherwise.

I had no occasion to talk with Texas Company.

I don't remember talking with Tide Water. I rarely see Mr. Shea. I had a talk with Mr. Shea once, in regard to the deplorable refinery situation in Texas, but not on this matter. I did not talk with Mr. Noel Robinson. He was present at the allocators' meeting; he was an allocator. He participated in the discussion with me of that subject at that meeting on March 13. I think that was the only occasion when I met him. I do recall one other occasion where he came into a meeting and was there for a little while.

Mid-Continent, yes, I talked with Mr. McDowell and only Mr. McDowell. I never talked with Mr. Jacob France. I very seldom see him. I never met Mr. Fitzgerald until I came out here. He is assistant to Mr. McDowell, I believe.

Phillips Petroleum Company, I talked with Mr. Phillips. I couldn't say when. I would say 1935. No, about 1936, I don't know. I talked with him very infrequently. I 3335 don't want to offer more than you want, but I can always explain the why of these things.

The conversation with Mr. Frank Phillips was that he is a very large buyer of gasoline, has a very wide distribution; and I pointed out the fact that here was this distress gasoline. We knew they bought from one or two people, and we called his attention to the fact that this gasoline, his distribution of gasoline was very general, and he had a very general business all through this territory; and it would be a very fine thing if he would take that gasoline into consideration.

I don't think I know Mr. Gardner. I may, but I don't think I do. I may have mentioned it to Mr. Hughes, but my recollection is that at that time Mr. Hughes was not in the relation he is now. There was another gentleman, Mr. Trower, I think I did talk to him about the subject, although Mr. Trower had a very serious accident and nearly died, and we saw very little of him after that period. That was about the time when Mr. Hughes took his place; but there was an interval there when there didn't seem to be anybody but Mr. Phillips to talk with. It was at one of the meetings we had, when Mr. Trower was hit by a train. I can't remember which meeting it was, but one of those Chicago meetings. And it was during the interval after that, that Mr. Phillips was about the only man I could 3336 find to talk to. That would be in 1935.

I think I appointed Mr. Hughes on the Tank Car Stabilization Committee. I did not have any talk with him about the subject at that time.

I didn't discuss it with any member of the Committee, except Mr. McDowell, Mr. Ashton, and Mr. O'Shaughnessy.

Mr. O'Shaughnessy did not say that his company would participate, because the Globe Company has been, to me, an independent; and it wouldn't occur to me to talk to an independent about buying an independent's gasoline. Although I heard later that he was a buyer and had bought some gasoline, for some reason; I couldn't tell you why; it seemed at the time rather unusual to me. It was distress gasoline, bought in the Mid-Continent buying program.

Skelly, I don't remember talking with them. I know Mr. Skelly. I don't recall talking to him about it. I didn't see Mr. Skelly very often.

Barnsdall, I have no recollection there. I know Mr. Reeser. He was a member of the P. and C. Committee. He was in Washington at times, in the spring of 1935. I don't think I talked with him during that period about the Mid-Continent buying program. I have no recollection of it.

3337 Deep Rock. There again, as in the case of Globe, I was surprised that they were buyers. I heard, I think Mr. Majewski told me, that they were buyers in the way Globe were buyers of distress gasoline from independent refiners, in the Mid-Continent buying program. Apparently they needed gasoline for some reason or other, and I heard they had bought some from some refiner—I don't know whom.

I would say I paid more attention to the East Texas situation, personally. I would say that Mr. Buckley contacted me after the Code expired. I continued my interest in that subject.

The following were buyers of East Texas gasoline:

Cities Service Company, I believe, bought. Gulf Refining Company bought East Texas gasoline. The Pure, I wouldn't know. Shell, no. Sinclair bought gasoline. I couldn't tell you what Texas Company did. I think Tide Water Company did. That is all I can remember at the moment.

I think those are the companies that these gentlemen that I have spoken of had talked to, and that were asked to buy this surplus gasoline. Some of them did buy 3338 it. Those I named are the ones that I learned in one way or another, had bought.

I would say no as to Continental. I don't know whether they bought any.

As to Cities Service, I didn't discuss the subject of the purchase of surplus gasoline in East Texas with anybody in that company. I learned that incidentally. I discussed the subject of buying surplus gasoline in East Texas with Mr. Frueauff. He was at the meeting. I did not discuss it with him on other occasions, only when he was at the meetings. I never saw him outside the meetings, about it. There were several meetings. And I remember thanking Mr. Coates for Mr. Buckley's services. He is with Cities Service Company. I don't know anybody else in Cities Service that I could think of discussing it with.

Mr. Frueauff at the time of those meetings was apparently not at all in sympathy with buying in East Texas. I don't remember his saying that his company would go along if the other companies did. He didn't say that to me, or in my presence.

Gulf would be Mr. Hartmann. The times I contacted
Mr. Hartmann on the subject of the buying of sur-3339 plus gasoline in East Texas were: He was at the meetings of March 6th and March 13th. He was at the meeting of February 25th at Chicago, but there was no discussion there that I had with him. Mr. Buckley made a speech there. I personally had no conversation with him. I had no private discussion with anybody at that meeting.

Mr. Hartmann was at the meeting of March 13th. He was one of the committee I appointed to go down to Washington. And the following meeting, on the 15th, Hartmann was there; and then from there on, I may have seen him here or there, because he was, as you know, chairman of the Code Committee in the East. On occasion I must have seen him but I have no recollection of that. And I recall having a personal conference or discussion with him on March 20th. I remember a very short conversation there. I don't remember whether he was at the May 29th meeting. He was a very good attendant at the meetings, because he was very active in stabilization and in the Code work. As I say, he was chairman of the Eastern Division of Marketing.

The Shell was Mr. Gould—and I don't remember anybody else even though there was a change.

I remember that there was somebody from the Pure there, but I can't remember who; and I don't think 3340 they were there at all the meetings. But, whoever was there, I would have had a talk with. Now, I can't say whether it was Mr. Watson or Mr. Morris or Mr. McElroy, or anybody else. I wouldn't say that I remember seeing those three gentlemen at various meetings.

All I remember, at one meeting, at least, there was somebody from The Pure. It would seem to me that it might have been Mr. Morris—but I dislike to definitely say—because he is in the East, and I think that would be more natural; but I don't like to say, because I am not sure.

I never had a talk with Mr. van der Woude with reference to the buying program. I remember I had a talk with Mr. van der Woude, it may have been late in March or early April, in regard to another matter, but he raised with me the matter of crude oil that the East Texas refiners were applying for, and he did not think that it was a fair thing, and that of course would lead into gasoline; and in that way there was an indirect conversation. But he was directly opposed to any contact with East Texas on anything, crude, gasoline or anything. He said the East Texas refiners were not to be trusted. Mr. van der Woude is the executive, he was not then, head of the over-all Shell Company.

3341 I never discussed the matter with Mr. Alexander Fraser, nor Mr. Lakin. I very seldom contacted Mr. Fraser. There was Mr. van Eeghen who was in charge of that, and he was on the committee. I discussed it with him, but there again there was a change later on, and I do not recall just when. But I never talked with Mr. Lakin that I remember.

Of the Sinclair, Mr. Carnes, a number of times, both during the Code and after. He would be naturally interested in buying gasoline in that way. I would say he would be the chief supporter, or a very interested supporter, in buying gasoline from them. I would say he was. His company is a large buyer of gasoline in Texas, and he was sympathetic with this East Texas Refiners' Association, and would be a buyer direct from those refiners or through this association, one of the largest, I would say.

I think I have completed the list.

Exhibit 311 for identification is the letter that Marcell wrote to me, in response to which I wrote the letter which is Exhibit 305. I would say it was a true copy of the letter I received from Mr. Marcell.

(Document received in evidence as EXHIBIT 311, and read to jury by Mr. Chaffetz.)

3342 Mr. Marcell was the chief executive of the White Eagle Division of Socony-Vacuum Oil Company. And he is located at Kansas City. When he referred to "stabilization program" in Exhibit 311 he was referring to these meetings that I had had in December, and to the effect of the conferences at those meetings in stabilizing retail prices and eliminating price wars.

I was not in contact with Mr. Ashton very often between March 1, 1935 and the rest of that year. It is difficult to be exact. I would not suppose it would have been as often as once a month. It might have been, but I would not think it was. I was occasionally in contact with Mr. Ashton during the first few months of 1936. It might have been as often as once a month.

I don't remember any special report by Mr. Ashton on these occasions as to the progress of the Mid-Continent buying program, but usually there was mention of it when I met with Mr. Ashton. I did not know what buying was actually going on by major companies, and I do not recall his specifically telling me. We talked of the plan. But I don't remember any special reference to who was 3343 actually buying or my having occasion to talk with him about the extent of any one company's buying. I do not recall any such conversation as that some companies were buying more and other companies were buying less, or that the other companies were not doing their part. At this time I do not recall his ever discussing with me any conversation that he might have had with any one individual of any of the companies who were participating in the major company buying program in the Mid-Continent. There would not necessarily have been any such conversations.

Mr. Irwin was not at the March 1, 1935 meeting in Kansas City that is referred to in my correspondence with Mr. Marcell; that is, actually at the meeting. He was in the hotel prior to the meeting. I don't remember him at the meeting. He was not there while I was addressing the group.

Q. Well, who was there?

A. The independent refiners.

Q. Can you name them, or any of them?

A. I can name—there were probably 25 or 30 of them. I could not be specific; but they would be a comprehensive group called the No. 2 or independent refiners of the Mid-Continent. That was the endeavor, to have them come in, and we intended to try to get most of them in.

3344 Q. And you think that practically all of them were there?

A. Well, 25 or 30 is a very comprehensive list, that is, as you said, Mid-Continent, meaning West Texas, North Texas and Oklahoma and Kansas and Arkansas, and so forth.

Q. And Northern Louisiana?

A. Yes, and Northern Louisiana.

Q. Do you remember representatives of Root Refining Company there?

A. Well, I can only answer that if the list was supposed to be a comprehensive one likely he was there, but I don't remember specifically.

Q. You don't know specifically?

A. I would point out, Mr. Chaffetz, at that time I knew very few of them. They were strangers to me as I was to them.

Q. Well, you regarded those present as pretty comprehensively covering the independent refiners located in North Texas, West Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Northern Louisiana, Arkansas?

A. That was my intention.

Q. And that was your understanding of the group that was there?

A. Right.

Q. Were there any of those there who indicated any dissent from the plans that you discussed at 3345 the meeting?

A. I did not discuss a plan at the meeting.

Q. Well, I don't want to quarrel with you about terms. From the subject matter of your discussion?

A. There were—

Q. Was there any independent refiner who said he would not have anything to do with it?

A. Root?

Q. No, I said was there anyone there who said that?

A. No, there was not that sort of statement. At the meeting there were many expressions from the floor of the character that attributed their distress of course to this matter, or to that matter, or to many of the things that the industry was having trouble with at that time. It was a meeting of general expression of trouble in their minds that they were meeting in the daily carrying out of their business.

Q. But my point is whether there was anybody who arose at that meeting and said, "I am going to play my own game; I am not going to play along with the group?"

A. I don't remember any expression of that kind on the part of anybody.

3346 Q. And you are pretty sure there wasn't any?

A. Not in that sense, no.

At the moment I can't recall any meeting at which Mr. C. L. Jones was present; not any meeting pertaining to the purchase of distress gasoline from independent refiners either in the Mid-Continent or East Texas or on the Gulf. I do not think he was present at any. He was not specifically invited to either of the New York meetings that were held in March. He was not at the February 25th and 26th meeting in Chicago and I don't think he was at the January meeting in Chicago.

I remember I testified that I saw Buckley in Excelsior Springs on April 4th or thereabouts. The meeting with Mr. McDowell, it does not register with me at all in any particular way that I saw Mr. McDowell at that meeting. If Mr. McDowell testified he met me there he might be quite correct.

When I had that talk with Mr. Cramer and Mr. Kennedy of Continental on the subject of major companies buying gasoline from independent refiners, I did not have in mind that they were the executives of that company who would have authority to act for the company in that connection.

I knew who they were. I am not sure that at that time I knew Mr. Kennedy was in charge of sales, because Mr. Karstedt, whom you have heard of, had been the 3347 company's representative, and I think at that time Mr. Karstedt may have been in his position but not active due to illness. I am not sure that at that time I knew that Mr. Kennedy was taking his place. I may have, but I do not recall that I did. As I understood it, Mr. Karstedt was the one who could speak with authority for his company, and I think would have been the man to contact if I wanted the cooperation of his company in any such plan.

I don't know as I ever questioned whether Mr. Karstedt did have the authority to bind his company, to speak for his company, but I would say that probably was in my mind. That is the way I dealt with him. I eventually learned that subsequently Mr. Kennedy did take Mr. Karstedt's place. Only on this one rather vague occasion did I ever have any contact directly with Mr. Kennedy. I met him somewhere, I cannot recall where, and just had a few moments conversation. I recall what the conversation was only in a general way, that this recommendation of the committee about gasoline seemed a very constructive thing. As I testified the other day, he did not show very much interest. Just referred to it casually, and said yes, he had heard of it.

Mr. Chaffetz: Q. Now, there was a discussion in your testimony of the Sun Oil Company, and it 3348 was brought out that the Sun Company was not a defendant here. To your knowledge did the Sun Company participate in either the Mid-Continent buying program or in the East Texas program?

A. I must say that I cannot refer to the East Texas matter as a program.

Q. Well, it has been referred to by your counsel as a selling program, and we refer to it as a buying program. So I just used the term "program".

A. I only want to keep it separate in my own mind. I do not recall what the Sun Oil Company did in either case.

Q. To your knowledge they did not participate in either situation, as far as you know?

A. As far as I know, no.

I know very little about what Atlantic did do. To my knowledge I don't know that Atlantic Refining Company participated in either the Mid-Continent buying program or the East Texas program. To my knowledge, I could not say whether Standard Oil Company of New Jersey participated in the Mid-Continent buying program or the East Texas buying program. I could not tell you what Pan-American or Richfield might have done or did do. I know very little about what National Refining Company did.

3349 I think I remember a letter sent to me by Mr. Marcell, dated March 27, 1935. I think Exhibit 306 for identification is a true copy of that letter.

The letter was written by L. L. Marcell, who was the general manager of the White Eagle Division of the Socony-Vacuum Company.

(Letter referred to received in evidence as EXHIBIT 306, and read to the jury by Mr. Chaffetz.)

Mobilgas is the regular grade for our company.

Mr. Marcell reported to me on March 27th that, at the prevailing price of gasoline on that day, his company was breaking even. That is what he says—"near even."

The price here on March 27th was an average of 4¾¢ and 5¢, which Mr. Marcell made out to be 4⅞¢; and that is the price that the jobber paid. If you added ½¢ to 4⅞¢, you would have 5⅜¢.

When you get over to the first part of May, you have published prices of 5¼¢ to 5½¢, which would give you an average of 5⅜¢.

Mr. Marcell told me that, at the price level, which later prevailed on May 5, 1935, his company would be making quite a substantial profit. I certainly doubted this.

3350 After May 5th, the price of gasoline continued to go up, and reached a level of 5⅝¢ to 5¾¢, which was ⅜¢ higher than the level at which he said his company would be making quite a substantial profit.

That "set margin of five and a half cents" to which he referred would be the margin that was recognized as the margin that the jobber has to operate on in the sale of gasoline. That was the margin that prevailed in the Indiana territory, or at least in his territory, at that time.

He said that the marketing margin of 5½¢, which is the margin that the jobber gets, would just about permit his marketing department to break even, provided he got the full 5½¢. As I recall it, that 5½¢ margin continued in force throughout this territory through 1935 and 1936.

Charles L. Jones was a vice-president of the company, and a member of the board. I was the same. H. T. Ashton, A. G. Maguire and Bryan Reid were in charge of Mid-Western divisions at that time, under Mr. Jones. Mr. Marcell, that we now are talking of, was one of those.

Men like Maguire and Reid and Ashton would take orders from Mr. Jones. I was not interested in the company's operations at that time.

I referred to a letter to me from Mr. Ickes, dated July 20, 1934, that has been marked for identification as Exhibit 891.

3351 Mr. Chaffetz: If the Court please, there has been so much discussion about this letter that we are inclined to waive objection and offer it, so that it will be in the record.

The Court: It may be received.

Mr. Chaffetz: With permission, I will do that. I will read it to the jury, so that they will have it in mind.

The Court: All right, it may be received.

(Letter previously so marked for identification is received in evidence as EXHIBIT 891.)

Q. I call your attention to the fact that this letter states that the price wars referred to "has resulted in causing petroleum products to be sold below cost in some areas in order to meet unrestrained competition"; and then this, "and has in turn depressed the wholesale market for such products," and ask you whether that doesn't indicate to you that the theory of the writer of this letter was that retail price wars affected the tank car market and not vice versa—so far as this letter is concerned, and not what you may think apart from the letter? Do you understand my question?

A. Quite well. It was not so intended, and I know it wasn't intended.

3352 Q. I am just asking you what the letter says.

A. I don't consider the letter says it.

The Court: All right. Read that again.

Mr. Chaffetz: Q. And has—that is, the price wars—"and has in turn depressed the wholesale market for such products." He says the retail price wars have depressed the wholesale tank car market. Isn't that what this letter says?

A. It does say that.

Q. Yes, and authorizes you—and there is nothing in this letter which says that the tank car prices depressed the retail price.

A. I don't agree with you.

Q. Will you give me the sentence in that letter which says that the tank car price depresses the retail price (handing Exhibit 891 to the witness)?

A. It says that in dealing with the retail price you must consider those, and the depression of the retail price—

Mr. Lewin: Is he reading?

A. (Continuing.) —you must deal with those things that are making the retail price—

Mr. Chaffetz: I didn't ask you what it is intended to say. You agree with me that what you said isn't literally contained in the letter; you 3353 weren't reading from the letter when you stated what the Reporter just read?

A. No, not those actual words, no.

Q. No. Now, I ask you to read from the letter.

A. (Reading.) "To hold public hearings, with a view of ascertaining the elements of conflict that are present, and in a cooperative manner to stabilize the price level to conform to that normally prevailing in contiguous areas."

Q. Now, when he says "—to stabilize the price level to conform to that normally prevailing in contiguous areas"—

A. Let us see that again.

Q. (Passing paper to the witness.) —he means normally prevailing in the areas contiguous to where the retail price wars were raging; isn't that right?

A. Not overlooking the "ascertaining the elements of conflict that are present."

Q. And what were the elements of conflict in the local retail situation?

A. The elements of conflict that were present were the wholesale tank car market, and in this other part, he points out—I will find it here—with relation to its effect on the wholesale market, and 3354 he says here this: "This has resulted in causing—" this very thing—in connection with retail prices and the things that are in conflict and causing—

Q. Are you reading from the letter?

A. I read it to you a minute ago. Shall I read it again?

Q. I am not asking you for your interpretation of the letter.

A. I am not. I am reading it: "This has resulted in causing petroleum products to be sold below cost—"

Q. "—in some areas"?

A. "—in some areas."

Q. He means the retail areas?

A. That is correct, which were very prevalent all through the country.

Q. That is right.

A. "—in order to meet unrestrained competition, and has in turn depressed the wholesale market for such products—"

Q. That is right. What he says is that retail price wars have depressed the wholesale market?

A. That is right. And therefore in dealing with them, to deal with those "elements of conflict that are present." And the elements of conflict that 3355 were present was the tank car subnormal price, below cost.

Q. As I understand it, when you received that letter, you went to a lawyer to find out what the letter meant, is that right?

A. I didn't go to a lawyer to find out what the letter meant.

Q. Why did you go to a lawyer?

A. Because I wanted the advice of that lawyer as to what the letter said, and the benefit, as we generally did, in our planning and coordination activities, of any comments he had to make, and, as I testified, it will be helpful to me to have that in my efforts in cooperative stabilization.

Q. If you had any doubt as to what the letter meant, you could have gone back to Mr. Ickes and have had an amplification?

A. I didn't have any doubt.

Q. You didn't?

A. No, none whatsoever.

Q. As I understand, you kept this letter of July 20th on your desk all the time, is that right, in New York?

A. I kept it among my valuable papers.

Q. You told us you kept it on your desk all of the time?

3356 A. Yes.

Q. You said you also kept the letter of April 2, 1935, on your desk, after you received it? That is Exhibit 980.

A. I am not so sure I said that about the letter of April 2nd.

Q. That was my understanding. Did you keep the letter of April 2nd on your desk?

A. I wouldn't be sure about that; I may have.

Q. You would regard the letter of April 2nd as more authoritative than any letter you got from a lawyer as to what your duties or authority was—were under the letter of July 20th?

A. I don't consider the letter of April 2nd in any such way.

Q. Will you answer the question, please?

A. No, I do not.

Q. You do not consider the letter from the Secretary of the Interior as authoritative with respect to the meaning of the letter of July 20th, as you do an opinion from a lawyer?

A. I don't consider the letter of April 2nd has anything to do with that letter.

Q. You don't consider the letter of April 2nd has anything to do with the July 20th letter?

3357 A. The letter of April 2nd was on an entirely different subject.

Q. Let me read this letter of April 2nd, and find out what it was (reading):

> "I have just received a report from the Petroleum Administrative Board with respect to a moratorium on dealer accounts which is reported to have been arrived at by agreement between the companies supplying the major part of the gasoline sold in the Chicago area."

He is talking about moratorium in Chicago, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And then he says, "although no evidence—"

The Court: What is a moratorium? Tell us what the moratorium is.

Mr. Chaffetz: Q. Will you tell us what the moratorium was?

A. The moratoria he was referring to were moratoria in and around the city of Chicago, where, for reasons of constructiveness, major sellers and their jobbers would have a limited period, say, 30 or 60 days, not to solicit or take on additional business 3358 from dealers. There were certain constructive activities that all the sellers or suppliers of gasoline to dealers wanted to have an opportunity to reach those dealers and talk with those dealers and bring those dealers to a cooperative, constructive effort in connection with stabilization and the Code, and they felt unless they had a limited time to do it, and they could get around, there would be a lot of conflict and misunderstanding. And so the idea was that he says for a limited period the activities of these sellers and their jobbers would be not to take these dealers one from the other, and that is the thing that there was some complaint about, because some of the dealers felt they would like to get in on it—that question was designed to prevent, namely, unfair competition.

Q. Nevertheless, Mr. Ickes thought that constructive work was illegal unless you received special approval?

A. I asked the question.

Q. Let us—.

The Court: Read that letter of April 2nd.

3359 Mr. Chaffetz: (Reading:)

> "I have just received a report from the Petroleum Administrative Board with respect to a moratorium on dealer accounts which is reported to have been arrived at by agreement between the companies supplying the major part of the gasoline sold in the Chicago area."
> Then he says: "Although no evidence has been presented which would definitely establish the basis for the agreement entered into, it is possible that the companies involved are purporting to act under the authorization of my letter of July 20, 1934, authorizing you to designate committees with authority to confer, to negotiate and to hold due public hearings in order to remedy unfair price situations."

So, he states it is possible that you may think you are acting under the authority of his letter of July 20th?

A. He calls attention to that very fact.

Q. Yes. And then he says: (Reading)

> "Several parties have complained to the Petroleum Administrative Board that the moratorium oppresses them. I am not attempting, however, in this letter to pass on the wisdom > 3360 of the moratorium. The matter that at present concerns me is the necessity of complying with the requirements of the basic law. In authorizing the formulation of a stabilization program, I necessarily conditioned the authority granted, by providing that the requirements of Clause 2 of Subsection (a) of Section 3 of the National Industrial Recovery Act should be observed. I know you will appreciate that agreements between supplying companies which might be in conflict with the anti-trust laws of the United States require specific approval after due consideration if companies are to receive the protection afforded by Section 4 and 5 of the National Industrial Recovery Act."

The last statement I read is a general statement of the law as Mr. Ickes read it?

A. Quite right.

Q. Then, he refers to agreements between suppliers of gasoline which might have been in conflict with the anti-trust laws, and he says they would require specific approval?

A. No doubt about it.

3361 Q. No doubt about it. And then he says:

> "I understand that the temporary character of a number of situations and the need for immediate action has made formalized agreements impracticable and in a number of instances they may be unnecessary."

That is in the case of a situation of a "temporary character" where "the need for immediate action has made formalized agreements impracticable and in a number of instances they may be unnecessary."

> "However,—"

And he is not talking about moratoriums now. He is talking about the general application of the law to your activities, generally?

A. Quite right.

Q. (Reading:) "However, when the understandings arrived at a bases of solution of price wars affecting the industry over a considerable area—"

That is the first qualification he suggests, where anything is done which will affect the industry over a considerable area—

> "—are intended to operate over a definite period of time or involve substantial changes in the policy of the various supplying companies made only in consideration of similar action on the part of other companies—"

3362 That is where you don't have a formal agreement, but where one company takes action in reliance on the fact that another company is taking similar action, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. (Reading) "—it is necessary that the procedure required by the Recovery Act be followed in order that the arrangement be legal."
And then he says, "If any such agreements have been made I should like a report as to them."
He is not asking only for a report as to the moratorium—

A. No.

Q. —he wants any agreements?

A. Yes.

Q. That falls within the scope of that letter?

A. Quite right.

Q. (Reading:) "If they require approval to be effective, as my information leads me to believe is the case with respect to the moratorium, I should be glad to give consideration to them under the provisions of the Act."

And he says there that he is inclined to think that your moratorium, which he says in his own letter 3363 applied only to Chicago and which you say was to last only for a temporary period of time, he expresses an opinion that that limited activity would require specific approval, in order for it to be legal, isn't that what he says?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Here is what he says; "If they require approval to be effective—"

A. If they do.

Q. "—as my information leads me to believe is the case with respect to the moratorium—"

So he thinks that is true of the moratorium, that it needs approval, isn't that right?

A. No.

Q. He says, "—as my information leads me to believe is the case with respect to the moratorium—"

A. Did he get other information that changed his mind?

Q. Upon the basis of what he wrote in this letter—

A. Upon the basis of what he wrote in that letter as stated.

3364 Q. (Reading:) "—I should be glad to give consideration to them under the provisions of the Act."

A. Exactly.

Q. (Reading:) "I appreciate greatly your cooperation—" and so forth.

Mr. Donovan: Will you read the last paragraph?

Mr. Chaffetz: Surely.

Q. (Reading:) "I appreciate greatly your cooperation with the Administration in taking on the difficult work of directing a program of stabilization and I know that you will understand that this action is necessary in order to comply with the requirements of law with which I am charged with administrative responsibility.

"Sincerely yours, Harold L. Ickes, Administrator."

A. That is perfectly clear.

Mr. Chaffetz: That is all, your Honor.

A. There is one other thing, your Honor, one other matter I have neglected to tell you. In addition to local and surrounding Cook County mora-3365 toria, there was another temporary one in regard to some form of contract. It was called a "5 year agency contract"—rather complicated to tell you but that also is a part, also a part of the moratoria. There were more than one, in other words, and while the first one was in Chicago, the other was an important larger district, as a matter of fact, all through the Mid-Continent.

Mr. Donovan. Now, your Honor, in view of what has transpired this morning, I would like to have your Honor's ruling on the offer of the opinion which is referred to again by Mr. Arnott as brought out by the questioning of Mr. Chaffetz.

The Court: There was an objection made to that, and that objection is sustained.

Mr. Donovan: Your Honor said that you were going to consider that.

The Court: I have considered that—you (addressing Mr. Chaffetz) objected to that?

Mr. Chaffetz: We objected—this Titus letter?

Mr. Donovan: Yes.

Mr. Chaffetz: We object to that.

Mr. Donovan: Your Honor, there has been this 3366 morning another discussion and argument with the witness by counsel as to what was meant by that letter.

The Court: Well, I am not going to hear discussion on that. The objection to that letter, Exhibit 892, of the lawyer is sustained. Exception allowed.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Donovan.

Q. You recall the circumstances under which that letter of July 20th was written?

A. I do.

Q. Will you state them?

A. A short time prior to the writing of that letter members of the Petroleum Administrative Board called upon the Planning and Coordination Marketing Committee and stated that, after conference with Secretary Ickes, they wished to discuss with them and with me what had become of a most serious situation. They pointed out that the price wars, which were raging throughout the country, and particularly in the Mid-West, had reached a point where something had to be done.

The Court: When was that?

A. This was, to be exact, around the 9th of July, 3367 a short time after the writing of this letter.

Mr. Chaffetz: A short time before the writing of the letter?

Mr. Donovan: Q. Before the writing of the letter?

A. Before the writing of the letter, about July 9th.

Mr. Chaffetz: 1934?

A. 1934. They stated that the conditions, as they were going, were getting out of hand. That is, compulsory observation of the Code was something that the Petroleum Administrative Board and the enforcement agents could not cope with; that they felt it was so prevalent now, that it was physically impossible for the Administrator to deal with these problems all over the country. On the other hand, the industry, itself, and its organization, were present in each state, town, and corner, and that they had come to the conclusion that the only practical and proper way—in fact, the only way at this time they saw a way out, was to try to bring about a voluntary, cooperative effort, and they asked me personally whether I would take on that responsibility. That it was something that if we could do it in an organized way, that they had failed in compulsion, 3368 and they thought if we could get the industry to rally to a voluntary, cooperative effort, that they might have an opportunity to bring some sort of order in what was going on. Shall I go on with the conversation?

Q. Yes, will you please?

A. In the conversation that took place on that initial approach to me and to the Marketing Committee of the Planning and Coordination Committee there was a distinct consideration of the elements that were causing these raging price wars. At the time the entire Mid-West was more than an average—all through the West—of over 2¢ below normal. I will just point out that means how low some of the sub-normal prices must have been to have such a sub-normal.

Q. Sub-normal price in which market?

A. In the retail market. It was pointed out in the discussion of how to deal with the price wars that the element that was outstandingly important was the wholesale market and the matter of sub-normal tank car markets and distress gasoline, and hot oil, as we have covered here.

3369 I remember distinctly, in discussing the possibility of getting voluntary cooperation effort on the part of the retailers to restore them to normal, the discussion of what would likely have to be done in order to deal with it from the point of view of the thing that mostly caused it—distress gasoline, and very sub-normal tank car markets—

Q. And did you discuss that at that time?

A. Most thoroughly. As a matter of fact, the policy, or the outstanding basic idea that they were so closely related—inter-related that you could not deal with the retail price without dealing with the wholesale price; and again you could not deal with the wholesale price without dealing with the retail price.

So the matter of the most of the discussion—and I can't but emphasize, I pointed out it would be impossible to intelligently deal with the restoration of retail markets without going right to this basic fundamental trouble.

So it was stated, "You were quite right. We can't sit here and tell you, if you are willing to take on the responsibility and going out and dealing with these price wars and restore prices to normal—we 3370 can't tell you how to do it and in what manner to do it. We will authorize you to go deal with these refiners and deal with the elements that conflict that cause them."

And it was distinctly and knowingly in my mind, and I will say here and now, I would not have embarked on undertaking any such endeavor unless that had been distinctly understood and recognized as one of the outstanding problems we had to deal with in dealing with the restoration of retail prices.

Q. Mr. Arnott, Mr. Chaffetz has talked with you at some length about the letter of April 2nd. Did you consider that the letter of April 2nd related to buying activities?

A. No, I did not. I explained the buying activities in my meetings on March 12th, and there is no mention in that letter of those buying activities.

Q. To what did you consider the letter of April 2nd referred?

A. The letter of April 2nd had to do with the question of complaints that had come in from some of the dealers, and some of the dealers in the Chicago—in the more general territory, about the mora-3371 toria, which I had fully explained to them eventually, and which they were quite satisfied with.

In my cross-examination I stated with reference to companies which I thought bought gasoline in East Texas this: "That the Cities Service Company, I believe, bought." What I meant to say was that the company which I thought bought was the Cities Service Export Oil Company, which was a subsidiary of the Cities Service Company.

Q. On your cross-examination, I think it was pages 1743 to 1744, you were asked as to whether you had consulted some magazine report in which the Administrator was reported to have said something as to the legality of a particular program in November, 1934, and you answered that you had heard something said to that effect; is that your complete recollection?

A. No, it is not.

Q. What else do you recall, if anything?

A. I recall a statement made by the Secretary in regard to a buying program that had been instanced by the members of the Petroleum Administrative Board and the Assistant to the Secretary which had to do with the buying of all the gasoline of independent refiners in East Texas; and that this program 3372 involved not only the buying of all that gasoline but also probably involved the buying of hot gasoline. Quite a dispute arose between members of the Petroleum Administrative Board who were in Texas and the members of the Department of Justice who were down there as to the legality of any such buying that had to do with all the gasoline of these refiners, and also the legality of buying hot gasoline, and the Secretary made the statement that he would not approve any such buying program.

During 1935 and 1936, I read Platt's Oilgram more or less consistently.

Q. I show you a copy of the Oilgram dated March 29, 1935, and direct your attention to a statement purported to Mr. Ickes and ask you to read it. (Document handed to the witness for examination.)

Now I just ask you if you ever heard of such a statement being made by Mr. Ickes?

A. I did.

Mr. Donovan: I offer that in evidence.

Mr. Chaffetz: I object to it. I would like the Court to read it.

3373 The Clerk: Number 983.

Mr. Donovan: I asked him if he had ever heard of such a statement.

(Conference at the bench between the Court, Mr. Donovan and Mr. Chaffetz out of the hearing of the jury, after which the Court examines the Exhibit.)

The Court: Objection sustained. Exception allowed.

After this letter of April 2nd I had a meeting with Mr. Fahy and Mr. Majewski and Mr. Collett on May 10th. It was on May 10th that I discussed the buying with Mr. Fahy and at that time he raised no objection to what I was doing.

Recross Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

Q. At the time that letter of July 20, 1934, was addressed to you, the subject of distress gasoline was being handled by the P. A. B., in an entirely separate and distinct way; isn't that right?

A. That is correct.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Donovan.

That way in which it was being handled under the programs of the Oil Administrator, as I have already testified to, was taking place in the year 1934. And those programs at that time were such as I have already described here in testimony.

3374 Mr. Chaffetz: Q. And they were not operated by you?

A. Not operated by me.

Q. Somebody else was authorized to deal with those?

A. That is true.

Q. And the first connection you had with any buying program was the one we have been discussing in this case, beginning in the spring of 1935?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Donovan: Q. And which you described on March 12th to the P. A. B., and in which you say they cooperated with you?

A. That is correct.

3375 JAMES D. COLLETT, a witness for the defendants, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Donovan.

I am president of O'Keefe and Collett Corporation, independent producers. I also operate independently as an individual. By "independent producer", I mean that in our operations we are not affiliated with any major corporation. I have never held any executive position with any major oil companies.

We have been operating in crude oil production since 1917. O'Keefe and Collett Corporation succeeded a corporation that had operated under the name of O'Keefe and Collett. The nature of the business is the purchase of leases which we think are favorable for the production of oil, the drilling of wells, producing of the property, and the selling of our production.

I am a member and a director of the American Petroleum Institute and of the Independent Petroleum Association of America. I have been a member of the Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association ever since it was organized about 20 years ago. At present and for 4 years I have been president of General Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association. The functions of those Associations are along the line of the usual trade associations, such as keeping the industry acquainted with the situation in the business, accumulation of statistical data, and general educational work. 3376

During 1935 I had another connection with the oil industry. Under the Code, and from the time the Code personnel was organized, I was general chairman of Region 4, consisting of the states of Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas and New Mexico. The Code structure we had at that time was similar to the general organization, being practically a miniature of the Planning and Coordination Committee in Washington, with its sub-committees. We had regional committees covering that region for production, marketing, refining and labor, and at the last, committees under them; and then branching out into local committees, covering all those various phases of the business.

I was appointed a member of the Planning and Coordination Committee in April, 1934. From June, 1934 until September I served as acting chairman of the P. and C. Committee in the absence of the regular chairman. In December, 1934, I was elected chairman of the committee and served as chairman until the end of the Code.

During the time that I was chairman of the P. and C. Committee I was informed and knew that major companies were buying from the independent refiners in the Mid-Continent field. I would consider the refiners in Kansas, Oklahoma, North Texas, North Louisiana and Arkansas as being in the Mid-Continent field.

3377 I was informed that Mr. Arnott had some connection with those activities. This was, I think, early in 1935. I cannot say as to the exact date that he spoke of it. I knew of it in March, if not earlier. He did not inform me of the nature of his activities in detail. I understood they were in connection with stabilization work. At that time Mr. Arnott was a member of the P. and C. Committee, and was also chairman of that Committee's marketing committee.

In March, 1935 Mr. Arnott discussed with me the subject of stabilization of the wholesale gasoline market. It was about the time of the allocators' meeting.

I understood that he discussed the matter at the district allocators' meeting. I did not know of my own knowledge because I was only in the meeting when it opened. On that particular day, the Planning and Coordination Committee was in session. I was chairman of that committee and I left the allocators' meeting to preside at the P. and C. Committee meeting. I opened the allocators' meeting, introduced Mr. Arnott to the members, and then went back to the other meeting.

In late January, 1935 I was advised of the formation of the East Texas Marketing Association. The first such advice I remember was from Dr. Lederer, who had been and was the refinery allocator in East Texas. I had some discussion with Dr. Lederer and with Mr. Coates of the Cities Service with respect to the plan of the East Texas refiners and Mr. Buckley. I did not talk with Mr. Buckley about it.

3378 I was at one time asked to help get Mr. Buckley in touch with Mr. Arnott. Dr. Lederer asked me to find where Mr. Arnott was. I located Mr. Arnott's address at Pinehurst, and told Dr. Lederer where he was. And then, so far as I knew, he got them together. I had nothing to do with it further than that.

I was in Court when Mr. Arnott described a meeting between certain members of the Petroleum Administrative Board and certain members of the Stabilization Committee, which occurred at Mr. Fahy's office in Washington on May 8, 1935. I attended that meeting. I was asked to attend it as Chairman of the P. and C. Committee, as a part of the activities of the committee. Arnott and other members of the Stabilization Committee were going there for the conference, and he asked me to go along. I have stated here that I heard Arnott's testimony as to what occurred at that meeting. My recollection accords with his, as he testified here on the stand.

I attended a conference with Mr. Arnott, Mr. Majewski and Mr. Fahy, Chairman of the Petroleum Administrative Board, on May 10, 1935. Arnott's buying activities were discussed at this meeting which was called for the following reason. The Secretary of the Interior had appointed a committee to make an investigation and report on the effects of the Code on small industries. That report had been made to the Secretary, and a copy had been sent 3379 to our Committee with the request that we consider it.

Then Mr. Fahy asked for a conference with the members of the P. and C. Committee as to the report. The Committee appointed Mr. Arnott, Mr. Majewski and myself as the members of a committee to confer with Mr. Fahy on the report.

The meeting had something to do with the discussion of buying. That came up in the discussion of the phase of the report which dealt with refining.

> The Court: Just a minute. Just confine your discussion to buying, without making any reference at all to the Blazer report; just state what was said.

The discussion was about the improvement in the situation regarding the gasoline held by the independent refiners; that there had been some buying under way that had improved the situation, and had to a certain extent diminished the complaints from the independent refiners.

There was a discussion there of other factors that might have contributed to the stabilization of the tank car market at that time. That discussion was in reference to the refinery allocations and the improvement in that respect.

There had been a successful effort, as has been testified by other witnesses, to reduce the refinery allocations, to get the total of the inventories along in the spring of 3380 the year down to what the Bureau of Mines and our statisticians had considered the proper balance with demand. That was mentioned in the discussion as another element that improved the situation. The refinery allocations first went into effect along in June, 1934, I believe.

From my knowledge of the circumstances at this time, I would say that it was not true that this buying in the spring of 1935 was conducted secretly, without the knowledge of the Petroleum Administrative Board. It was conducted openly and the Petroleum Administrative Board knew about it. I knew that the Petroleum Administrative Board did know about it because I had been present with members of the Board on more than one occasion when it was mentioned.

As Chairman of the Planning and Coordination Committee, I was usually, so far as general P. and C. Committee activities, the contact man between the industry and the Petroleum Administrative Board.

The activities under the Code naturally all concentrated in the P. and C. Committee, if they called for any action by the Committee at large. They came from sub-committees of our P. and C. Committee; perhaps the Labor Committee, the Refinery Committee, Marketing, or Production. Whatever recommendations these committees made were brought up for consideration by the P. and C. Committee as a body.

That was the main Code body representing the entire 3381 industry throughout the United States. All of the subcommittees throughout the country, in the various branches of the industry, were sub-committees operating under the P. and C. Committee, and had been selected by them.

Our job there was to consider all of the different problems that came up in the industry, and make recommendations to the Administrator as to interpretations of the Code as it then existed. Another one of the jobs was the consideration of amendments to the Code.

In the beginning, the Code as originally written was not quite extensive enough to cover all of the different activities that it really undertook to cover. The P. and C. Committee made recommendations to the Administrator in reference to such amendments to the Code as might be necessary, such as the Refinery Amendment. That originated with the Committee; it was put into shape and recommended to the Administrator, and the Administrator approved it.

Then, when we thought an order might be necessary to improve the functioning of the Code or to carry out its provisions, we would suggest the issuance of such and such an order by the Administrator.

As to changes brought about in the industry during the first few months of 1935, by reason of this particular activity of the Planning and Coordination Committee, I think probably one of the prime factors in it was the refinery allocations. We had a system of allocations of the 3382 total gasoline supply for the United States, based upon what the Bureau of Mines estimated to be the normal demand for the succeeding month. Those figures were given to us, and, under the Refinery Amendment, the Allocating Committee allocated to the refinery districts of the country the amount of gasoline which they thought properly belonged to those particular districts.

There were representatives from each one of the 11 districts when that allocator's meeting was held. That allocation had been operating about a year on June 1, 1935.

All the way through there were committees operating on any infringements of the rules or any violations of the Code wherever they might occur. They were sent in to the Committee, and the Committee referred them to the various sub-committees which worked on those.

The oil industry was working under the Code. It regulated their hours, output and scale of wages. One of the first things we did was to make up scales of maximum hours and minimum wages, which were referred to the Administrator. There were public hearings called by the Labor Policy Board, which was one of the boards that the Secretary of the Interior had established for that purpose; and then those were finally adopted. One of our main jobs was to, as far as we could, secure compliance with those labor requirements.

It was the same way with reference to all the 3383 amendments. As to marketing practices, the Code constituted a sort of a Ten Commandments of good practices in the industry. We undertook to see that they were complied with.

To start with, the first statement that Secretary Ickes ever made to the P. and C. Committee was that it was for stabilization of the industry. That is what we were trying to do, to stabilize the entire industry, production, marketing, refining, labor and everything connected with it.

These refinery allocations were effective to an extent even when oil continued to come out of East Texas in interstate commerce. But they were not entirely satisfactory because with the hot oil and excess gasoline that was coming out of East Texas, they had hardly been able to maintain a reasonable level of prices as compared to the volume of oil and gasoline that was coming out. And they were totally ineffective in getting a proper price, on account of the excess oil and gasoline that was coming out of East Texas. That surplus that was being put upon the market disturbed the whole situation. When the Connally Act went into effect and the Tender Board went into action in East Texas, the hot oil was cut off, and then things came back to a normal situation.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Lewin.

I testified that at this conference on May 10th 3384 there was a discussion of the improvement in the situation of the independent refiner at that time, as a result of this major buying.

Q. And did you mean by that that there was a discussion as to the improvement in the tank car price?

A. That entered into it, yes, sir.

Q. Well, wasn't that the principal factor in the improvement?

A. Primarily, it meant getting rid of the surplus gasoline they had—

Q. Yes.

A. (Continuing) —as well as the price they were getting for it.

Q. Well, to get rid of the surplus gasoline was designed to increase the price, wasn't it?

A. That was one of the factors that I never divorced from the situation.

Q. That was the principal and most important factor, wasn't it?

A. No, I wouldn't say it was the principal and most important factor, but it was a factor.

Q. And you gentlemen discussed that the price had increased and improved because of this major buying, is that what we understand?

A. What I just stated was that in my opinion the main factor that had improved the situation 3385 had been the refinery allocations, and the Connally
Act, and the other things.

Q. I didn't ask you that, Mr. Collett. I asked you whether you gentlemen on May 10th discussed this improvement in the tank car price, and thought that part of that improvement, at least, was due to this major company buying?

A. I would say that was my impression of it, yes.

Q. That was your impression of the discussion right there?

A. I say that was my idea of it, the impression I got, insofar as I was concerned, and I don't know that we expressed it in just that many words. It was a factor.

Q. In other words, you were of the opinion that this major company buying had aided the other forces in increasing that tank car price?

A. I would say yes.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Donovan.

Q. Did Mr. Fahy tell Mr. Arnott to stop the buying?

A. No, he did not.

The Court: Q. What buying program was then in effect?

3386 A. The buying was going on in the Mid-Continent area.

Q. By whom?

A. Some major company purchasing of gasoline down there.

Recross Examination by Mr. Lewin.

It was not stated who the major companies were that were doing the buying, no mention made there of that. It was not stated there how much they were buying. I did not know how much any of them were buying. I never went into those figures about their needs for the gasoline that they were buying.

There was no discussion as to how much more improvement in price was going to be brought about by this buying, nor was there any discussion there about meetings of a so-called Tank Car Stabilization Committee.

I didn't hear any discussion there that those meetings would be held each month, all through 1935 and 1936, with or without a Code. Mr. Walter Paul Jacobi's name was not mentioned, so far as I know, nor the activities of Mr. McDowell, Mr. Tuttle, or Mr. Ashton.

Q. Or the activities of all those four gentlemen together, in meetings as often as once a week throughout this period?

A. No mention was made of that so far as I know.

3387 Q. Was there a mention of Mr. Buckley's cooperation with Mr. Arnott in getting buyers in the East Texas program?

A. No sir. There was no discussion there that these major company employees were making price recommendations to each of the others, as to the price that they ought to pay for this so-called distress gasoline if they bought it.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Donovan.

Mr. Fahy did not ask for any information other than was given him on that occasion.

The Court: Q. Just tell us what information was given to you about the buying program on that occasion, about this buying.

The comment on it was very brief, in fact the whole session was very brief. The mention was simply made of the fact that the buying that was being done by the major companies in the Mid-Continent field, in connection with the other factors that I have mentioned, was putting that situation in a very satisfactory condition. I don't know who made that statement. It was sort of general agreement with all of us that there was no necessity for any further action.

Q. Do you know who made the statement, and to whom it was made?

3388 A. My impression is that that statement in general, that is, a summary of it, about as I have stated, was made by Mr. Arnott to Mr. Fahy.

3389 DAVID G. GRAY, a witness for the defendants, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Kirkland.

(Document submitted by Mr. Kirkland received in evidence as EXHIBIT 984.)

I live in Wichita Falls, Texas. I am an independent oil producer and drilling contractor. I have been in the oil business in Texas since 1915.

I was the manager of Waggoner Refining Company, located in Electra, Texas. I went to work for the Waggoner Company in October, 1931, and I continued to work for them as manager until the latter part of November, 1935. I managed all phases of the business pertaining to oil. I would call Waggoner Refining Company an independent refiner.

Before that from 1925 I had been with Dale Refining Company in the oil business. They are independent refiners located in Electra, Texas.

I know Ira Smith who lived in Tulsa, and who is connected with the Standard Oil Company of Indiana.

Distress gasoline is gasoline in the hands of a refiner who does not have a market for it and cannot hold it by reason of lack of finances or lack of storage capacity.

A spot sale is a sale closed at a flat price for shipment within a period of 10 days or 2 weeks.

Waggoner Company's refining plant at Electra, 3390 Texas, as it existed in 1935 when I was there had a crude capacity of about 4,000 to 4,500 barrels. It had modern cracking equipment and substantial storage facilities. It is located on the Waggoner ranch from which it gets all the oil that it uses in its operations.

The corporate name of the refining company was Waggoner Refining Company, Incorporated. In 1934 and 1935 it had a storage capacity of between 900,000 and 1,000,000 barrels. 900,000 barrels of large storage, and I assume about 100,000 barrels of small storage. Some of the storage was in small pipe line stations in the field, and there was large storage at 2 refineries that Waggoner had purchased and had torn down, leaving the storage facilities standing. It was substantially more storage than the ordinary independent refiner in North Texas had. Some of it was crude oil storage, some fuel oil storage, some gasoline storage.

The Waggoners were primarily interested in the cattle business. The Waggoner ranch consists of 567,000 acres in parts of 5 counties. It is about 70 miles long at its greatest length, and 30 to 35 miles wide at its greatest width. However, it is that wide most of the distance. I would say that about 50,000 to 60,000 acres have been rather thoroughly explored for oil, and that out of that between 20,000 and 25,000 acres have proved productive and are still producing. The remainder of the ranch 3391 has hardly been scratched. It is what I would call potential oil land, especially now. It has always been considered so. I believe it is the largest individual holding of potential oil lands in the country.

They were producing in 1934 and 1935 around 15,000 barrels of crude oil a day. Some of that was being taken out by people who had the rights to the drilling there; there were a number of pipe line companies in the field besides our own pipe lines.

As to the arrangement that Waggoner had with those other companies, Waggoner owned a minimum of ⅛ royalty under all wells, and in a great many instances as high as ⅜ royalty. We operated about 100 wells of our own which, in addition to royalty oil, was usually a little bit in excess of what we needed for our own refinery.

They did not have to pay the money for the crude at the time they got it. It was just a bookkeeping transaction.

It was not necessary in 1934 and 1935 for Waggoner Refining Company to dump any oil because of lack of storage capacity, or for financial reasons. Waggoner had no distress gasoline in 1934 or 1935. The refining company never had to borrow a dime to run the refinery.

Commencing in December, 1931 or January, 1932 we started in cleaning tanks that had theretofore been used for heavy oil to make them available to store light gasoline, and started storing at that time. The Waggoner 3392 Company had 150,000 barrels of gasoline in storage in 1935. In gallons I think we had between 7 and 8 million gallons. I have not reduced that to barrels. We started to store that in the latter part of 1931 or the first part of 1932, and continued to do it until our stocks reached what you call a normal level in the fall of 1935. Looking at Exhibit 882, I would say our storage capacity reached its height about March 1.

My recollection is that we had between 7 and 8 million gallons in storage at that time. I would say the amount that we normally kept in storage was 2 to 2½ millions. In 1935, according to this statement here, we reached our storage about 4 million gallons. So we were approaching the normal level the latter part of 1935.

In April and May, there were sales of 4,000,000 odd and sales of 3,800,000 odd; that seems to be where the reduction took place. A while ago I was referring to the total net reduction during the period of 1935. Most of the sales in April and May were made to both brokers and majors. A large percentage of sales was to brokers, I believe.

75%, possibly 80% of that 7,500,000 gallons that we had in storage was third grade. The other 20% was working stocks of other grades of gasoline. We stored that gas during those years because of unsatisfactory prices. We were holding it for our price. Our company was able to do that financially.

3393 Q. Did you ever discuss the amount that you had in storage with the Standard of Indiana or any of its officials?

A. I think I discussed the storage of gasoline with nearly everybody in the business. It was a matter of common knowledge.

I discussed our allocation with the Government on several occasions in 1934. I talked with Dr. Lederer, the state allocator. Because of what were regarded as excessive stocks, the allocation committee made us an allocation under which we couldn't live. We couldn't operate on the basis of the allocation made us. It was so small our unit cost would have reached an unusual figure. So I called on Dr. Lederer for relief, and he told me the reason for my low allocation, that it was due to my excessive stocks, and that those stocks ought to be reduced before they could give me the relief sought. I told him that I was perfectly willing to lock the gasoline up; in the words I used to him, I was willing to freeze it. I meant by that, to lock it up and keep it off the market, not sell it. I was able to hold it. And by reason of that statement, they raised my allocation.

In 1934, neither the Waggoner Company nor I considered that stored gasoline distress gasoline. We had money to carry it. The knowledge of the fact that it was there had disturbed the industry and we had repeatedly insisted that it wasn't distress and we had committed ourselves to and we adhered to that policy. We didn't consider that distress gasoline. It was not necessary for financial reasons or because of storage capacity that the Waggoner Company dispose of that stored gasoline that I have been telling you about in the year 1935 or in the year 1936.

According to my recollection, in 1932 and 1933, with the exception of 15 cars which we sold to Standard in October, 1933, there were no purchases by Standard from the Waggoner Company. I know why that was. We were not offering third grade, our straight-run gasoline to anyone. We sold it to a few regular customers, small jobbers, scattered about that bought other products from us, and with a few exceptions when we had a few price flurries of short duration we preferred to store all that grade gasoline.

The other grade gasoline manufactured was cracked gasoline, which doesn't lend itself to long storage periods, and a grade of gasoline not marketed by Standard of Indiana or any other major company at that time. It did not meet their specifications. But there was a demand for that grade gasoline at the price. It wasn't the drug on the market that low-grade gasoline was.

As to what relation existed between Standard of Indiana and the Waggoner people in 1934 and 1935, Stanolind Company is a subsidiary of Standard of Indiana and had a pipe line gathering system on the Waggoner ranch, 3395 a network of pipe lines gathering oils from the various wells and various leases. We also had a similar pipe line gathering system. At times crude oil would become a burden to us. That is, we had more oil on our lines than we wanted to buy and store. Sometimes the same thing was true of the Stanolind Company. In one instance in 1934 I leased to them our entire gathering system in a part of the field and leased them a pumping station, and they took over those connections for a period of time. The reason for this was that a new pool had been brought in, and we found we had more crude oil than we cared to put in storage. On two or three occasions I sold them oil in lots of 50,000 to 100,000 barrels.

I think some of those transactions took place in 1934. I know all of them took place during that period, but I don't know just which year. We felt if we had to market crude oil we had a place to market it, since Standard of Indiana would buy. And if we had to have crude oil, we felt we could take over some of their connections. Those switches were made on several occasions. I would say there was a reciprocal relationship existing between the two companies. They also operated one or two leases on the ranch. By "operating leases," I mean they, through another subsidiary, the Dixie Oil Company, had some production wells.

Some of the sales of crude we made to Standard of Indiana were made at my request, not solicited by Standard or Stanolind.

3396 The 69-70 octane gasoline that we sold to Standard is tetra-ethyl lead. It required an Ethyl license to sell that gasoline.

Before getting an Ethyl license, we did not sell any 69-70 gasoline. The 69-70 met the specifications of Standard of Indiana; we sent them samples, and they approved. I forget the exact month we got our Ethyl license; it was along in February or March, 1934.

An Ethyl license is a license granted by Ethyl Corporation, permitting a refiner to use their product, tetra-ethyl lead, in the blending of gasoline to raise its anti-knock value and presumably to increase its power.

After the license is issued, it is necessary to build a blending plant. They sold us the equipment and shipped it to us out of their New Jersey plant. That required additional storage, trackage facilities, etc.

After you get the plant installed and want to start selling gasoline blended with lead, Ethyl Corporation requires you to ship them samples of the gasoline you manufacture that you propose to blend, and they examine that and approve or disapprove. If they disapprove, you have to change your methods of manufacture and make gasoline to meet their approval. Then you are ready to start selling it, except you can only sell to licensees of Ethyl Corporation. So your sales outlet of that grade gasoline is limited to refiners to whom they issue a license and to jobbers 3397 to whom they issue a license.

I had a talk with Mr. Smith of Tulsa of Standard of Indiana concerning 69-70 octane before we got our Ethyl license. It was necessary for me to show the Ethyl Corporation that I had a market or probably a market for Ethyl gasoline before I could get any license. I talked to Standard of Indiana and several other companies and ascertained the fact that I might expect to sell them that grade of gasoline.

Very few Texas independent refiners had such a license; none in the East Texas field, for instance. There was one other besides ourselves in North Texas territory. That was Panhandle.

I did not receive permission from Standard to tell the Ethyl people that they would purchase 69-70 gasoline from us, not in so many words. I had been selling Mr. Smith of Standard of Indiana a little gasoline all along, third grade, the only kind I made that he could use, and kept asking him, of course, to get more business. That is, when I wanted it. This was 1934. He explained to me that the decline in the volume of that grade of gasoline sold made it impossible for him to buy very much from me, but if I had an Ethyl license, they could do more business with me. That conversation with Mr. Smith started back in 1933. It was with reference to what business I might expect in the future. I gave the name of Standard of Indiana to the Ethyl people as a customer for our 69-70.

3398 We had very limited controlled outlets of our own at that time. I had the same number of retail service stations in 1933 as in 1934 and 1935. Very few. We probably marketed 100,000 gallons a month through our own stations, about 10 carloads.

It required an expenditure of about $35,000 to equip the Waggoner Company so that they could turn out 69-70 octane. They made that expenditure.

Following my talk in 1933 or 1934 with Smith, I talked with him again before this expenditure of $35,000 was made. I talked to him on numerous occasions concerning it, but I do not remember any certain conversation. Before we made this expenditure and before we got our Ethyl license, I counted on what Smith of Standard had told me, that they would buy 69-70 octane from me.

The 45 cars of 69-70 octane that the Waggoner Company sold to the Standard of Indiana in the month of November, 1934, was the gasoline that I say we required the Ethyl license for. The 25 cars of 69-70 octane that the Standard of Indiana bought from Waggoner Company in January, before the indictment alleges that the conspiracy started, was also gasoline that required this Ethyl license I was telling you about.

As I stated, we received the license sometime during the first part of March. That is my recollection. I returned home the latter part of March, and then submitted the proposition to my superiors for their approval. It 3399 didn't take very long to do that, a week or 10 days, I think. They approved the proposition and I sent for the Ethyl Corporation representative in Tulsa and he came to Electra, and we selected the type of equipment we wanted to install; in fact, we installed two plants, a barrel blending plant and a carload blending plant. Then we placed our order for that equipment and got it in about 60 days. It was shipped by boat to Galveston or Houston and by rail to Electra. After receipt of the equipment we built the plant. We were in shape to start shipment of that grade of gasoline sometime in September or October. Standard made tests of their own before they accepted our 69-70. We shipped that gasoline which they tested, 5 gallon samples, to Whiting, Indiana.

We sold to Standard of Indiana 69-70 octane at various times, shipped it rather steadily all during the year 1935. As to one order sold at a flat price of 4⅜¢, group 3, by flat price I mean that all that is shipped under that order is at the same price. It was not at the low of the Journal, it is a price agreed upon at the time of sale, regardless of Journal or anything else. Mr. Smith would be representing Standard of Indiana on this purchase.

As to how I sold it to him: I would call Mr. Smith up, or he would call me, and we would discuss general market conditions. I told him I wanted to sell some gasoline. He would ask what price I had. I would tell him. He 3400 usually said, "I will take it up with Chicago and let you know." Maybe it would be a matter of 2 or 3 days later he would call back and we would conclude the transaction, maybe at the price I quoted, sometimes less than the price I quoted. The gas sold Standard of Indiana in the year 1935, while I was there, was shipped to their bulk stations in the Mid-West, primarily Iowa, I believe.

I don't know why Standard of Indiana purchased this 69-70 gas from Waggoner in 1935. I believe the relationship between the two companies had something to do with it. In my mind the talk I had with Mr. Smith, previous to getting the Ethyl license, had something to do with it.

None of this gas we had in storage in 1935 that we had been storing for 2 or 3 years was 69-70 octane. A small amount might have been 69-70 base material. That is, working stocks are included in that total figure, and perhaps 10,000 or 12,000 barrels of that figure was material blended in to the 69-70. That is what I mean by "base material." We lead that material just prior to shipment. We don't keep leaded gas in storage. None of the 69-70 was sold to brokers.

According to my recollection, there were two small purchases of 15 cars each in 1935 by Standard of Indiana from the Waggoner Company of third grade; the rest was of 69-70.

"Third grade" is the low grade. It is lower than 3401 the regular. In making Ethyl gasoline you do not use third grade gasoline but one having a lower end boiling point. That is what is sometimes referred to as endpoint. It is the point at which all of the gasoline has evaporated in a distillation. The third grade is 25 or 30 degrees, sometimes 40 degrees higher than your 69-70 grade.

In 1935, I heard a number of the major companies in and around Tulsa, or in the Mid-Continent, were buying some gasoline from independent refiners. I first heard reference made to our being charged with being the dancing partner of Standard of Indiana in 1935.

I did not have any talk or any arrangement with anybody representing Standard of Indiana that they would take any certain amount of gas from us during any certain period in 1935. I did not talk with them, nor did anybody representing Waggoner Company, so far as I know, talk with any official of Standard of Indiana regarding their taking such a thing as our distress gasoline. I hadn't any distress gasoline to sell anyone.

I did not attend the meeting at Kansas City on March 1, 1935, which it has been stated independent refiners attended. I never attended in 1935 any meeting of independent refiners, or of major companies, where the question of the sale of distress gasoline by the independent refiners to the majors was discussed. I did not know that any of those sales made by Waggoner to Standard of Indi-3402 ana were being made under any agreement by Standard with other companies to purchase gas from us.

If there had been any agreement made, or any understanding on the part of Waggoner, no one in the organization would have taken any part in any such meeting except me.

I got an invitation or telegram from Mr. Arnott to go to the meeting at Kansas City. I don't recall the reason I didn't go. Something must have come up to prevent it. It is the first one of Arnott's meetings that I failed to attend. I had been interested in Code work. I knew Arnott well.

Waggoner Refining Company did not curtail production. It increased production in 1935, before the expiration of the Code, I believe. It increased our production in line with what I thought the consumptive demand would be.

It is not true that we sold to Standard of Indiana, during 1935, at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices, as agreed upon between the Standard and us.

I knew about the price rise when it occurred from March to June, 1935. I did not talk to any official of Standard of Indiana about it.

I do not recall any exact period for delivery in those flat price sales set out in the stipulation, Exhibit 984. I do recall that some times they were made for shipment during the balance of the month. Some times, if a sale was 3403 made during the latter part of one month, say February, the sale would be made for shipment over the month of March. The shipment periods were various. I regarded them as spot sales.

They were sold at a flat price, a price agreed upon at the date of purchase, with delivery at some time in the future, extending, it is my recollection, as far as 30 days. If I had known that the prices of the spot market were going up each week, I don't think I would have sold on that basis. My sales to Standard were at a flat price.

To my knowledge, Waggoner Company did not enter into any conspiracy with Standard or any other major in 1935 to violate the anti-trust acts.

I sold to parties who were generally regarded as price cutters in 1935. I sold a quantity of gasoline through a Tulsa broker that was shipped to Coryell & Sons. Coryell is located throughout the Middle West, in Nebraska, Illinois, and I think Iowa. I don't know the exact location of all of his points of distribution. It was not Ethyl gasoline we sold to Coryell. I don't think the broker that sold them has an Ethyl license. I know I didn't sell him any.

I have never met Mr. Beroth. I know who he is. I know his company, Acme Petroleum Company. I regarded him as a broker.

Waggoner Company was not in on a so-called major buying program in 1935.

I didn't refuse to sell Mr. Beroth. It is possible that a member of the organization may have refused to sell him. I was in charge of this Waggoner Company. I can explain the relationship between Acme and Waggoner, which is the basis of my assumption that the sales manager may have refused to sell him a car of gasoline. They paid their bills. The experience theretofore with the company had been very unsatisfactory with reference to breach of contracts; that is, my experience while with Dale and with Waggoner.

When I first went with Waggoner they were doing considerable business with Acme, which I discontinued. In the management of the company I handled most of the sales involving large quantities, perhaps of 10 cars or up. I had a sales manager there, who handled our one-car sales. When I went with the company, I sort of put a ban on Acme because of the unsatisfactory experiences I had had theretofore.

Some of those unsatisfactory experiences were: selling a product, say 10 cars of material, for shipment over a balance of a month, or maybe two months, at an agreed price, or on an agreed price basis; and the market going 3405 against the purchaser, and their not furnishing shipping instructions on the material, causing us to seek another market for it. Ordinarily, you have relief under those conditions, but the amount involved was not sufficient to go through the trouble of seeking relief in court. Our outage claims were always excessive. Outage claims are claims made by the consignees that the car does not contain the number of gallons shown on the invoice. The amount usually runs from $5 to $20. The car is being unloaded in Nebraska somewhere; it is not worth your time to investigate. It costs us more to straighten it up than to let them have it. I had that experience when I was with Dale Refining Company, a company that went out of business in 1932. I had that experience with this company, the latter part of my time there.

I think I testified that the average sale to Beroth over 1934 was about 4 or 5 cars a month. We sold them about 40 cars in 1933, all without my knowledge. I didn't think we had made them any sales.

I sent out a letter of which Exhibit 4 for identification is a copy. It went to a general mailing list, which included a number that we didn't do business with, practically every broker in the business, and most of the jobbers.

The company made an exclusive arrangement with some other broker for Ohio and Illinois in May, 1934. That arrangement remained in effect until the latter part 3406 of 1935, August or September. This exclusive arrangement for those two states was made with American Petroleum Company. It prevented me from selling to jobbers or brokers for shipment into those two states, Illinois and Ohio. Therefore, during that time, I couldn't ship gas to Mr. Beroth or his Acme Company in the State of Illinois.

The letter, Exhibit 4, is dated May 8, 1934 and is a letter addressed to brokers and marketers throughout the country:

> "Gentlemen:
>
> "We have completed arrangements whereby the American Petroleum Company, Chicago and Cleveland, will handle the exclusive sale of Waggoner products in the States of Illinois and Ohio.
>
> "This arrangement goes into effect immediately, and we will not be able to accept shipping instructions or diversions from you to points in either of the states mentioned.
> "We want to assure you that we appreciate the business with which you have favored us, and trust that we may continue to serve you in other states.
>
> "Yours truly,
> (Signed) "Waggoner Refining Company, Inc.,
> "By D. G. Gray, > Manager."

3407 I sent a letter containing the language I have just read to our brokers and marketers, including the Acme Petroleum Company.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

Exhibit 985 for identification is a true copy of a telegram that I sent to Mr. Bourque on July 10, 1935.

(Copy of telegram referred to is received in evidence as EXHIBIT 985, and read to the jury by Mr. Chaffetz.)

When in that telegram I say, "July sales to group," I mean to the group of people mentioned there, the group that I mention there.

Q. What kind of a group were they, Barnsdall, Indiana, Pure and Continental?

A. Members of the group who bought gasoline from there, as indicated in that telegram.

Q. Yes. They were members of the major company buying group who were buying gasoline from the independent refiners in the Mid-Continent area during that time; isn't that right?

A. I don't know.

I think that A. V. Bourque is a defendant in this case. He is the secretary of the Western Petroleum Refiners' Association.

Exhibit 986 for identification appears to be a true copy of a letter I received from Dale W. Moore, dated 3408 October 2, 1935.

Mr. Chaffetz: I offer Exhibit 986 in evidence.

Mr. Donovan: I object, your Honor, on the ground that the writer of the letter is not alleged to be a coconspirator under the indictment, it is not in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy, and it is hearsay. I wish your Honor would look at that letter.

Mr. Chaffetz: Your Honor please, Mr. Jacobi, as I recall, testified that gasoline purchased in the Mid-Continent buying program was purchased from Dale Moore, the writer of that letter.

The Court: Objection overruled. Exception allowed.

(Letter referred to is received in evidence as EXHIBIT 986, and read to the jury by Mr. Chaffetz.)

The reference in that letter to Mr. Dave Gray is a reference to me. When he says "I have been talking to the group the past day or two," I don't know just who he meant. I referred to the group in my telegram. I will explain just exactly what I meant, if you wish me to.

Q. No, I asked if you didn't mean the buying group, the major companies who were buying?

A. I don't know just what you mean when you refer to "major company buying group." I sold to 3409 major companies that I do not believe are defendants in this suit.

Q. That may very well be true, but when you referred to "the group" in this telegram, you were referring to the major oil companies who are defendants here, who were the ones buying in the so-called Mid-Continent buying program; isn't that right?

A. I will define the group to which I referred in my own language, if you will let me.

I called Mr. Bourque and told him that I wanted to move some gasoline. We had stored gasoline for two years; prices had reached a level at which we wanted to liquidate, but we didn't want to throw it on the market. I wanted to sell as much as I could in an orderly manner, for the best price I could get. For 10 years I had called on that Association when I wanted assistance with reference to sales or other matters.

Mr. Bourque, as in numerous other instances in 1934 and 1935, said, "Well, Dave, I will see what I can do for you and call you back." He would call me back and say, "I suggest that you get in touch with this company or that company," maybe name two, maybe name a half a dozen. I would call those people, and accomplish a sale. It was Mr. Bourque's habit to check with me the next day, or maybe 2 or 3 days later, "How much gasoline did they buy from you?" And I would report to him how much they bought.

3410 And this telegram is the result of just such a conversation. The figures quoted there are concerning the amount of gasoline sold to the numerous companies mentioned.

Q. Well, you knew that during this time, in 1935, Mr. Bourque was instrumental in carrying on the activities of a major company buying program?

A. I did not know that.

Q. You didn't know that?

A. No.

Q. Did you think that Mr. Bourque was carrying on that activity only for your company?

A. I think that Mr. Bourque was carrying on that activity for my company, in view of the fact that we were members of his Association, paid our dues regularly, and it was one of the services that he had been rendering, or that Association had been rendering ever since its inception.

I had heard that a number of larger companies were buying gasoline in the Mid-Continent field in 1935. I did not know which companies they were. I did not know that Mr. Bourque was active in that Mid-Continent buying program and I doubt very seriously that he was at all.

This letter meant something to me when I got it 3411 from Dale W. Moore.

Q. Did you understand it?

A. Did I understand the motive behind the letter?

Q. No, I did not ask you about the motive behind the letter. Did you understand what the letter said?

A. I do not think we can understand the letter without understanding the motive.

Q. Then you do not understand that letter?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. You understand the letter?

A. Yes.

Q. He says, first, "I have been talking to the group the past day or two regarding some help on motor gasoline at 4⅝¢, group 3." Who do you understand he referred to when he said "I have been talking to the group?"

A. A group of purchasers of gasoline in Oklahoma.

Q. Which group?

A. I don't know just whom he referred to. Just what particular companies, I could not say. I have known Mr. Moore for 10 or 12 years. He called me "dear Dave," which would indicate he knew me personally.

Q. And he must have known of the purchases
3412 that were made—

A. I don't know what he knew.

Q. He used the same term when talking to you that you used in talking to Mr. Bourque. You used the term "group" when talking to Mr. Bourque.

A. Yes. I don't know that we meant the same thing.

Q. He says this: "Yesterday they wanted to know if this was Waggoner material and I said, yes." That is, he said a group wanted to know if this was Waggoner material. Is that right?

A. I think that is what he said.

Q. "They informed me they understood you did not need any further help in addition to what they were already giving you." What does that mean?

A. I don't know just what he means by that.

Q. You haven't any idea?

A. No.

Q. You did not at the time you received this letter?

A. No.

Q. "Incidentally," he goes on, "I advised them this was material which I had coming from you under certain agreement and I was having some difficulty in moving all surplus to my jobbing trade unless I cut the price."

3413 Then he said "They," referring then to the group, "They would prefer that I endeavor to move this material without calling on them for help."

He meant the group wanted him to move the material without calling on them for help, and he says,

> "but advised that possibly within the next week when new allocations are arranged with regard to buying they might then be of some assistance."

Now, I ask you whether he did not mean by that, that within the next week the committee of the buying group when they made new allocations of purchases to the companies who were buying in the Mid-Continent field, would consider some of Dale W. Moore's gasoline that he was trying to get them to help him dispose of. Isn't that what that meant?

A. I don't know just what he meant. I would like to explain the purpose of the letter, the reason for the letter if you will let me.

Q. Tell me first how you know it. Did you have any conversation with him after you got this letter?

A. Certainly I did.

Q. With respect to the subject matter of the letter?

3414 A. With respect to the subject matter of gasoline.

Q. With respect to the subject matter of this letter, I asked you?

A. That letter concerns the sale of gasoline.

Q. Did you ask him what he meant by any terms in this letter?

A. I don't believe I asked him that question.

Q. You don't remember ever asking him, after receiving this letter, what he meant by anything in this letter?

A. No, I understood the letter very well.

Q. You understood the points of the letter very well?

A. Yes.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Kirkland.

Moore was the broker I spoke about on my direct examination when I said I sold considerable gas through him.

Q. I want to call your attention particularly to the third paragraph of this letter from Moore:

> "Incidentally, I advised them this was material which I had coming from you under certain agreement and I was having some difficulty in moving all surplus to my jobbing trade unless I cut the price." 3415

Is there any reason he should have had any difficulty in moving the gas he was getting from you?

A. No. He didn't even have to take it.

In the spring of 1935, as I stated awhile ago, we were attempting to liquidate these stocks in as orderly a manner as possible. To sell 100 cars of gasoline a refiner may call 4 or 5 brokers and offer them 100 cars of gasoline. That 100 cars immediately becomes 1,000 cars of gasoline.

To avoid that situation I made a trip to Tulsa and told Dale Moore of my plan to liquidate as much of my stocks in spring and summer as I could, but I did not want to do anything that would break my own market, and that I wanted all his business. Whatever else may be said of the man, he could market a lot of gasoline. In exchange for all of his business I put our material at his disposal.

In other words, a salesman could go out and sell a car of gasoline at an agreed upon price and not have to wire back to Moore's office in Tulsa and Tulsa wire me to buy the car. We had it bought without obligation to purchase, and it made it much more economical for him to sell on that basis.

We discussed the volume which he might move, and 3416 he agreed that he could move about 100 cars a month, and I told him he would go ahead on that basis. If he was short of 100 cars I would call him up—"Dale, how about some shipping instructions?" and he would say "Well, I will have some for you tomorrow," and "I am having some problem selling gasoline right now," but we put no pressure on him whatever to move it. In his enthusiasm to make a commission he took gasoline that he knew I would deliver, and referred to it as his gasoline, and when it became his gasoline and he had no market for it, it became distress gasoline; but actually he was under no obligation to take it, no written agreement or verbal agreement of any kind whereby he had to buy the gasoline. Neither the Waggoner Company nor I ever insisted that he was under any legal obligation to take that gas. There were no written documents about it.

Q. In this letter he says, "they would prefer that I endeavor to move this material without calling on them."

It was not necessary for him to call on them or anybody else to move it, was it?

A. No, sir.

I did not answer this letter. I did not think it deserved an answer. I talked with him on the telephone about the subject matter, however, as I testified awhile ago.

3417 Q. He says in the second paragraph: "They"—referring to the group I suppose, to the group referred to in the first paragraph—"they informed me they understood you did not need any further help in addition to what they were already giving you." Were you getting any help from any group such as he refers to in the second paragraph of this letter (showing exhibit to witness)?

A. I sold gasoline to practically every major company in the business, doing business in the Mid-Continent field at one time or another.

Q. That was your business, selling gasoline?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you know what he was referring to when he says the group had been talking to you?

A. I don't know what constitutes that group. I don't know what meaning he applies to the word.

Recross Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

Q. You knew that there was a group of some sort because you used that term yourself when you sent your telegram to Mr. Bourque. Isn't that right?

A. I knew that a number of major companies located in the Mid-Continent field were buying gasoline from refiners in Texas.

3418 Q. And they were sometimes referred to as the "buying group;" isn't that right?

A. That may have been.

Q. And that was the group you referred to in your telegram to Mr. Bourque?

A. I was referring to the group of people mentioned in the telegram.

Q. And those people you regarded as members of the buying group?

A. No, I did not. I regarded them as a group of companies that had been buying gasoline from me.

Q. Did they buy from you as a group?

A. No.

Q. They bought from you separately?

A. Yes.

Q. Then why did you say, "balance of month July sales to group Barnsdall 10 cars Standard of Indiana 15 Pure 12 Continental 5?"

Why did you use the word "group" at all? Couldn't you just as well have said "in July I sold 10 cars to Barnsdall," so many cars to Pure, and so many to Standard?

A. I may have used the word "group" for the sake of brevity. I could have said "sales to major companies." The word "group" is one word. I don't know just why I used the word "group".

3419 Q. Why did you tell them what you sold to major companies?

A. Bourque asked me.

Q. Now, with respect to Dale W. Moore, isn't this the fact; having an arrangement with you whereby he was going to dispose of your gasoline if he could, he turned around and tried to sell it to the Mid-Continent buying program, to the major companies participating in that program? Now, isn't that the effect of that letter?

A. He tried to sell it to major companies that had been buying gasoline from me at infrequent intervals, that is, some of them were infrequent.

Mr. Kirkland: Q. Did you object to it?

A. I certainly did.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Horween.

I have testified I know A. V. Bourque, a defendant in this case. I have known him personally since about 1927. He has held the position of secretary of the Western Petroleum Refiners' Association to my knowledge since 1928.

I was director of the Western Petroleum Refiners' Association for 3 or 4 years. I don't know how old this Association is. It was in existence when I went in the 3420 refining business in 1925, and had been in existence for some time. The members are primarily independent refiners in the Mid-Continent field—Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Kansas. Although a few of the larger companies belonged, most of the members were small when they originally joined and grew big.

The work of the Association has to do with statistical data. It posted technical meetings, and brought to the refiner engineers, and so forth, loaned to them by the larger companies, that gave us some information in technical matters. It appeared before the state authorities with reference to state inspection laws; assembled and distributed information concerning the use of various oil products, assisted us with reference to freight rates where all of the Association might derive some benefits. The Association had a Washington office, maintaining an attorney there who kept us advised of all things transpiring there with reference to traffic that might affect us. Tax matters, also. And frequently assisting us in the sale of products, particularly back in the twenties with reference to export sales.

I have had frequent personal contact with Mr. Bourque over the period during which I have known him. That is, while I was with Dale Refining Company up to 1932, and from 1932 until the last part of 1935, while I was with Waggoner. At all the annual meetings and numerous 3421 local meetings and frequent visits to Tulsa I always called at his office, and on visits down in our country he would call at my office. And we used to have quite a few meetings in North Texas. That was before the days of the Code. I had occasion to call on Mr. Bourque to help me find a buyer for gasoline and other products which I might want to sell. I turned to Mr. Bourque because we contributed to the support of the Association, and it was one of the services his Association rendered.

In a typical conversation with him in 1934 or 1935, I would call him up and say, "Bourque, I would like to move 20 cars of kerosene," or "40 cars of gasoline," or what not. "You know where I can move it?" Sometimes he would know. "Why don't you call so and so?" Sometimes he would say, "I don't know, Dave. I will see what I can do for you." And he would call me back that day or maybe the next and suggest that I communicate with this or that individual with reference to a sale. He never promised me that anybody would buy anything from me. He never sold any of our products for me or for the company I was working for. He never bought anything from us. He never purported to act as agent on behalf of anyone else in buying from us, either in gasoline or any other product.

I discussed price with Mr. Bourque. I don't guess I ever talked with him that I didn't discuss price. The price discussion with Bourque in 1935 would be that he 3422 would give me his idea of the market, and I would give him mine, and we would argue about it awhile. We would discuss everything that might be going on in the oil business that we knew anything about.

He never suggested or urged or recommended to me any particular place to which I should sell gasoline or other products, or any amount of gasoline or other products I should manufacture. I am sure about that.

Waggoner Refining Company wasn't a member of the Western Petroleum Refiners' Association until I joined. It joined immediately after I went with them.

1928, 1929 and part of 1930 were pretty good years for the small independent refiner.

Several things happened in 1930. We were engaged primarily then in marketing export gasoline, and the export market got pretty bad due to dumping abroad, by Russia and Rumania primarily. The East Texas oil field was brought in in the fall of 1930, but we didn't really feel the effect of it until 1931. In 1931 the Oklahoma City field, I believe, came in about that time, too. And we, of course, couldn't compete with hot oil, low price oil, or no price oil, and things were pretty bad. That was when the troubles of the independent refiner really began.

At the advent of the Petroleum Code in the fall of 1933, all materials advanced in price. Shortly after the 3423 enactment of the Code, the price of crude oil was stabilized at $1.00 a barrel. The prices of refined products were not stabilized. We still had to compete with products made from the type of oil I mentioned a while ago, produced in East Texas and some in Oklahoma City.

When conditions are bad and prices are low, some small refineries do shut down temporarily and some reduce their throughput. By "throughput," I mean the amount of oil that they put through their plants. But most refineries are one-unit plants, and have a maximum and a minimum at which they can operate. For instance, if you have a plant capable of turning out 2,000 barrels of gasoline a day through one unit, you might be able to produce 1,200 to 1,500 barrels a day economically, through that unit, but you couldn't go below that.

A number of refiners have a pipe line gathering system through which they transport oil which they buy from the producer in the field. If they shut down their plant, they can't buy that fellow's oil, and he seeks another outlet for his oil. When they get ready to go back in business again, they have a whole system of pipe lines lying in the ground which they have to dig up and put some place else, providing they can find somebody else that will sell them the oil. It is quite frequently difficult to per-3424 suade somebody to sell you oil if they know you are a company that is liable to run this month and shut down next month. Therefore, you are forced to stand the punishment in the hope of better days.

Frequently they have fuel oil contracts with the railroads, for 3 months, 6 months or 12 months, and the period which it was shut down makes it impossible for them to resume under those contracts, and they would probably have difficulty in getting new contracts when they start up again.

It is like any other business when you break down all your connections, both with reference to selling products and the purchase of raw materials.

I think I mentioned about all of the specific activities which the Western Petroleum Refiners' Association engages in. I would say it was sort of a clearing house for information for refiners which they were not in a position to get themselves.

I was a director of that Association from about 1931 or 1932 until I left Waggoner in November, 1935. Mr. Bourque was the secretary. I believe we paid him $10,000 or $12,000 a year. My recollection regarding that is in 1932 or 1933, along in there. However, that is not very clear in my memory.

He was secretary and did all the work of the organization. I can't answer as to how many members there were, but practically all of the independent refiners belonged.

3425 At the time of the Petroleum Code, Mr. Howard Bennette was the president and managing director of the Association. During the Code the Association discontinued the statistical department. As a matter of fact, I didn't pay much attention to the Association or to my own business during the life of the Code. I didn't have time as I was traveling around the country most of the time on Code matters. I know Howard Bennette was in the Code as a member of the P. and C. Committee; he was made national coordinator. I know the action of the Association was discontinued or at least slowed up during the Code period.

After the Code, they again started gathering statistics, taking up where they left off before the advent of the Code.

Q. You have already said that on several occasions you called Mr. Bourque, rather frequently, and asked him if he knew someone who might be interested in buying some gasoline which you might want to sell and he would call you back and suggest someone for you to call.

Do you know whether or not Mr. Bourque was paid any commission or special compensation for this kind of service, outside of his salary as the Secretary of the Association?

A. No. The Association would not have permitted that.

3426 Q. I am asking you if you knew whether or not he was paid—

A. No.

Q. You never paid him anything?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of anyone else who did?

A. No, sir.

Recross Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

I did not attend a meeting of the Western Petroleum Refiners' Association, of independent refiners, on October 18, 1935. I did not attend any such a meeting in October, 1935. I do not remember attending a meeting of independent refiners on November 25, 1935 at Kansas City. I can answer a lot of your questions by saying I didn't attend a meeting anywhere concerning anything in 1935. No representative of our company attended any such a meeting.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Kirkland.

I attended one directors meeting of the Western Petroleum Refiners' Association. At the meeting of the American Petroleum Institute, in Dallas, we held a meeting there with reference to road oil, and I attended that meeting, in November, 1934. Road oil was the only subject discussed at that meeting. We met to appropriate money for advertising purposes. 3427

Recross Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

Q. I show you Exhibit 810, which purports to list total cars purchased by certain companies, from certain independent refiners, in the month of April, 1935. You notice it shows that Waggoner Refining Company sold 30 cars to Barnsdall, 85 cars to Standard of Indiana, and 50 cars to Mid-Continent, making a total of 165 cars sold by Waggoner to the companies named. Do you recall those sales?

A. I have no independent recollection, but I have no reason to doubt it.

I wouldn't know whether a sale by Dale W. Moore to Mid-Continent, 25 cars, and Phillips, 5 cars, was for resale of Waggoner gasoline. I do not think it was; I have no idea.

If I sold 85 to Standard, it was 69-70 octane.

(Stipulations as to the testimony of J. W. Steele, James D. Miller, M. A. Chambers and M. P. Appleby were received in evidence as EXHIBITS 989, 990, 991 and 992, respectively, and parts of them read to the jury by Col. Donovan.)

Mr. Donovan: Now, for the purpose of showing knowledge of the nature and purpose of the program, I offer in evidence, first a letter dated April 30, 3428 1935, signed by Paul G. Blazer, and addressed to Charles Fahy; next, duplicate original of a letter dated May 7, 1935, sent by the Chairman of the Petroleum Administrative Board to Paul G. Blazer. I ask to have them both marked for identification, and I offer them in evidence.

(Document referred to as "Letter signed by Paul G. Blazer," is marked Exhibit 993 for identification; and document referred to as "letter sent by the Chairman of the Petroleum Administrative Board to Paul G. Blazer," is marked Exhibit 994 for identification.)

Mr. Chaffetz: If the Court please, we object to the introduction of either of these documents on the grounds that they are not communications by or with any of the defendants in the case; but between a man named Blazer, who is not a defendant here.

Mr. Donovan: Following the testimony of Mr. Arnott, your Honor, this is introduced for the purpose of showing knowledge on the part of the Petroleum Administrative Board of the buying activities in 1935.

The Court: Objection sustained. There is considerable evidence in the record now as to the knowledge of Mr. Fahy and others on that Board of these activities. Exception allowed.

(Letter from Mr. Ickes to Mr. Lientz, dated March 30, 1935, is received in evidence as EXHIBIT 995, and read to the jury by Mr. Donovan.)

3429 (Mr. Donovan renewed his offer of Exhibits 917, 829, 830, 831, 832, 845, 846, 847, 710. The Government renewed its objections, and argument and ruling were deferred.)

(In absence of jury):

Mr. Irvine: Stipulation: It is stipulated that Mr. Titus was proffered by the defense as a witness upon the subject matters set forth in the offer of proof following herein; that the testimony contained in the offer of proof was objected to by the Government; whereupon the defense made the following proffer of proof as though made in question and answer form, objection being made to each question on the point of incompetency, immateriality and irrelevancy, and each of such objections being sustained; the reasons why such testimony is admissible together with the offer are as follows:

The testimony sought to be adduced by the witness, Louis Titus, is competent, material and relevant in this case since it shows what was said to Mr. Arnott as Chairman of the Marketing Committee of the Planning and Coordination Committee by the Chairman of the Legal Committee of the Planning and Coordination Committee with respect to what Mr. Arnott was authorized and directed to do by the Petroleum Administrator, Mr. Ickes, under the letter of July 20, 1934.

3430 The testimony will also bring out facts showing that certain other persons who are defendants in this case knew of the views of the Petroleum Administrative Board as to the scope of the activities authorized and directed by the letter of July 20, 1934, from Mr. Ickes to Mr. Arnott.

The testimony is also material for the purpose of showing that Mr. Fahy, then Chairman of the Petroleum Administrative Board, never stated to Mr. Titus that the letter of July 20 was limited to activities in local areas and never raised any question with Mr. Titus as to the legality of the action which Mr. Arnott was taking, and, furthermore, that Mr. Fahy was pleased with the activity of the stabilization committee in causing the removal of distress gasoline from the market. From this testimony, the jury would be entitled to draw the inferences and conclusions that persons who saw or heard the legal opinions rendered by Mr. Titus to Mr. Arnott had no purpose or intent to violate the anti-trust laws, but thought that they had the right to take such steps that were necessary to eliminate price wars, stabilize prices and to remove the various causes of price wars.

The jury could also draw the inference and conclusion that the Chairman of the Petroleum Admin- 3431 istrative Board considered that no approval by Mr. Ickes was required to any agreement or arrangement entered into by the oil industry in connection with the stabilization work, which agreements or arrangements were for the purpose of eliminating price wars or removing the causes of such price wars.

Offer of Proof.

I am Louis Titus. My address is Corpus Christi, Texas. I have been a lawyer for 40 years. I practiced law in San Francisco for 20 years. In 1916 I opened an office in Washington where I practiced until about 1935. My practice has been almost entirely civil. I worked with the Independent Petroleum Association of America, in connection with the formation of the Petroleum Code, both in Chicago and Washington.

I was selected as general legal counsel for the Planning and Coordination Committee soon after it was appointed in late August, 1933. During a large part of the Code period, I was Chairman of the Legal Committee, a subcommittee of the Planning and Coordination Committee. As general counsel and as Chairman of the Legal Committee, my work consisted mostly in writing legal opinions in connection with the work of the Planning and Co- 3432 ordination Committee and its various sub-committees. I wrote hundreds of opinions, sometimes 6 or 7 a day. Most of these opinions were for the Marketing Committee because that committee was probably the most active of the P. & C. sub-committees, and also because the legal problems involving Article V of the Code, the marketing section, were most numerous. I was called upon a number of occasions to assist both the lawyers for the P. A. B. and the Department of Justice in trying some cases. I did considerable work in arguing and writing legal briefs relative to the appeal of court cases involving the Petroleum Code. As general counsel and Chairman of the Legal Committee, I never wrote any opinions for any individual members of the Planning and Coordination Committee or any of its subcommittees. All of my work was for these committees as such.

Two or three days after the letter of July 20, 1934, from Mr. Ickes to Mr. Arnott, I saw it in my office in Washington. I discussed it separately with Messrs. Arnott, Majewski, Jackson, and Dodge and other persons. About July 24, I was called upon as Chairman of the Legal Committee to consider officially the letter of July 20, 1934. Mr. Hadlick, Secretary of the Marketing Committee, of which Mr. Arnott was chairman, came into my office. He said 3433 that Mr. Arnott, as Chairman of the Marketing Committee, would like to have a written opinion from me as to the meaning and scope of the letter of July 20, 1934, and to the effect of the anti-trust laws on the activities authorized by that letter. I then went to see Mr. Arnott who told me substantially the same thing. I agreed that as Chairman of the Legal Committee I would consider these matters and write an opinion for Mr. Arnott. I also talked with Mr. Majewski for about 15 minutes and we discussed the letter of July 20, 1934, and the provisions of the N. I. R. A. pertaining to anti-trust laws. I also talked to Mr. Dodge for a short time.

Before writing the opinion, I went over to the Petroleum Administrative Board and saw Mr. Charles Fahy, the Vice-Chairman of the Board. Mr. Fahy was, in fact, the real acting chairman of the board. My previous contacts with Mr. Fahy led me to believe that he had administrative authority to act for Mr. Ickes relative to carrying out the Code except as to matters of extreme importance and as to signing orders and agreements.

I told Mr. Fahy that Mr. Arnott had asked me to write an opinion as to the effect of the anti-3434 trust laws on the possible activities under the letter of July 20, 1934. I discussed with Mr. Fahy the letter of July 20 in a general way. I told him that I was not satisfied with the letter and thought that it should be revised to provide that Mr. Ickes should either approve or disapprove each agreement or arrangement which persons in the industry entered into in settling price wars or in eliminating the various causes of those wars. Mr. Fahy did not concur in this suggestion of mine. Mr. Fahy strenuously objected to this and stated that he would not be running to the administrator every few days to get orders signed approving or disapproving these agreements or arrangements. He said that it was not practical to work the matter out in that way. He said that the government had assisted the oil men materially and it was only fair that oil men should appreciate this and cooperate with the government in its efforts to stabilize this industry. He said the letter of July 20, 1934, was a direction to Mr. Arnott to do the job of eliminating price wars and getting prices back to normal so that the Recovery Program could be accomplished. He also said, "You don't need the orders of approval which 3435 you are requesting. This letter is a complete protection to you. It is all you can possibly need." He said, "What are you afraid of? You apparently are afraid of your own shadow. You can't possibly think that the government will actually prosecute you for something the govenment is demanding that you do." I said then that it did not seem to me it would be very much trouble to get an order for each separate arrangement or each separate meeting, but he flatly refused and again reiterated, "This letter now, which the Administrator has signed, is all you need." This ended the conversation.

I discussed with other members of the P. & C. Committee by conversation with Mr. Fahy. I did this either the same day or a day later. I talked with Mr. Arnott, Mr. Majewski, and other members of the Marketing Committee of the Planning and Coordination Committee relative to my conversation with Mr. Fahy.

I told Mr. Arnott substantially of my conversation with Mr. Fahy. I remember telling Mr. Arnott that I had told Mr. Fahy that I thought that the letter of July 20 should be revised, and that a provision should be inserted to the effect 3436 that any arrangement or agreement which the members of the industry made under the letter of July 20 to stop price wars, stabilize prices, or to eliminate the causes of price wars, should be specifically set forth in writing and approved or disapproved by the Petroleum Administrator. I told Mr. Arnott that Mr. Fahy strenuously objected to this, and said that he said he would not go to the Administrator every few days to get orders of approval or disapproval signed. I told Mr. Arnott that Mr. Fahy told me that it was not practical to work out the matter in this way. I said that Mr. Fahy was quite irritated at my suggestion. I told him that Mr. Fahy said that the letter of July 20 directed Mr. Arnott to take whatever steps were necessary to stop price wars, to stabilize markets, and to eliminate the causes of price wars. I said that Mr. Fahy believes the industry should agree together, cooperate with the government and appreciate the efforts which the government was making to stabilize their industry. I remember also telling Mr. Arnott that Mr. Fahy had told me this letter of July 20, 1934, was complete protection and was all 3437 that we possibly needed and that he did not see the necessity of having the approval of Mr. Ickes to the activities that were undertaken to carry out the stabilization work. I remember also telling Mr. Arnott that Mr. Fahy said: "What are you afraid of? You apparently are afraid of your own shadow. You can't possibly think the government will actually prosecute or criticize you in the oil industry for doing something that the government is demanding that you do." I told Mr. Arnott also that Mr. Fahy had flatly refused to accede to my suggestion and had reiterated that this letter of July 20 was all that we needed.

On July 31, 1934, I submitted to Mr. Arnott my legal opinion as to the effect of the anti-trust laws on the activities which Mr. Arnott might undertake under the letter of July 20, 1934.

This opinion was mimeographed and copies of it were given to many persons in the oil industry in various parts of the country. The opinion reads as follows:

The last two paragraphs of the opinion expressed 3438 briefly the substance of part of the statements that Mr. Fahy had made to me and which I had made to Mr. Arnott.

Mr. Fahy received a copy of this opinion as I recall seeing it on his desk at one time.

I am not absolutely certain that I sent Mr. Fahy a copy of this opinion. It was my custom to send Mr. Fahy copies of the more important opinions and briefs which I wrote. We would discuss them together and Mr. Fahy would quite freely tell me whether he agreed or disagreed with my brief or legal opinion. After July 31, 1934, Mr. Fahy never questioned any statement I made in the opinion of July 31, 1934. Mr. Fahy never told me that the letter of July 20, 1934, limited the stabilization activities to particular local areas. Nor did Mr. Fahy ever tell me that Mr. Arnott was not keeping the Petroleum Administrative Board sufficiently informed of his stabilization activities. Mr. Fahy never raised any question with me during the spring of 1935 or at any other time with respect to any action which Mr. Arnott had undertaken under the letter of July 20, 1934.

I do not know that in the spring of 1935 Mr. Fahy told me that he congratulated the members of the Stabilization Committee for their activities 3439 in getting distress gasoline in the hands of independent refiners removed from the market.

It was always my opinion as counsel for the P. and C. Committee that the letter of July 20, 1934, constituted a direction and an authorization for Mr. Arnott to take all the steps necessary to eliminate price wars and to remove the cause of such price wars, provided the means used did not violate Section 3(a)(2) of Title I of the NIRA. Under the letter Mr. Arnott was to bring about compliance with Rules 4 and 6 of Article V of the Code. This was to be done by informal cooperative action. Since distress gasoline causes price wars and prevents the bringing about of normal price levels, I believed that Mr. Arnott was empowered under the letter to appoint the Tank Car Stabilization Committee to investigate, to ascertain the conflicts existing with respect to what could be done about distress gasoline, and to undertake by informal, voluntary cooperative action to remove distress gasoline from the hands of independent refiners through purchases by major companies.

I believe this is a correct meaning of the letter of 3440 July 20, 1934. As a result of Mr. Fahy's statements to me at the conference I had about July 25, 1934, which I have recited above, I believe that what I have stated was the view of the Petroleum Administration. I regarded this conversation as an administrative interpretation by Mr. Ickes' authorized agent of the purpose of the letter of July 20, 1934, and the scope of the work which it authorized and directed to be done.

Mr. Lewin: We object to it. There are a number of grounds of objections.

I think the opinion of Mr. Titus is totally irrelevant, and I think your Honor has so held, and properly so. I think that being so any statement by Mr. Titus of the facts and circumstances leading up to the issuance of that letter of July 20, 1934, or its interpretation, would be irrelevant. I think the letter speaks for itself. I think it is clear. I think it is unambiguous, and I think its construction is for the Court.

The only thing we don't insist upon is the presence of Mr. Titus.

The Court: The Court agrees with you. Objection sustained. Exception allowed.

3441 Mr. Donovan: Mr. Lewin, I think through some oversight this was not admitted, if you have no objection (showing document to Mr. Lewin).

Your Honor, may I include this in the offer?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Donovan: This is exhibit number 844, an order dated November 2, 1934, signed by Harold L. Ickes, together with document thereto as follows:

"Form of contract."

Mr. Dorr: Now, also, there is pending before your Honor, on which you have made no ruling yet, the Final Report of the Marketing Division, which makes or contains the reference to the Tank Car Committee as one of the most important of the committees appointed under the letter of July 20th; which we think also is clearly admissible, perhaps on different grounds, as showing that it was a committee of which the Government had knowledge, and which they knew was operating as a committee under the letter of July 20th.

The Court: As to the report, Exhibit 914 you need say no more on that. The objection to that will be sustained. The objection to the report of the Board is sustained. I want to give some consideration to the report of Secretary Ickes, Exhibit 917. Exception allowed.

3442 The Court: While it is on my mind: The other day a portion of the annual report of the Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year ending May 30, 1935, Exhibit 917, was offered, certain portions of it.

The Court will admit a certain portion, but not all that was offered, and I will admit it in this way:

Counsel for the defense may read, starting in the middle of the first paragraph on page 37 and ending on the marked portion on page 38, into the record. Exception allowed.

Mr. Donovan: I will wait until I finish with this witness.

The Court: We will take these documents, and take the offer of proof last. Now, there is Exhibit 844. Have you a copy of that, Mr. Lewin?

Mr. Lewin: I am not sure that I have any copies. Do you want me to look at it?

The Court: Yes (handing document to Mr. Lewin).

Mr. Lewin: This deals with 1934 buying programs, and you have once ruled those out of evidence, because they have nothing to do with this case.

The Court: The objection is sustained to that.
3443 Exception allowed.

Mr. Dorr: Exhibit No. 829 is the order which was issued by the Secretary providing for—under the Code of Fair Competition, providing for the naming of minimum prices below which crude oil should not be sold and refined gasoline should not be sold. It fixed them on the basis—it fixed the crude oil price at that time at $1.11, and it fixed—I offer that EXHIBIT and EXHIBIT 830.

So that we have here in these documents and in that—a construction by the Administrator of what is a natural relationship, which he confirmed in his annual report, which we have offered in evidence, a natural relationship between crude and refined. It is simply giving the history of the thing, the part of the history of the whole situation, which everyone had in mind—the Secretary had in mind when he wrote the report, and everyone else had in mind, because they lived with the problem during the whole time, and we say it is part of the circumstances of the time which must be taken into consideration in determining whether what was done was the reasonable effort to end an abuse which is artificially depressing the price, and whether—and that for that reason it was under the circumstances of the industry, the circumstances of the time, a reasonable action for 3444 these people to take—not a reasonable price—we are not concerned with that, but a reasonable effort to preserve and make posssible a fair, competitive price.

The Court: The objection of the Government that they are irrelevant and immaterial is sustained. Exception allowed.

Mr. Lewin: The objection to Exhibit 831, which Mr. Dorr touched on also, is that it deals with the 1934 buying pool.

The Court: The objection to that is sustained. Exception allowed.

All right. What is the next one? Exhibit 832?

Mr. Lewin: Exhibit 832 is the next one.

That is the letter to Secretary Ickes from Mr. Franklin, I think.

Mr. Dorr: This also relates to the National Agency Agreement, and is the letter originally submitting it for the approval of the Secretary, which was subsequently given by one of the orders which your Honor has just excluded.

The Court: I see.

Mr. Dorr: And that, I suppose, your Honor, follows the same ruling?

The Court: The same ruling.

3445 Mr. Dorr: And may we have an exception on all the grounds stated in argument, at this time?

The Court: The same ruling, and you may have an exception.

Mr. Lewin: Exhibit No. 845, your Honor, is the order by the Secretary, approving a formal contract for the purchase of gasoline in one of the 1934 buying pools.

The Court: The same objection to that?

Mr. Lewin: Same objection.

The Court: The same ruling.

Mr. Dorr: And the same reasons and exceptions?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Lewin: Exhibit 846, your Honor, is an order dated September 8, 1934, signed by the Secretary together with documents attached thereto, Exhibit A and Exhibit B. The order also deals with a 1934 buying pool, the one run by Mr. France's Program Committee.

The Court: The same objection, the same ruling, and you may have an exception.

Mr. Dorr: That, I think, is one of those which I referred to in my previous offer, your Honor.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Lewin: Exhibit 847, your Honor, is an order, dated August 13, 1934, of the Secretary of the Interior, together with a document attached thereto, 3446 known as a form of agreement; and it, again, is an order and a form of agreement relating to a 1934 buying pool, and is objected to on the same ground.

Mr. Dorr: There is one other ground, your Honor, which perhaps I should state for the admissibility of certain of these exhibits, particularly the ones which have just been excluded.

There has some contention been made here that the Refinery Amendment provided an exclusive method of dealing with buying; that, after that Refinery Amendment, why, then, the only thing that could have been done was a buying arrangement which was approved under that Amendment.

As appears from these exhibits, certain of these buying arrangements were authorized and were approved, but not under that Refinery Amendment; which, I think, is merely confirmation of what is apparent on the face of the Code itself, that that was merely a piece of mechanism which might be used, but which of course did not provide that some other methods of buying might not be carried on. And the Secretary clearly recognized that by approving other arrangements under another section, under the general provision of the N. I. R. A., and under another section of the Code.

3447 The Court: The objection of the Government to Exhibit 847 will be sustained; and you may have an exception.

Now, 711 is the Code, isn't it?

Mr. Donovan: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: And the same objection is made to that, I suppose?

Mr. Lewin: The same objection, yes, your Honor.

The Court: The objection to that is sustained. Exception allowed.

Mr. Dorr: I told your Honor I was going to come back on this Pennsylvania situation, and I think the situation there too has changed. I was going to come back anyway, but I think the situation now is this: The government has now offered the letter of July 20.

One of the things which is most important in construing any document is administrative interpretation.

They have contended that that letter, looking to certain expressions in it, is confined to dealing with local price wars in the retail markets.

> (Mr. Dorr offers EXHIBIT 915, letter Swanson to Brundred, May 18, 1935; EXHIBIT 916, telegram Fahy to Arnott, May 14, 1935; and EXHIBIT 973, letter Swanson to Davis, in evidence.)

3448 Mr. Lewin: I object to the admission of these exhibits.

The Court: I don't care for any further argument on that. Your objection is sustained. Exception allowed.

Mr. Francis: I wanted to offer, your Honor, or make a tender of proof of some testimony given by Harold L. Ickes in hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on Finance of the United States Senate, 75th Congress, First Session, on Senate Bill 790, on February 12, 15, 16 and 17, 1937.

Now, this is an official document which sets forth the following proceedings which I desire to offer in evidence, and get a ruling from your Honor as to whether or not you think it is admissible.

The Court: What is the date of that?

Mr. Francis: February 15, 1937, just last year. Senator Connally asked these questions:

> "Senator Connally: What did you call them buying pools, or something of that kind?
> "Secretary Ickes: Yes, there was a buying pool; I think it fair to call it that.

"Senator Connally: With a view to relieving the pressure and helping the little fellows get rid of their gasoline that was distressed?

"Secretary Ickes: That is right.

3449 "Senator Connally: And yet holding it, and conserving it for future use?

"Secretary Ickes: That is right.

"Senator Connally: Mr. Holland is in possession, is he, of the details in regard to those buying pools and things of that kind?

"Secretary Ickes: Mr. Holland or Mr. Swanson has all of that, because he was with the Oil Administration at the time.

"Senator Connally: Would it bother you if we would hear Mr. Swanson, injecting him right at this point?

"Secretary Ickes: I should be very glad to have you do that.

"Senator Connally: What was the operation under those buying pools, Mr. Swanson?

"Mr. Swanson: Mr. Chairman there were several so-called buying pool efforts, that began in December of 1933 and continued from then on during the entire period of the Petroleum Code.

"Senator Connally: What was the purpose of the Department in participating or in authorizing or in aiding those buying pools?

"Mr. Swanson: It was an effort on the Department and the industrial committees to bring 3450 about the normal relationship between gasoline prices and crude oil prices, in order to permit the independent, non-integrated refiner to be able to operate without loss.

"Senator Connally: What do you figure is the proper relationship between the price of crude and gasoline?

"Mr. Swanson: It varies with different price levels, but at a crude oil price of $1.00, the normal price relationship between crude oil and gasoline is as 18½ is to 1. In other words, the crude oil price per barrel should be 18½ times the refinery price per gallon of regular gasoline."

I want to offer that, your Honor, which was in the hearings before the Senate Committee; and then the following statement before the same Committee of a question and an answer, which reads as follows:

> "Senator Connally: If oil is $1.00 per barrel, you figure that 1/18.5 of that would be what?
>
> "Mr. Swanson: That would be the normal wholesale gasoline price.
>
> "Senator Connally: That would be a little less than 5¢ a gallon?
>
> "Mr. Swanson: No. It would be a little bit 3451 above 5¢. It would be 5.5¢.
>
> "Senator Connally: Now, Mr. Secretary, I understand your testimony, in the concluding portion of it, to not encourage or favor the price wars that you speak of in the gasoline industry, whether or not that is wholesome for the industry or the consumer either?
> "Secretary Ickes: I do not think it is wholesome."

That is before the Senate Committee. And then before the House Committee, this excerpt from a statement from Harold L. Ickes which I am reading from page 4 of the hearings before the Sub-committee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, 75th Congress, First Session, on Senate 790 and H. R. 5366, April 27, 1937:

This is a statement, an excerpt from a statement of Harold L. Ickes:

> "Since I talked with you before, the demand for petroleum products has increased to such an extent that crude oil production has advanced approximately 900,000 barrels, to a level of more than 3,400,000 barrels daily. All-time production records are being broken one after 3452 another. Posted crude oil prices have advanced more than 20¢ a barrel. During most of the period in which the Connally Act has been in operation, the smaller and non-integrated refiners have been able to operate at a profit. Retail gasoline price wars have been infrequent and of limited extent, and yet there has been no material increase in the retail price of gasoline."

Those statements, your Honor, I think are admissible in this case because the Government contends that, due to an alleged combination and conspiracy and agreement, these prices advanced to high, artificial and non-competitive levels, both the tank car market and the retail price market.

The Court: The objection of the Government to that offer is sustained. Exception allowed.

(Parts of EXHIBIT 997 offered and received in evidence were read to the jury and parts summarized by Mr. Webster.)

Mr. Donovan: Your Honor, the defense rests.

Thereupon, the plaintiff, the United States, to maintain further the issues on its part, called to testify the following witnesses and introduced the following testimony in rebuttal:

3453 W. J. MILLER, recalled as a witness for the Government, on rebuttal testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

I have made a study of Exhibit 868, the chart of Danciger sales, which was offered here through the defense witness, J. D. Miller. I have made a particular study of transactions shown on that chart which are supposed to have been sales of third grade gasoline above the low of the published publications.

Those were supposed to have been sales to jobbers and consumers by the Danciger Company at prices above the low of the Chicago Journal of Commerce and Platt's Oilgram. I did not have time to check all these, so I made a test check and confined the check to the months of July, August, October and November, 1935. I just picked those months at random.

At my request the defense accountants furnished me with a list of those sales, represented by the dots in those months, which were made above the low. There are 38 black dots up there (indicating) representing 47 sales above the low of 47 cars during the months July, August October and November. There is one blue dot in there that represents a sale to a consumer. All the rest are supposed to represent sales to jobbers of third grade 3454 gasoline at a price over the low of the published quotations. Those were in fact sales to jobbers and consumers.

In most instances I found that that gasoline was not third grade. It was a gasoline described as 62-65 octane gasoline, which Danciger Company sells at a premium above third grade gasoline. The records of the Danciger Company show that they had two grades of gasoline, one known as third grade and another grade that was a better grade. The better grade was usually sold at ¼¢, in some instances ⅛¢, above the low quotation for Chicago Journal of Commerce third grade.

I don't think it is proper to compare the prices of those sales described as 62-65 octane with third grade prices in the published journals. That was an error in my opinion.

Of these 47 transactions there were 40 that represent that type of gasoline; and the other 7 represent gasoline described as third grade gasoline.

In those cases where the gasoline was actually third grade gasoline, I found that there was a rebate of ¼¢ made to the jobber in whose territory that gasoline was sold. So the net proceeds to the Danciger Company was 4¾¢ instead of 5¢, the same as the low quoted in the Chicago Journal of Commerce.

There were 2 or 3 instances when the gasoline was sold in a compartment car or a 6,000 gallon car. It 3455 was the practice of the Danciger Company to charge a premium on third grade when it was sold in small quantities like that.

So all the sales at figures above the low come into three categories: first, sales of third grade gasoline; second, sales where a rebate was made, so that the Danciger Company really got a price that was comparable to the low of the Journal; and, third, sales made in a special small type of car, a compartment car. The Danciger Company sold at ⅛¢ premium above the low when they sold it that way. I don't think we found any transactions that should be classified as above the low, unless one makes an exception to those in compartment cars. Those were the only ones that I would say could be properly classified, but it was explained by the Danciger policies to make that extra charge.

At the request of Government counsel I have made a study of purchases of gasoline from independent refiners by the Globe Companies. I have compared the prices at which such gasoline was purchased from the independent refiners with the prices at which the Globe Companies resold the same gasoline to jobbers. I found that practically all this gasoline which was purchased from independent refiners was either sent to storage or sold at a loss.
3456 Beginning in March, 1935, the purchases were from Omar Refining Company. I have them listed here, showing the price they paid and the price they received when they sold it. On March 6th there was a purchase: total price, $344, that was paid, and sold for $335, a loss of $8.76. It was the same gasoline, sold in the same car. The invoice dates were, I think, usually one day later than the purchase invoice, but the gasoline was, of course, never received by the Globe Company. It was sent directly from the independent refiner from which it was purchased to the jobber to which it was sold.

The Globe Companies are defendants in this case. They are refiners. I have invoices indicating that they purchased gasoline during 1935 from independent refiners. I also have invoices showing they sold the same gasoline to jobbers. I can compare the invoices of the Globe Companies on the purchases with the invoices showing the sales of the same gasoline. The sales and purchase invoices are right there. When I compare all the documents I have, I can show the Globe Companies bought gasoline from a particular refiner on a particular day. And I can trace that gasoline, and show that gasoline was shipped from that independent refiner to a particular jobber, a customer of the Globe Company. I can find out how much the Globe Company paid for the gasoline, 3457 and how much they received for the gasoline, and that is what I have done. I have the actual numbers of the tank cars, the numbers listed on the invoices, and where it was shipped from.

On the same date, March 6, 1935, they bought another car, paying $344.97. They sold that for $350.05. There was a profit of $5.08.

Another purchase on the same day was bought at $345.57, and sold for the same price at the same date. There was no profit to cover overhead. The actual dollars and cents they paid was equal to the actual dollars and cents they received.

Also there were 22 cars purchased on various dates from March 6th through March 16, which were sold at a loss. Of those 22 cars, 17 were at a loss of about $10.20 a car; 3 at a loss of about 61¢ a car; and 2 at a loss of about $13.60 a car. 2 cars purchased during that time were sold at a profit of about $10.20 a car; 2 at a profit of about $20.30 a car; and 1 at a profit of $50.47. One car purchased was sent to storage.

The same situation continued in April. They bought from Omar in April, and sold most of them at a loss.

They bought from Omar in May and sold practically all of them at a loss. There were 15 purchases from Vickers in May. All of those purchases were sold at a loss. That is the difference between the sales invoice and the purchase orders.

3458 In June they purchased several cars from Simms Oil Company and sold those at a loss. This was all the three Globe companies. I have got all these together.

There were 8 cars purchased from Simms Oil Company in June, and 7 of them were sold at a loss and 1 sold at the same price. There was 1 in June, purchased from Omar, sold at a loss.

In July they purchased 5 cars from H. H. Cross Company. 2 of them sold at a loss, 1 at a profit, 1 went to storage, and 1 was sold at the same price which they paid.

In August they purchased from East Texas Refining Company 15 cars, 11 of which were sold at a loss and the remainder at the same price which they paid.

In September they purchased 5 cars from Dale W. Moore Company, selling 2 at a profit, 2 at the same price, and 1 at a loss.

In November there were 10 cars purchased from Premier Oil Refining Company of Texas, and they were all sold at a loss. Nearly all the remaining cars were sent to storage. In April, 1936 there were 3 cars purchased from Olney, sold at a loss of approximately $26 a car, and the remainder of the cars were sent to storage.

I have studied every purchase that was made by the Globe companies from independent refiners during 3459 1935 and down to April 30, 1936. I haven't summarized these by numbers, but I believe that at least 75% of them were sold at a loss. A large part of the remaining 25% went to storage. I couldn't trace the resale of it at all.

The Globe plant at Blackwell, Oklahoma, was closed for the first 4 months in 1935, until some time in May. They were also closed in February and March, 1936. The McPherson plant, however, I think, was open all of that time and operating. The Lemont plant was operating during that period. All the Globe refineries were operating during a part of May and during all of the remainder of 1935, and in January, 1936, and also in April, 1936.

The Court: Q. Do you know what average profit was made by major companies selling gasoline, during that period, on each car?

A. No; as a general thing—they consume the gasoline themselves, and didn't resell it in the same form that it was purchased.

Q. Do you know what the average profit was on cars that were sold during that time?

A. No, I wouldn't be able to state that. This was the only company that sold practically all of their gasoline as they bought it.

Mr. Chaffetz: Q. This was the only company 3460 where you could trace the sales against the purchases; is that what you mean?

A. There were some other companies where they did that on a few invoices, but a very small number. This is the only one I made any particular study of.

Q. This is the only company where you could make a general survey?

A. Yes.

The Court: Q. From all of your study and investigation you made in this matter, do you know how much of a profit they usually made on a sale—

A. No, I haven't any idea.

Q. A carload sale?

A. I haven't the slightest idea.

I have made a study of the invoices and purchase orders of Sinclair Refining Company which are in the files of the Clerk of this Court. Those are their invoices and purchase orders relating to purchases by Sinclair from independent refiners in the Mid-Continent field and in East Texas.

I didn't find any evidence of any purchase by Sinclair Refining Company in East Texas in either January or February, 1935. Their first purchases in East Texas were in March, 1935.

In the Mid-Continent—I am referring to the 3461 Chicago Journal of Commerce—approximately 95% of the total purchases were at the low or above the low; and in the East Texas field approximately 74% were purchased at the low of Platt's quotations for East Texas, and none above the low.

I have made a study of data obtained from the records of the Federal Tender Board in East Texas. This tabulation I have pertains to all refined gasoline that was shipped out of the East Texas field between March 1, 1935 and March 3, 1936.

All refined gasoline that was shipped was shipped under Federal Tender. These were taken from the Federal Tender Board's records, which in turn were compiled from the railroad shipping records. I have the data in Madison from which I made my computation.

According to my computations, those shipments were from 34 independent refiners located in the East Texas area, and they were classified as to certain major companies, and then all others. That covers the period, March 1, 1935 to March 3, 1936. The total cars recorded were 24,052 cars, included in this group.

(Tabulation referred to marked Exhibit 1032 for identification.)

(The witness then recited the total figures and the percentage figures, appearing at the end of Exhibit 1032, with respect to each major company named on said exhibit.)

3462 Mr. Chaffetz: I want to offer that in evidence.

Mr. Donovan: Now, I object to any total there, your Honor, as to including Texas, Gulf and Louisiana Oil, not present defendants.

Mr. Chaffetz: If your Honor please, the defendants offered a lot of exhibits excluding Gulf, Louisiana Oil, Tide Water and others, although we think the evidence shows those companies were included; and I think we are entitled to present our case in our own way, in the same way that they were entitled to present their defense in their own way.

The Court: Objection overruled. Exception allowed.

Mr. Donovan: Your Honor, I would like to point out that there is a directed verdict as to Texas, Gulf and Louisiana Oil; and therefore this evidence is inadmissible with respect to those companies, as against these defendants.

The Court: I have already ruled on it. Objection overruled. Exception allowed.

(Tabulation previously so marked for identification is received in evidence as EXHIBIT 1032.)

I have also made a computation of purchases of third grade gasoline in tank cars by Sinclair Refining Company from independent refiners in the East Texas field during the period, March 1, 1935 to April 30, 1936. 3463

(Tabulation produced by counsel is marked Exhibit 1033 for identification.)

This exhibit was taken from all the Sinclair invoices and purchase orders which are in the files of the Clerk of this Court. This exhibit is based on all those documents. This exhibit shows, as to the total purchases from March 1, 1935 down to April 30, 1936, 4263 cars.

(Tabulation referred to is received in evidence as EXHIBIT 1033.)

Cross-Examination by Mr. Donovan.

I said I made a test examination of certain records with regard to the Danciger Company. In most instances the sales records were accompanied by an octane test. In one case the octane test showed 62 plus, in another case 63, and in the remaining cases it was 62, if it was shown at all.

I examined E. Hansen Oil Company, date of shipment August 8, 1935. The octane test showed 62 as the actual octane.

I examined Simonson Cash Supply Company, August 8, 1935, and the actual octane rating there showed 62.

I examined Nels Simonson, St. Paul, Minnesota, 3464 August 10, 1935, and the actual octane test shown there was 62.

I examined Cline Oil Company, and the actual octane test showed 62.

I examined another one of Cline Oil Company on August 28, 1935. The actual test there was 62.

As to Central Oil & Grease Company, Rock Island, Illinois, the test there was 62.

Val Simonson on August 30th was 62.

Johnston Oil Company, of Johnston, North Dakota, on August 30th was 62.

I examined Midland Products Company, Fargo, October 8. That shipment was from Gilliland Refining Company, and I don't believe they had an octane laboratory report on that.

I examined The American Petroleum Company on October 18th. That actual octane test was 62.

Cline Oil Company was 62.

Diamond Products Company on October 22d was 62.

Neil Simonson on October 23d was 62.

Able Oil Company on November 4th was 62.

There were 2 that were more than 62. One was Co-op Gas & Oil Company on October 31st; that was 62 plus. Ireland's Lumber Yard on November 11; that rated 63.

The rest of them were either rated 62, or I didn't have 3465 the report. The majority of them were rated, however, as 62. And the rest had no octane rating excepting one which was 63 and the other 62 plus. The rest were 62, or they didn't have an octane rating accompanying them.

I am not familiar with whether paragraph 14 in this indictment defines third grade gasoline as gasoline having an octane rating of less than 65. I was under the impression that it was 62 and below. I don't think they could be possibly classified as third grade gasoline, when the company was selling third grade gasoline on the very same day at a price ¼¢ below these sales. It is correct that 62 octane third grade gasoline is quoted in the Chicago Journal of Commerce.

The Danciger Company sells a third grade gasoline. They obtain their price from the Chicago Journal of Commerce. They quote the third grade quotation from the Chicago Journal of Commerce for third grade gasoline. They also sell what they call a 62-65 "Road Runner" gasoline, which they contend to be a better gasoline, and they charge ¼¢ more for it.

There are indications here that on the same day the same man bought 2 cars of gasoline, one third grade and the other 62-65. He pays ¼¢ more for the 62-65 than for what they call third grade.

The majority of these items had an actual octane test of 62, and 62 and below is third grade. This 62-65 3466 is middle grade, at least so Danciger calls it. Danciger sells two grades. They sell what they call a third grade, which I presume is 62 octane and below. I don't know what the definition of it is. 62-65 is their middle grade, and they sell another grade.

Q. Now, I show you the Tulsa edition of Platt's Oilgram, and direct your attention to the bottom of the page, there (indicating) under "United States." What is that?

A. (Reading:) "Oklahoma Refinery Market, Tulsa"?

Q. Now, will you just read that aloud?

A. (Reading:) "62 octane—U. S. Motor gasoline, 62 octane and below, third grade, 4¾¢ to 4⅞¢."

Q. Yes. Now, I understood you to testify that the actual octane rating of these various items to which I called your attention, in all but two cases, was 62 octane; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

I do not know what the actual octane rating was in those cases of third grade sold at a lower price. I don't believe they furnish a laboratory report on those. I don't recall seeing them. I don't know, for example, whether or not it was 57. The invoice on the one rated at 63, that I 3467 mentioned (witness examined memoranda) was described at 60-62, 400 endpoint, 62 plus octane, under 80 initial, "Road Runner."

I think the files will reflect that the rebate I spoke of was given because the sale was made in someone else's territory. It was made direct from the refinery, and in most instances the sale was to the Independent Service Station at Groton, South Dakota. That was in the territory of the House of Gurney, so the House of Gurney got this ¼¢ on each car. I presume it would be a contract with the House of Gurney. I don't think they would—it must have been a contract. The purchaser didn't get the rebate. It was the House of Gurney. I imagine it got the rebate because it was sold in his territory; it was his sale; he was entitled to ¼¢, I presume, on every gallon of gasoline sold in his territory. So far as the purchaser was concerned, he paid the price. It was then correctly reported on the chart, so far as the purchaser is concerned.

Referring to Globe, I have the invoice here, Invoice number L 3818, Union Oil Company, Kansas City, Missouri, shipped to Farmers Cooperative, 3-18-35. "Your order number: Contract," is what it refers to. It says "Contract." I did not look into the question of whether these resale losses were caused by provisions of marginal contracts with jobbers. I just listed the sales invoice 3468 and the purchase invoice side by side. I don't know whether or not these resale losses were caused by provisions of marginal contracts with jobbers. I don't know what the reason was for them. I don't recall what the jobber contracts were for Globe at this time. I don't recall a provision in the contracts that Globe had with jobbers or cooperatives, where it had to deliver gasoline at a price lower than the trade paper quotations. I know if Globe didn't have the gasoline, they would have to buy it, and if they had such contracts, I would presume they would have to fulfill those contracts. I can't say as to the provisions of the contracts at this time. I didn't study them in connection with this.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

Coming back to the Danciger situation, if one buys third grade gasoline, which is known as 62 or below gasoline, the seller can ship any octane rating below 62. He can ship 55, he can ship 57, or he can ship 50, I would think. It is "62 and below". I guess he could ship anything below. If what the man promised to send was something up to 62, if he sent anything up to 62, I would think it would come within what he promised to send. But if he agrees to sell something from 62 to 65, I would think he has got to send a minimum of 62. It would seem to me the specifica-3469 tions would be a whole lot more strict with 62-65 than with 62 and below, and from my examination of the Danciger records, I know that is the way they carry on their business practically 100%. I know from the records that this gasoline that we are talking about was sold as 62-65 gasoline. It was sold as middle grade gasoline, and the price that was made between the buyer and the seller was made on the basis of the fact that they were selling middle bracket, and not third grade gasoline. He could have bought third grade gasoline on the same day at ¼¢ below the price he paid for that. But 62 octane has been defined as third grade gasoline.

Those other transactions that were, according to this chart, Exhibit 868, made above the low, were peculiar transactions, and the price that Danciger received for its gasoline was exactly the low of the published prices, and not above them.

Recross Examination by Mr. Donovan.

I have the tabulation, Exhibit 1032, with me. Cities Service Company is the way the record reflected it. Possibly that is an abbreviation for Cities Service Export.

Gulf is 2,450, or 10.2%; Texas is 900 cars, 3.7%; Louisiana Oil is 1015 cars, 4.2%; Cities Service is 320 cars, 1.3%. That is a total of 4,685 or 19.85%. The other percentage with Texas and Gulf included was about 44%. It was 3470 originally 43.3%. With the 19% deducted it is 23.8%.

In my computation on the chart, Exhibit 1032, I included independent refiners that are not named as alleged co-conspirators in this indictment. I do not think all those are named. I took all the refiners I had, and I did not check them against the indictment. These are the refiners that were operating.

I included in this list all independent refiners that were shipping refined gasoline during this period that were located in the East Texas field. I did not check to find out whether or not those I did include were named in the indictment. I recognized some of the names, but I did not make any check. I did not distinguish between those that are included in the indictment and those that are not. If I took only those named in the indictment, and included only those, and subtracted from those my percentage would be lower. There is no question about that. How much lower I cannot say.

Q. Now, in making your audit of the major purchases did you classify 62 octane guaranteed material as third grade?

A. As I recall, all those invoices to major companies, and all those invoices too for that matter that I considered third grade, described the gasoline as 60-62 400 endpoint, or in some cases they have de-3471 scribed it as U. S. Motor.

Q. I am talking now about purchases in the Mid-Continent field. Did you classify 62 octane guaranteed material as third grade?

A. I don't remember that I had any that was classified in that manner.

Q. You don't remember that?

A. That it was 62 or below. I classified them as third grade gasoline.

Q. Now, I am asking you how you would classify 62 octane guaranteed?

A. I don't remember that I had any of those.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

I do not recall that there was a single instance of that.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Wood.

I testified that my study of the Sinclair purchase orders developed that 95% of those purchases in the Mid-Continent field were at or above the low of the Journal of Commerce. That is for the period of 14 months from March 1, 1935 to April 30, 1936. That includes all purchases, whether made on the spot market, under contract, on the basis of publication prices, so much below publication prices, or what not.
3472 I think I referred to the Chicago Journal of Commerce, Group 3, as the journal publication with which I made that comparison. I believe the figures were practically the same in Platt's Oilgram for group 3, for Oklahoma.

That would mean that on the basis of my study 5% of the purchases were made below the low. I think that would be so. About 90% were made at the low. I think 5% above the low and 5% below the low would be approximately correct figures.

That includes all the purchases made within the Mid-Continent field by Sinclair in Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas,—I think just those three states. There may have been some in Kansas. I found a considerable quantity of gasoline during that period bought from Root Refining Company at Eldorado, Arkansas. The purchase orders show that gasoline was bought at a flat price. In most instances they were the same as the Chicago Journal of Commerce for Group 3. There were some instances where it was higher.

Every car that was bought at Root Refining Company was bought f. o. b. Eldorado at a group 3 price quoted in the Journal. I think that every car went to some point in Louisiana or Arkansas, and I imagine that the freight from Eldorado would be less than if it had been bought
f. o. b. group 3. But I have not made any such calcu-3473 lation. I cannot say that every car that was bought from Root Refining Company instead of being bought at the low was bought below the low.

If the purchaser saved the freight the net result would be the same as if he bought it on the Chicago Journal of Commerce.

Q. So if you look at the matter of the freight rate, every car bought from Root Refining Company was purchased below the low on the market with which it was compared?

A. I do not agree with you, because some were purchased at a figure in excess of the low of the Chicago Journal of Commerce on the day the purchase was made.

Q. But you just told me they were purchased on Chicago Journal of Commerce group 3.

A. I thought you meant on that basis.

Some of Sinclair's purchases from Root Refining Company were purchased in excess of the Chicago Journal of Commerce on the day the purchase was made. A great majority were purchased at the same quotation as published in the Chicago Journal of Commerce.

Whenever the purchases f. o. b. Eldorado were on the basis of the publication price of group 3, the net cost to the purchaser was less than if he bought it in group 3; if there is a saving on freight rate it would be less. The total 3474 cost to Sinclair Refining Company for delivering that gasoline to the purchaser was what it paid to the refiner, plus the freight, plus a lot of other incidents, I presume, at least those two items. If there is a saving in freight, the net result was a lower price. I did not take any freight rates into consideration.

The Journal of Commerce and Platt's Oilgram publish the prices in the Arkansas market, or Platt's does. I did not make a comparison as to whether the prices paid by Sinclair to Root Refining Company were in every instance less than the journal prices in the Arkansas market. I know from my knowledge of the relationship of these markets that that market is higher.

If I had compared the purchases against a quotation that was higher than the one used, they would have been lower than the quotation. If I had compared the prices paid on the purchases at Eldorado, Arkansas, with the Arkansas market as reported in Platt's, I think I possibly would have found all those purchases were below the low, or a good percentage of them anyhow.

I think possibly a couple of hundred of the cars going to make up this 5% above the low were purchased from Root. At least half of the cars that go to make up the 5% that I say were purchased above the low were purchased from Root. I have 249 cars above the low. 167 of 3475 those were purchased from Root. If I exclude those, the number of cars purchased above the low would be approximately less than 2½% of the total.

I do not have the figure here as to how many of Root's cars were at the low. I just have those that were above the low. I do not have the figure as to how many cars altogether were at the low. I took that total figure that you had in your exhibit, all I had, 5200, or some such figure. I made no separate computation. I just have those which I found above the low.

I imagine it is reasonable to say that about one-third of all the purchases by Sinclair in the Mid-Continent field were from Root. If I take those freight savings into account practically all of those on that basis would be below the low of the Journal as against purchases there f. o. b. group 3, as far as net cost to the purchaser is concerned. If I threw those into the column below the low I would greatly increase the number below the low.

In East Texas 74% were at the low and none above. That means that 26% of Sinclair's purchases in East Texas during that period were below the low. I haven't the data before me from which I could tell you what that relationship of prices was during the period of the price rise, namely, March, April and May, 1935. I took it as a whole. It would take a little time to work it out. I don't 3476 have the information to be able to say whether it is a fact that substantially all of Sinclair's purchases in East Texas during the period of the price rise, namely, March, April and May, 1935, were below the low.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

Q. I think Colonel Donovan asked you whether, in respect to your East Texas Tender Board figures, if you had taken only the independent refiners named in the indictment, the percentage of purchases by majors would be the smaller; I understood you to say "yes". Did you mean to give that answer?

A. I mean to say that the number of cars would be smaller. The percentage may have been smaller, or may have been the same, or may have been greater.

Q. You don't know?

A. I don't know what it was.

Recross Examination by Mr. Donovan.

On those shipments from East Texas, I took into account, in making my computations in Exhibit 1032, all of the shipments, the interstate shipments and also the intrastate shipments. It was based upon the Federal Tender 3477 Board records which were compiled from the railroad records. It includes all cars.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

It includes all cars shipped by any one of these independent refiners. They may have been shipped to a point within Texas, or may possibly have been shipped to a point within the East Texas field, for that matter. It would include all shipments except truck shipments. These were tank car shipments, of course. I included in that all shipments within the state as well as without.

3478 VIRGIL B. EDWARDS, a witness for the Government, on rebuttal testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

I live in Minneapolis, Minnesota. I am connected with Danciger Refining Company and have been since 1933. I am in charge of sales out of the Minneapolis office. That office covers Minnesota, a part of North and South Dakota, and part of Wisconsin.

I heard the testimony that Mr. W. J. Miller gave a few minutes ago. I am familiar with the quality of gasoline that the Danciger Company sells. I sell third grade gasoline. I was selling during 1935 and 1936.

During 1935 and 1936 I sold a grade of gasoline that I designated as 62-65 octane gasoline. We usually sold our third grade gasoline based on the low of the Chicago Journal of Commerce.

Q. Do you mean you sold it to anybody on the basis of the low of the Chicago Journal of Commerce, date of shipment, or did you sell it at a flat price which would correspond to the low of the Chicago Journal of Commerce?

A. Most generally it was a sale at a flat price which would correspond with the Journal.

3479 That was the third grade classification in the Chicago Journal of Commerce, unless it was future shipment, and in that case it would be the quotation on the date of shipment.

During 1935 and 1936, gasoline of 62-65 octane was sold at ⅛¢ or ¼¢ above the low of U. S. Motor shown in the Journal of Commerce. This gasoline that we sell as 62-65 sometimes tested exactly 62. When we sell it, we sell it as 62-65. The customer doesn't know whether he is going to get 62, 63, 64 or 65. We feel we have discharged our obligation to him if we give him at least 62, but we never give him less than 62. Not based on those orders.

When we sold third grade gasoline we wouldn't specify any octane rating, as a general rule. The octane rating of third grade gasoline might run 55, 57, or up to 60, but we generally sell it as straight run gasoline, and not as anti-knock gasoline. When we sell third grade gasoline we don't guarantee any specification in respect to octane. We might infer that it might have a pretty good octane. That is from a sales standpoint. We might tell the customer it was 57 octane, but we wouldn't guarantee that.

I imagine I have on the same day sold to the same customer a certain quantity of third grade and a certain quantity of 62-65 gasoline. I don't have the records in front 3480 of me. If I did the 62-65 and 60-62, 400 end-point would be at a different price. When I say 60-62, 400 endpoint, by that I mean 62 gravity, 400 endpoint. I consider that third grade.

When our company sells in compartment cars rather than ordinary tank cars, or on any special specifications, it generally asks us to get ⅛¢ better price. The credit standing of our customer might have some bearing on whether or not he buys at the same price as other customers or whether he pays a higher price. Sometimes, if the man's credit is risky and we have to take a credit risk, it might be possible that we might charge him a little bit more than we would another customer. I don't recall any specific case where we did, but that would be possible.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Donovan.

The credit standing wouldn't change the type of gasoline or the quality of the gasoline.

Q. Now, if your gasoline which you sold had an actual octane rating, as shown by tests, of 62, and the Chicago Journal of Commerce and Platt's Oilgram called 62 and below third grade, then that gasoline would be third grade according to those two papers, wouldn't it?

A. It all—yes, it would be. It would all depend 3481 on who is buying it or who is selling it, as to how they wanted to classify it.

Q. On what the actual test was?

A. Yes, it would be 62 octane, and it could be called 62-65, or as only "62 and below." It could be called third grade, according to the Journal.

3482 THOMAS R. VAUGHN, a witness for the Government, on rebuttal testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

I live in Chicago. I am in the wholesale marketing business. I buy and sell gasoline in tank car lots. I was in that business in 1935 and 1936 in Chicago.

I don't think I could classify the types of refineries from which I purchase my gasoline. I have bought from major oil companies at times, but I buy mostly from independent refiners. That was true in 1935 and 1936.

I sell my gasoline to anybody who will buy it. Most of my business is with independent jobbers, but with some sales to other refiners, to other marketers, and sometimes to industries that buy in tank car lots.

Q. Now, do you recall any transaction between you and the Globe Oil & Refining Company in the Fall of 1935?

A. Well, I have sold Globe some gasoline on one or two occasions, maybe two or three occasions. I have bought gasoline from them on a few occasions.

Without something to guide me, I can't pin it down to the fall of 1935, because I don't recall exact dates.

3483 Q. Do you remember whether in the month of September, 1935, you sold some gasoline to the Globe Oil & Refining Company?

A. I am not in a position to say in September of 1935. I don't remember the dates, and have nothing with me to refresh my memory on that.

Exhibit 1035 for identification is a sales acknowledgment from me to the Globe Oil Company, acknowledging a purchase of 20 cars of U. S. Motor Gasoline on September 18, 1935.

Exhibit 1034 for identification is Globe's purchase order on the same date, and for the same number of cars.

These documents refresh my recollection as to the transaction that you have inquired about. That transaction was a sale that I made to them at a time when they were wanting to buy some gasoline, and I happened to be able to get some and sold it to them. That is not all there was to the transaction. Mr. Brown Meece contacted me. Mr. Meece is an employee of Globe in their Chicago office. I don't know his title. I think he is the sales manager in the Chicago Division.

3484 He contacted me, and told me that they were wanting to buy some gasoline, and asked me what I could supply. I told him that I could sell him some gasoline. He wanted to know how much, and I told him that I had quite a quantity of gasoline that I had bought, to be taken over a period. I don't think that I told him definitely, maybe I did—I happen to know that I had, a few days prior to that, bought 50 cars of gasoline that was to be shipped as instructed over the balance of the month. It is possible that I mentioned the 50 cars.

Anyway, he wanted to buy all that I had. I refused because I had regular commitments coming in from customers, and I figured that if I should sell all that I had there, I would find myself out of gasoline. Some of it had been sold as I had bought it, to be shipped as instructed over the rest of the month, at a flat price, based on my cost price plus a satisfactory profit.

Eventually we agreed on 20 cars, and he asked me to come up to his office, which I did. During the time that I was there, he again tried to get me to sell him all that I had, and told me that he wasn't going to buy part of my gasoline and leave some of it in my hands to go out 3485 and ruin the market with. But I was firm in not selling more than the 20 cars that I offered to sell.

He asked his secretary to get some one, I can't tell you the name, but he said, "With the Shell Company." I don't know whether in the St. Louis office or in the Chicago office. But there was some little time in getting the connection, and I presume that it was some one in the St. Louis office. I don't know whether it was a long distance call. He told his secretary to get this party in the Shell office. I heard him say "The Shell office." I don't recall the name, but I think it was something like Loudi, or Lowery. Those names suggest themselves to me, but I can't be positive.

They had a telephone conversation, in which Meece told him that I had quite a little motor gasoline, and that I had agreed to let him have 20 cars. Apparently, from only one end of the telephone conversation, they insisted that he buy all that I had. So he told him that I wouldn't sell but 20 cars. And so, during the conversation, he said, "I think that we should buy these 20 cars, because Fanshier has promised us that if we will clean up what is in the hands of the brokers, they will raise the Journal quotation back up."

Q. Who was Fanshier, did you know?

3486 A. Fanshier is editor of the Petroleum column in the Chicago Journal of Commerce.

Mr. Lewin: And quotes the prices.

Mr. Chaffetz: Q. And to your knowledge, is he the one who is responsible for the prices published by the Chicago Journal of Commerce? Is that right?

A. Yes, it is my understanding that this is his responsibility.

Mr. Francis: Move to strike out all of that testimony, your Honor, as being entirely hearsay and opinion evidence as to any of these defendants on trial—especially as to all defendants outside of the particular one involved.

The Court: Overruled. Exception allowed.

Mr. Chaffetz: Q. It is the tank car quotations that I have in mind, when I asked you whether he is responsible for the prices published in the Chicago Journal of Commerce. Is that your understanding?

A. Well, the tank car prices are the only ones that I am familiar with, and that is what I understood.

Q. The spot market?

A. Yes, that is what I was testifying about.

3487 Q. The spot market tank car prices?

A. Yes.

That, I think, concludes that conversation. I don't remember how soon it stopped, but that is all that I recall of it.

The purchase was made, and shipments were to be made at the rate of 2 cars per day, excluding Sundays. Instead of shipping the merchandise that I had bought long over the month, I found out where I could buy 20 cars on that particular day, and with the same instructions that I had received. I bought 20 cars, then, in addition to what I owned, and applied the instructions against this new purchase of 20 cars bought from Central States Oil Company, I believe is the name,—it is the Imperial Refining Company—to be shipped out of Wickett, Texas. I placed the instructions.

They didn't ship absolutely 2 cars a day, as they were instructed to. They would ship 1 car, and then possibly they would ship 3 cars the next day. It averaged out at about that rate.

This purchase was made on September 18th, 1935, and on the 26th I got the invoices for the first shipments that were made. Up to this time, I don't think that anybody knew where the gasoline was coming from. But when they received the invoices, naturally they did.

3488 The Globe Company found out for the first time on September 26th, when they got the invoice, where the gasoline was coming from. 11 cars had been shipped up to that time, and they cancelled the balance of the instructions for the reason, as they put it in their excuse for cancelling, that they were not shipping as per schedule. They refused to take the balance of the 20 cars, although originally they had tried to buy from me all I had.

The Chicago Journal of Commerce quotation did go up September 19th. This transaction with Brown Meece of the Globe Company was on September 18th. The low of the Chicago Journal of Commerce was 4⅝¢ on the 18th. Then it went up to 4¾¢ on September 19th. I took that from my files of the original prices of the Chicago Journal.

Mr. Chaffetz: I offer Exhibits 1034 and 1035 in evidence.

The Court: They may be received.

Mr. Francis: Over our objection, your Honor?

The Court: Is there any objection?

Mr. Francis: The objection we have heretofore made, that this is immaterial, irrelevant, incompetent, not proper rebuttal testimony, and it is hear-3489 say as to all the defendants except the particular one involved.

The Court: Objection overruled. Exception allowed.

(Documents referred to are received in evidence as EXHIBITS 1034 and 1035, respectively.)

Cross-Examination by Mr. Thomas.

I operate under my own name, "T. R. Vaughn Oils." I have no connection whatsoever with any major oil company that is on trial here in this case. I am absolutely operating independently.

I can't answer whether there was any change in the high of the quotation of the Journal of Commerce on September 18, 1935, because, candidly, I don't know when I have ever looked at anything other than the low quotation in the Journal. I don't know whether there was any change in the high on the 19th, the day following this transaction.

When I sold this gasoline nothing was said about what refinery it was to be shipped from. I might have notified them after I had made the purchase, but I made a new purchase to cover this 20 cars. I don't think I notified them when I made the new purchase as to what refinery this gasoline was to be shipped from. It would be irregular. When it was shipped, the invoice showed where it was 3490 shipped from. The bill of lading would show that it was shipped from Imperial Refining Company, located at Wickett, Texas.

(The witness reads into the record the first three sentences of the "Conditions" set forth in Exhibit 1034.)

I am sure that Exhibit 1036 is a copy of a letter that I received. I think Exhibit 1038 is a copy of a letter that I received.

(Documents referred to received in evidence as EXHIBITS 1036, 1038 and 1040 respectively, and Exhibits 1036 and 1038 are read to the jury by Mr. Thomas.)

I am not sure that the party called for the telephone conversation which I say I heard was named "Lowry," or "Howry."

Q. Are you sure that it was the Shell Company, somebody connected with the Shell Company, that was called, or the Bell Company?

A. I can only say that he told his secretary to get Mr. Somebody and I can't tell you whether it was "Lowry" or "Lowdy," or some name like that, but I am not positive—

Q. Finish it.

A. He said, "Get Mr. So and So with the Shell Company."

Q. Are you sure it was "Shell" or "Bell"?

A. I am sure it was Shell.

Q. That is your present recollection?

3491 A. Yes.

I heard that conversation that I have related here this afternoon two years ago last September. Naturally, a thing as unusual as part of it, I would remember it. I did not make y note of it in writing.

I first told Government counsel about that conversation when they came and questioned me about it. One of the investigators that came into my office asked for information in certain files and had information that I didn't know about on some other transaction that had gone through my office. I think that must have been about 18 months ago. That is my recollection. After that time, I had no conference with Government counsel with reference to this matter I have testified to today until I got a wire a week ago that my presence was desired, and I was called up here. Then I was asked about this and repeated it. This investigator that talked to me purported to represent the Government. Before Globe cancelled I had shipped 11 cars, from September 18th to the 26th.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

The price went up on the 19th, but I don't think it had gone up again by the time the cancellation was sent to 3492 me. It went up on the 19th and stayed up, and was up all during that time down to the cancellation.

Recross Examination by Mr. Thomas.

Q. And nevertheless they cancelled?

A. Yes.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Francis.

It was quite some months after I heard the conversation in September, 1935, that some Government investigator came to see me. I can't give you even an approximate date. My best recollection is that it has been about 18 months ago since they came to my office. I had told somebody about this conversation, not Paul Hadlick, but John Cox. After I had told John Cox about it, the next thing I knew some Government investigator came and asked me about this conversation. I told him about it.

They didn't ask me to come down here until about a week ago. I was in Chicago in October and November, 1937, this last year, and was there when this case came to trial. I have the telegram if you want the exact date when they asked me to come. It was the last week or 10 days, the first part of January. They didn't ask me to come last September or October at all as a witness.

3493 Redirect Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

The first time I ever spoke to you was when I came to Madison in reply to your telegram last week. I think it was Tuesday of last week.

Q. Did I show you any documents or make any effort to refresh your recollection as to that transaction?

A. No.

Q. Did I make any suggestion to you with reference to that transaction?

A. Questioned me.

Q. I only questioned you?

A. Yes, that is all.

Q. And anything you have told here today is what you told me of your own volition?

A. That is right.

3494 ADOLPH HENRY SUS, a witness for the Government, on rebuttal testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

I live in Chicago. I am an employee of Sinclair Refining Company, and have been since July, 1920. I am manager of the central district. I have held that position for most of my employment with the company, except for minor changes of territory.

I recall a meeting on or about February 11, 1935, at which Mr. McDowell of Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, and others, were present.

Q. Did you make a report to your company of what transpired at that meeting?

A. I made a memorandum which characterized my impression of the import of the meeting, yes, sir.

There was a general stabilization meeting on that day at which there were probably 40 or 50 people present. Then there was also a smaller meeting at which there were some dozen or more people present. At the smaller meeting the following men were present: Mr. Ashton of Socony-Vacuum; Mr. Bullock of Standard of Indiana; Mr. Hughes of Phillips; Mr. Miskell of Cities Service; Mr. Sus of Sinclair, that is myself, Mr. van Eeghen of Shell; Mr.
3495 Karstedt representing Continental; Mr. McElroy representing Pure; I am hazy about whether or not Mr. Reeser, representing Barnsdall, was there; Mr. O'Shaughnessy of Globe; Mr. Atkins of Skelly; and Mr. Dippel of my company. He is manager of the western district of the company.

I recognize Exhibit 376 as a memorandum which I made which characterized the small meeting to which I referred.

Mr. Chaffetz: I offer Exhibit 376 in evidence.

Mr. Wood: May I inquire whether this Exhibit is being offered as evidence of what took place at the meeting?

Mr. Chaffetz: It is being offered as a statement by an agent of one of the co-conspirators as to something that transpired in the course of and in pursuance of the alleged conspiracy.

Mr. Wood: It is objected to as evidence of what took place at the meeting, objected to as not admissible on that ground since it does not yet appear that the witness has no recollection of what happened at the meeting independently of the memorandum, or that his recollection needs refreshing. If 3496 it is offered for any other purpose it is objected to as not being rebuttal.

Mr. Chaffetz: If your Honor please; it is an admission made in the course of the conspiracy, made by an agent of one of the co-conspirators, and like many other documents offered by the Government it is in rebuttal because it deals with a subject gone into by the defense in the defense of the case. Mr. McDowell testified to that meeting.

The Court: Objection overruled. Exception allowed.

Mr. Francis: It is certainly hearsay as to all the other defendants. It appears this antedates the alleged conspiracy, and has no connection with it, and it is clear it is not in pursuance to any conspiracy.

Mr. Lewin: We state in February, in the indictment.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Francis: Exception.

(Document referred to received in evidence as EXHIBIT 376 and read to the jury by Mr. Chaffetz.)

Cross-Examination by Mr. Wood.

I am here under subpoena issued by the Govern-3497 ment. The subpoena asked me to appear first on October 11, 1937. Then from time to time I was advised that the date of my appearance might be postponed until some subsequent date. Then finally I was advised, not that I was excused from the subpoena, but that I needn't come until I was requested to come; I received a telegram to that effect.

This report that has been offered in evidence here is not a verbatim report of what took place at the meeting.

The committee that I was referring to in that letter was the Tank Car Stabilization Committee. Mr. McDowell was chairman of the Committee, Mr. Ashton was vice-chairman, Mr. O'Shaughnessy, Mr. van Eeghen, Mr. Kardstedt, Mr. Miskell, Mr. Hughes—I believe that constituted the Committee. I was not a member of that Committee. Some of the other gentlemen that I have testified were present upon that occasion also were not members of the Committee. I was invited by the Committee, or some member of it, to be present at this meeting that they were holding.

Referring to the second paragraph of the memorandum, Exhibit 376, the Committee did not in fact render a report in any formal sense at that meeting about anything. There was merely a discussion, that is, the Committee discussed the things it had in mind, and in connection with that 3498 it told of certain circumstances and certain plans:
Those are the things I have referred to as the report. There was no report in writing about anything, but a discussion of what the Committee had in mind, or statement of it, and a discussion which followed.

Mr. McDowell presided at the meeting. Mr. McDowell simply made a preliminary statement of the purpose for which the Committee had been appointed, namely, to afford relief to certain refiners, small independent refiners in the Mid-Continent field whose distress had been called to the attention of a general stabilization meeting on January 4th and 5th by Mr. Majewski and Mr. O'Shaughnessy who represented those independent refiners. Those gentlemen pictured the distress—

> Q. Now, without going further into that, passing what Mr. McDowell said in a preliminary way, the first or second paragraphs of your memorandum, after referring to the fact that Mr. McDowell presided, and so forth, refers to a report to the effect that "a movement is under way which will take the East Texas surplus gasoline off the market so that it will not be a disturbing influence in the Standard of > 3499 Indiana territory. It was stated that this East Texas gasoline would move to the Gulf and then go to either the East coast or for export."
> Do you remember what was stated on that occasion in respect to East Texas gasoline, and by whom it was stated?
> A. Yes, sir, I do.

Mr. Ashton described the deliberations of the Committee; and with respect to that particular paragraph he stated that one of the disturbing influences in the Mid-Continent field aside from its own distress gasoline problem was this matter of gasoline from Texas coming over into the Mid-Continent field. Mr. Ashton said these things I am relating. I am reporting what Mr. Ashton stated at this meeting, and this is explanatory of that paragraph to which Mr. Wood refers.

Mr. Ashton stated that in Texas a lot of hot crude oil was being produced, and as a result of that production of hot crude oil there was naturally a lot of hot gasoline being produced, apparently much more gasoline than the Texas normal markets could absorb, with the result that that gasoline was running over into the Mid-Continent field and having a demoralizing effect and adding to the distress and the demoralization within the Mid-Continent field.

Mr. Ashton stated that now there was some hope, in fact, considerable hope, of being able to plan con-3500 structively toward stabilization in the Mid-Continent field by reason of the Connally Bill, which was in the process of making and was about to be passed and made effective. He said the Connally Bill would curtail the production of this hot crude oil, and with it this production of hot gasoline which was the demoralizing and disturbing influence in the Mid-Continent field. Therefore, with the cessation of this hot crude oil and hot gasoline, the Texas normal markets would take care of the Texas production as it had done heretofore and the Mid-Continent field could be considered and dealt with from a local standpoint. That was Mr. Ashton's explanation of this second paragraph. That was what Mr. Ashton stated, on the basis of which I made this report.

There was considerable discussion as to a steering committee and the functions it would perform. One of the recommendations of this Tank Car Stabilization Committee was that there should be appointed a steering comtee. The function of this steering committee was to keep itself currently informed as to who had distress gasoline to sell, and who, on the other hand, wanted to buy gasoline, in order that there might be an agency which would bring the buyer and the seller together.

3501 This steering committee was also to keep itself informed as to the price at which gasoline was currently moving. They were to use such persuasion and such influence as lay at their command and to see to it that these major buying refiners did not take advantage of these smaller selling refiners, and, by reason of the economic distress of these smaller refiners, bid down the price to below the current levels at which gasoline was selling, because to do so would have defeated the very purpose of the meeting, which was to stabilize. This steering committee was to see to it that these major refiners played fair with these smaller refiners who were in economic distress, and didn't chisel under the going market on the price at which they bought this gasoline. The only reference that was made at the meeting to the price to be paid was that they wanted these refiners who bought gasoline from these refiners who had distress gasoline to pay the going market price and not chisel.

Nothing was said as to whether or not the purchase should be made by or through the Committee. The Committee was not to function in any buying capacity. The buying committee was simply to put the buyer and the seller together, and from that point on the buyer would make his own deal with the seller, because there were such matters as specifications, and freight rates, and quantities and so forth that would be involved.

3502 The Committee urged that these major companies, who were large buyers of gasoline, in fact—that they buy all that they could advantageously do so, from this little group of refiners who had this distress gasoline. By "advantageously do so", I mean to the extent that they could do so without penalty to themselves; to the extent that it would be advantageous for them to buy; to buy there as favorably as they could any place else. I mean to the extent it would advantageously move. That is what I say in my memorandum, "to the extent it would advantageously move". That was the proposal of the Committee. I say in my memorandum, "whose surplus of distress gasoline it could advantageously move", and by that I mean that this buying was predicated upon the ability of the refiners to use that gasoline.

No recommendation or suggestion was made that this steering committee should fix the price at which gasoline should be purchased by these companies. No recommendation or suggestion was made that the committee should recommend the price to be paid from time to time.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

What I said in my memorandum was that "a steering committee would guide and control, periodically, the prices to be paid for this surplus gasoline by the major company to the small refinery". May I suggest, though, that 3503 to guide and control means to lead, and to influence, which was exactly the purpose for which this steering committee was to function; to see that these buying refiners did not pay the smaller refiners less than the going market price. But they were not to submit the figures.

Q. What I read you from the memorandum was true?

A. That was stated in the memorandum.

Q. On the subject of what the major company could advantageously move, you meant, of course, gasoline which they could use. You didn't intend that anybody would buy gasoline that they would have to dump overboard, did you?

A. No, sir.

Q. But you didn't mean to say that they buy only that gasoline which they would have bought otherwise, or would have bought anyway, did you?

A. Yes, yes sir, I did.

I meant to say that they were going to buy only gasoline which they normally would have needed and they would have bought regardless of any program.

Q. Then I ask you, why did you say this:

"It was estimated that this absorption of these > 600 cars per month by 14 of the major refiners would only be equivalent to curtailing their own crude runs 2%".

Why would they have to curtail their own runs? Why would they have to cut down their own production in order to buy this gasoline, if they were going to buy only what they were going to need anyway?

A. It was never suggested or never intended that these refiners would curtail their own runs. It was simply stated that these 600 tank cars per month of gasoline in the Mid-Continent was a relatively small amount of gasoline, by comparison with the amount that was currently manufactured and sold and consumed in the field, in the Mid-Continent field. And, to emphasize the feasibility of this plan and the small amount that it represented, it was stated that that only represented 2% of the amount of the refining capacity in the Mid-Continent field.

Q. Yes. Now, if they were saving that—if they were trying to compare it with their own output, they would have said that the amount involved corresponds to about 2% of the total output or the total capacity; but what you said was:

> "It was estimated that the absorption of these 600 cars—the absorption of these 600 cars per month by 14 of the major refiners would only be equivalent to curtailing their own crude runs 2%."

I ask you why you used the term "curtailing their own crude runs," if you were comparing it with their production or their output or their capacity?

A. It was a comparison to indicate that it only represented 2% of their crude runs, and therefore should very easily be an amount which could be adjusted by a switching of their buying from present sources to these proposed sources.

Q. Yes. You had already, earlier in the report, two paragraphs before that, referred to the fact that it would be a small volume, because you said:

> "And in that way, by dividing up these 15 companies and these estimated 600 cars per month of distress gasoline, no great burden would fall upon anyone."

You had covered that in that paragraph, hadn't you? Then you went on to tell how the steering committee would function; and in the succeeding para- 3506 graph you talk about the estimate, in the language I have already read to you.

A. But you don't mention in there, Mr. Chaffetz, that part of that first paragraph you mentioned that stated that the Committee was only recommending that these companies take such gasoline as they could advantageously use.

Q. Well, I thought what they concluded was a willingness on the part of each one of them, each one of the majors, to select one of the independent refiners, as shown on the attached statement, and assume responsibility for their surplus. Isn't that what they concluded?

A. To the extent that they could advantageously do so, yes, sir.

Q. But that isn't what you said in here (indicating)?

A. I did say it, though, Mr. Chaffetz, in the middle of that first paragraph to which you referred—

Mr. Chaffetz: That is all.

A. (Continuing) —and it isn't quite proper to select a part of a sentence and separate it from the context of the rest of the report.

3507 Q. If they were only going to buy what they needed, that wouldn't have been any burden, no matter how much it was, would it?

A. No.

Q. No. So, if your discussion was that they would each buy only what they were going to need, you wouldn't have talked about a burden at all?

A. It would have been a burden to dislocate their present buying routine and direct it into other channels.

Q. It would have been a burden if they were going to have to do something that they weren't normally doing?

A. That is right.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Kirkland.

Mr. Bullock did not stay to the end of the meeting, he was there but a short time.

By Mr. Francis

I was not invited to come up to this meeting by the Committee. I don't recall who invited me to attend, but sometime during the course of that day I was told, asked, or told that there was to be a meeting, and I was asked by someone to attend that meeting.

I recall Mr. McElroy as being there. I don't know whether he was there as just an invited member to 3508 hear a discussion of the then present plan. I really don't know. I don't know the circumstances under which he was there.

Q. Are you in a position to state whether or not Mr. McElroy so far as he was concerned, that day made any commitment for The Pure Oil Company, or himself?

A. I didn't understand, Mr. Francis, that anybody made any commitment—

Q. That is what I was getting at.

A. (Continuing) —except to cooperate.

Mr. McElroy did not make any commitment for The Pure Oil Company as to what he would do with reference to that plan.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

You are right in assuming that my district covers Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. I am the manager of that district.

Mr. Lewin: May it please the Court; I would like to have marked for identification a stipulation between counsel for the government and counsel for the defendants.

3509 Mr. Lewin: This stipulation authenticates certain documents from the files of Shell Petroleum Corporation, being Exhibits for identification 190, 191, 192, 209, 230, 231, and 248, and those documents that I have just alluded to from the files of Shell Petroleum Corporation I now offer in evidence.

And I offer with them the Stipulation marked Exhibit 1043 for identification. The documents contain facts in rebuttal of certain evidence adduced here by the defendants during their case.

Mr. Thomas: If the Court please; the defendants object to the reception of the documents now offered, and to each of them separately, for the reason that they are inadmissible in evidence as to all of the defendants now on trial in the case, individual and corporate, in any event other than the Shell Corporation and the writer of the documents, and there is no evidence that such writing, whether it be a letter or other document, was so made by a person having knowledge of the facts purporting to be set forth in said writing and the facts therein purported to be stated are not corroborated by the testimony on oath of any person 3510 or any other competent evidence; that the writing itself is not proof of the fact or facts which it purports to record unless testified to by the writer thereof or some other competent witness, and its admission deprives the defendants of their constitutional rights to be confronted by the witnesses against them, together with the right of cross-examination; that such writing is inadmissible in evidence against the individual officers of Shell Company now under indictment and on trial in this action because not shown to have been made by an agent of such defendants, or any of them, or of any person with authority to act for them, and the evidence fails to show that such writing was made with the knowledge or consent or under the direction and supervision of any of said individual defendants, and for this same reason said writing is inadmissible in evidence against any individual or corporate defendant named in the indictment;

Because there is no evidence that this writing now so offered in evidence, was made in aid of or in furtherance of the conspiracy alleged in the indictment, or of any overt act in pursuance of such alleged conspiracy;

And because the same is incompetent and hearsay as to all of the defendants, individual and 3511 corporate, and particularly all defendants other than Shell Company and such of its officers as are now on trial, and cannot be received for the purpose of showing consent or agreement on the part of any individual or corporate defendant to the alleged conspiracy, and particularly those other than Shell Corporation, and proper rebuttal because of the fact that they had Jacobs, the writer of this letter, here on the stand testify here, and it is improper rebuttal at this time.

The Court: The objection is overruled. Exception allowed.

(Documents previously so marked for identification are received in evidence, respectively, as EXHIBITS 190, 191, 192, 209, 230, 231, 248 and 1043.)

Mr. Lewin: The Government offers the following documents in evidence, Exhibits 24, 27, 52, 135, 136, 320, 321, 329, 316, 317, 318, 319, 362, 265, 293, 93, 97, 121, 128, 460, 461, 462, 467, 471, 477, and the following stipulations, Exhibits 1044, 1045, 1046 and 1047.

Mr. Thomas: May I have the same objection to those Exhibits, except the stipulations, that I made with reference to the Shell documents that were previously offered?

The Court: You may have the same objection.

3512 Mr. Webster: As to Exhibits 316, 317, 318 and 319, in addition to the objection already made, I should like to make the further objection that these letters were written by a man named Audrain, as to whom the Court has granted a motion for a directed verdict; and also on the further ground that the record shows that these letters were written by Audrain as an employee of the Tide Water Oil Company of Oklahoma, against which there never has been any indictment, and which, of course, is no longer in existence.

The Court: All objections are overruled. They may be received. Exception allowed.

(Documents and stipulations previously so marked for identification are received in evidence as EXHIBITS 24, 27, 52, 135, 136, 320, 321, 329, 316, 317, 318, 319, 362, 265, 293, 93, 97, 121, 128, 460, 461, 462, 467, 471, 477, and 1044, 1045, 1046 and 1047, respectively.)

(Mr. Lewin read the "Tank Car Markets" section of Exhibit 190 and the "Gasoline" section of Exhibits 248 and Exhibits 121, 128, 93 and 97 to the jury.)

3513 BROWN L. MEECE, a witness for the defendants, on sur-rebuttal testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Horween.

I live in Chicago, Illinois. I am assistant sales-manager of The Globe Oil & Refining Company. I am in charge of sales in the Chicago office, subject to Mr. Woodruff, the general manager.

I have read the testimony given here yesterday by Mr. Vaughn concerning a purchase by The Globe Oil & Refining Company of 20 cars of gasoline from Mr. Vaughn's concern on September 18, 1935.

Our Blackwell plant was shut down, and we were buying gasoline. We had instructions from one of our contract customers for a shipment which we could not make. I learned from local brokers in Chicago that Mr. Vaughn had some gasoline. His office was on the 12th floor in the same building with us; our office is on the 21st floor. I dropped down to his office about 11 o'clock in the morning and asked him if he had some gasoline to sell. He replied that he had no gasoline except that which he needed for his regular trade and which he had already sold. But he said he thought he had an option on 20 cars, which he said he could sell for 4½¢, f. o. b. Group 3. I told him we needed the gasoline, and if it met U. S. Motor Specifications, we would buy it.

3514 I have looked up the record, and it shows that 4½¢ was ⅛¢ below the Journal, and ¼¢ below the low of Platt's Oilgram, Chicago market, at that time.

I returned to my office with the understanding that Mr. Vaughn would call me as soon as he could determine from the refiner whether or not his option still held good. I told him, in his office, that I would buy that gasoline. The status of the deal when I left Mr. Vaughn's office that morning was that he thought he could buy that gasoline, and if he could, he would submit it to me, and I would buy it, providing it met U. S. Motor specifications. I did not say anything to him about wanting to buy more gasoline from him than 20 cars.

I heard from him next sometime during the late afternoon, toward the close of the business day. He called me and told me that he had finally gotten in touch with the refiner, and could get the 20 cars, but he could not get them for immediate shipment as we had discussed. He said the only way he could get them was to ship at the rate of 2 cars per day.

I had 13 shipping instructions right there that we wanted to place. I have them in my hand here. I told him I would place instructions with him the following morning for 13 cars, which must be shipped at the rate of 2 cars per day, as promised. This was late in the afternoon, and my recollection is that my secretary 3515 took then down to his office. I was in my office and Mr. Vaughn was in his office.

When I made the deal with Mr. Vaughn, before writing up my purchase order, I insisted that he tell me who the gasoline was coming from, and he showed me the purchase order that the gasoline was shipped from Imperial refinery, from Wickett, Texas. So it would be absolutely false to say that I didn't know who it was coming from when the gasoline came in. My purchase order shows it.

(Witness then read part of purchase order, Exhibit 1034, wherein it states where the gasoline was coming from.)

Mr. Vaughn was not in my office at all on September 18th. I did not call Shell Petroleum Corporation in St. Louis on September 19th.

All long distance bills are approved in the office, and retained in our files at Wichita, Kansas. I called Mr. Everitt, the secretary of our company, at Wichita last night, and asked him whether or not we had called anyone in St. Louis on September 18th, or any day adjacent to that date. He called me on long distance, and stated that the record shows we had not called, and that he would file a wire to our attorney verifying that, and air mail the original bill to us.

I now have the original bill here, and the records prove that we did not have any long distance calls to 3516 St. Louis on either that day or the day before or after.

(Telegram referred to is received in evidence as EXHIBIT 1048 and read to the jury by Mr. Horween.)

(Documents consisting of telephone bills of Globe Oil and Refining Company and a letter from that company received in evidence as EXHIBIT 1054.)

Mr. Fanshier never on any occasion at any place told me what his price quotations would be for the day. I never told anybody over the telephone or otherwise that Mr. Fanshier had stated that his price quotations would be thus and so on the next day or at any time. I did not state over the telephone in the presence of Mr. Vaughn to somebody that Mr. Fanshier had stated that if I did certain things that would increase his price quotations in the Chicago Journal of Commerce the next day. That is absolutely false.

After I sent Mr. Vaughn the purchase order on the evening of the 18th, I don't think I talked with him either in person or by telephone again until September 26, 1935, which was the day I wrote the letter cancelling certain of these cars on the purchase order. In that letter, I didn't cancel the entire order. I called Mr. Vaughn's attention to the fact that in the shipments they had given us car numbers and dates which we found to be incorrect.

Our customers were out of gasoline, and we had to 3517 get gasoline to them, and consequently, we had to cancel, I think, 5 shipping instructions, which we placed with our Wichita office for immediate shipment from our own refinery at McPherson. We found out that the car numbers, which Mr. Vaughn said had been shipped, had not been shipped from our traffic department. They had to make our diversions, so they gave our diversion instructions to the railroads, in accordance with railroad regulations, and then as the car was located our traffic department exchanged the bill of lading and gave the railroad new instructions, and traced the cars back to the originating carrier, and learned from it that the car had never been shipped.

The cars which Mr. Vaughn had reported to me as having been shipped on September 23rd, 24th, and 25th were not shipped until the 26th. I found that after my search, and that was the day we cancelled the instructions.

I called Mr. Vaughn about that and confirmed it by letter. I told him we were cancelling those instructions, and were shipping them from another source and would delete that amount of gasoline from our original purchase. Our customers were asking for shipment; they were out of gasoline in some cases.

Some of the customers to whom we were routing this gasoline had to make immediate shipment. Because 3518 of our inability to deliver, we had to supply the gasoline from another source. Our customers were demanding that we pay them for loss incurred because they were out of gasoline.

Exhibit 1049 for identification is a teletype record of a teletype conversation between our Chicago office and our Wichita office, in which we placed instructions to cover those cars which we were forced to cancel with Mr. Vaughn because of non-shipment.

Exhibit 1051 for identification is from W. H. Barber Company, who act as our sales agent in this territory, through whom we shipped to Illinois Farm Supply Company. It is addressed to the Globe Oil & Refining Company, attention of Mr. Alexander.

Exhibit 1050 for identification is a letter from W. H. Barber Company, addressed to Globe Oil & Refining Company, dated October 4th.

(Documents, referred to are received in evidence as EXHIBITS 1049, 1050 and 1051.)

The Shelby-Effingham Service Company, mentioned in the letter of September 26th, as one of the companies to receive a car which would be cancelled if shipment were not made promptly, is the same company to whom one car of gasoline purchased from Mr. Vaughn was to be shipped.

(Mr. Horween read Exhibit 1050 to the jury.)

3519 Cross-Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

I read Mr. Vaughn's testimony. I remember that he testified that he was in my office on September 18th, and the documents confirmed the fact that the transaction was on that day. He quoted me as saying that Fanshier said that if the gasoline in the hands of the brokers in Chicago was cleaned up, the Journal would raise its quotation. This transaction was concluded on the 18th, and on September 19th I believe the low of the Journal did go up ⅛¢.

There was nothing whatever unusual in this transaction as far as I was concerned. We needed the gasoline, bought it, and gave instructions.

We have a few of the same kind of transaction during the year when we buy. I won't say hundreds, but there were some going on from time to time.

This was September, 1935. How do I recall it so distinctly? I referred to our records. We had so much trouble on this purchase, and we were forced to cancel, something we rarely do. It stuck in my mind more clearly than most others will. This transaction was called to my mind during the past two years when I made up the records sent up to the Court in answer to the subpoena. In doing that I went over our purchase files and read over this 3520 again. I made up the records on all transactions, including the purchase from Vaughn. In going over the record it all came back. So that I familiarized myself with it at that time, and again yesterday when I was called and told of that testimony.

My letter of cancellation was quite clear, and was made so, because we felt that Mr. Vaughn was in between the refiner, but we had to get shipment.

Q. At the time you sent these records up here didn't you specifically recall the circumstance that he was not in his office but he was in your office on that day?

A. I don't think so.

I don't know how many times I had occasion to think back to that circumstance. I doubt whether I thought about it since the time it happened up until today, but I am now positive that he was not in my office on that day at all, but I was in his office.

I also read in Mr. Vaughn's testimony where he said he didn't know whether the phone call was to Shell at St. Louis or whether it was to the Shell office in Chicago. He didn't state that it was a long distance call. He said he wouldn't say, because he couldn't tell. If it had been a phone call to Chicago, I don't think it would show on our telephone bills.

3521 The principal Shell office is in St. Louis. They have a Chicago office which is principally a retail sales office. I knew Mr. Sinclair, Mr. Satterley, and Mr. Caldwell in the Chicago office of the Shell Company in 1935. Mr. Sinclair was general manager in 1935; Mr. Satterley was in charge of fuel oil sales; and Mr. Caldwell was tank car salesman. Mr. Sinclair is the only one I can recall as being there at that particular time. I knew him quite well. I am in contact with the Shell office in Chicago from time to time, and was during 1935.

Q. Now, I ask you whether it didn't happen from time to time, during 1935, not only on this occasion, but on other occasions, that your company, and other companies, in Chicago, acted together to buy up gasoline in the hands of brokers which you thought might otherwise disturb the market?

A. Not that I know of.

I purchased for my own company, and that is the extent of my knowledge. I handled whatever purchases were made by our company when we needed gasoline. Some purchases I bought from brokers in Chicago. I don't know how much I purchased. I know the records show that, during the entire year of 1935, I bought gasoline just as I had done in 1933 and 1934, and since in 1937.

3522 Q. Did you ever, during the year 1935, discuss with the representative of any other company—any other major oil company, the purchase of gasoline from any broker in the City of Chicago?

A. Possibly.

Q. What representative of what major company?

A. I don't know, sir. I talk to people in ordinary market conversation.

Q. Why would you have to discuss with a representative of any other major company the purchase of gasoline from brokers in Chicago?

A. At times we bought of major companies and sold to major companies.

Q. I asked you, why would you, at any time during 1935, have occasion to discuss with the representative of any other major company the purchase of gasoline from brokers, in the City of Chicago?

A. I don't remember having discussed with them the purchase of gasoline from brokers.

Q. Are you positive you had no such discussion?

A. No, sir, I am not positive.

Q. You think you might have?

A. Possibly.

Mr. Chaffetz: That is all.

Thereupon, the plaintiff rested its case in rebuttal, and the defendants to maintain further the issues on their part called the following witnesses to testify and introduced the following testimony:

3523 JOSEPH F. REIDY, a witness for the defendants, on sur-rebuttal, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Horween.

I live in Oak Park, Illinois. I am employed by The Globe Oil & Refining Company of Illinois as assistant to its general manager. My duties are to supervise the shipments of some gasoline purchases, the sales of fuel oil, gasoline, and other petroleum products. When a shipment goes out of our plant on a contract sale, the work of actually computing the price in accordance with the terms of the contract is done under my supervision.

The refinery of our company has not been able to supply, from its own manufacture, all of its sales requirements. That condition has obtained as far back as 1932 and 1933, and in 1935, 1936, and 1937.

I heard the testimony yesterday of the Government's witness, Mr. W. J. Miller, concerning purchases by the various Globe companies from Omar, Simms, East Texas, Dale Moore, Premier, Olney, and Vickers.

I am very familiar with all purchases made for shipment to customers of the Illinois company. I checked through the records regarding shipments made to customers of the Oklahoma Company, and the Kansas Company, and am now familiar with them. I have checked the contracts which have been produced here by the Globe Com-3524 panies in response to the Government subpoena and are now impounded with the Court.

In the Illinois Company, 95% plus of our shipments are made on contract. The remaining portion is sold into the Detroit area, and into Ohio, and scattered spot shipments. None of the gasoline so purchased moved to any of those spot transactions.

Mr. W. J. Miller was correct in his statement as to the figures that many of these tank cars of gasoline purchased by the Globe Companies were sold to customers of the Globe Companies at a lower price than they were purchased for. The Globe Companies have had occurrences of that kind in the past from 1931 on up to 1937.

The Globe Oil & Refining Companies operate independent refineries. We have no crude oil production nor pipe lines of our own. We have no retail stations nor bulk plants of our own. In other words, our entire operation consists strictly of manufacturing. To keep a plant of our type running as close to full capacity as we possibly can during the winter months, it is necessary for us during the winter season to go out and over-contract ourselves, with the result we are usually over-sold in the summertime. In the summertime it is natural for us to go out in the spot market and buy this material.

Demand naturally is lower in the wintertime than 3525 it is in the summertime. We try, as best we can, to keep the refinery running at as high a rate of production as possible in the wintertime. In order to do that, we try to get as much contract business as possible. These contracts are estimated requirement contracts. We have no definite figure. The customer agrees, in that contract, to take all his requirements of the particular product from us. So that, even though the demand falls off in the wintertime, if we have more contract customers who must take their entire requirements from us, naturally we will have a greater volume of business in the wintertime than we otherwise would have. And in the summertime, when their demand is greater, quite often we are unable to meet that increased demand of these contract customers by our own manufacture. That is the reason we have to buy gasoline.

When we buy gasoline, we buy it on the open, spot market. When we sell it, we sell it on contract. The majority of our contracts contain a marginal protection clause, a clause which provides that the cost to the jobber shall be a certain definite figure below either the retail service station price or the dealer tank wagon price, as the case may be. Every one of these cars of gasoline, which Mr. W. J. Miller talked about yesterday, that were purchased by the Globe Companies on the open, spot market, were sold on contracts such as I have described.

3526 I have made a check of the records of the company as to purchases and resales of gasoline in prior years. I have those records with me.

I have the records in the case of the Johnson Oil Refining Company in September, 1933. They are available for the Government's inspection. From September 15, 1933 to September 18, 1933, we purchased a total of 9 cars of gasoline from Johnson. We paid 4¾¢ a gallon f. o. b. Group 3, Oklahoma. They were all resold on contract. The minimum price we got for them was 3 7/10¢ and the maximum price was 4¼¢ leaving a loss of from $50 to $100 per carload, about ½¢ to ⅞¢ a gallon. A loss of ½¢ a gallon on an 8000 gallon car would be $40. So that particular loss was greater than the loss Mr. W. J. Miller mentioned yesterday of $20, and 5 or 6 times as great in some instances.

I never see the records of our company, so I couldn't answer as to what profit we made on a car of gasoline when business was normal and things went along without any unforeseen difficulties. From a refining standpoint, I couldn't tell you. I could tell you what the average profit of a broker is on a car. The broker gets from ⅛¢ to ¼¢ a gallon. That amounts to $12.50, or from $10 to $20 a car on an 8000 gallon car. That is his commission. I have never seen those figures on Globe.

3527 On September 14 and 15, 1933, we bought a total of 15 cars from Security Petroleum Company. We paid 4⅞¢ per gallon, f. o. b. Group 3. It was bought on the open spot market. We sold it on contract and we got from 3⅞¢ to 3¾¢ a gallon. We took a loss of 1¢ to 1⅛¢ a gallon on that resale of these 15 cars purchased in 1933. A cent a gallon on an 8000 gallon car is $80 a carload.

As to J. D. Street Company in 1933 here is a bad one. We made a purchase on June 5, 6, 7 and 10, 1933. I haven't counted these, but I would say there are approximately 50 cars here. We paid a flat price of 2 5/16¢ per gallon f. o. b. Group 3. Every car was resold on a contract. The price we got for that gasoline on resale was from 7/10¢ per gallon up to approximately 1 1/10¢. On that deal we lost from $180 to $200 a carload.

Q. And that was because you had to deliver that gasoline on an existing contract, which had a marginal guaranty provision, is that right?

A. We had to fulfill our coutract obligations.

In other words, those being requirement contracts, we must deliver to fulfill and live up to our contract, or we would be subject to suit if we don't, whether we have to go out on the open market and buy it or not. When 3528 we buy on the spot market, we buy at the best price we can get.

Mr. Horween: I think, your Honor, in order to save time, I will simply offer in evidence these additional examples of the same kind of transactions.

The Court: All right, they may be received.

Mr. Horween: Q. These are invoices and purchase and sales records taken from your company records, are they?

A. Our company records, yes.

Q. And identified as such by you?

A. That is correct.

The Court: Q. Have you any record there showing that Globe ever sold at a profit?

A. I am afraid not during that period, Judge. Of course, we have at other times.

Mr. Horween: We will be glad to produce that also, if your Honor so desires.

By Mr. Horween

When I say we purchase gasoline, the peak summer months are not the only time we purchase it; we have occasion to purchase gasoline in all seasons of the year.

Q. In the wintertime, you purchase, perhaps, for the purpose of building up your storage stocks?

A. For the spring or because of a forced shut down of our refinery.

3529 Cross-Examination by Mr. Chaffetz.

During the summertime we are sometimes short of gasoline to meet our contract requirements. In the wintertime we build up storage in order to be prepared to meet our contract requirements the following summer, as far as we can.

I would say the summer lasts from March 15th to November 1st, as far as we are concerned. I will be glad to explain that to you. We operate four water terminals. We transport our gasoline to the terminals by boat. The navigation season of the Lakes closes November 1st, and doesn't open until about March 15th, or possibly April 1st. It is necessary for us to fill up those tanks just as soon as navigation opens, and to fill them up again or keep them filled just at the close of navigation so we will have sufficient supply to carry us through the winter.

We have been, on occasions, short of gasoline in April. I don't recall the situation of our company unless you could show me the records. April is the beginning of the consuming season. At that time our storage should be at its peak. We have got that storage built up for the following consuming season, which covers principally the months of May, June, July and August. This last 3530 April we were not short of gasoline. I can't tell about April, 1936, without looking at the records. In other years, we have always been short of gasoline in April. In April, 1936, we didn't have the storage capacity at our refinery to provide our customers for the summer. We had some storage.

I can't answer definitely without having records, but it is my impression that we were very short of gasoline both in November and December, 1935. I don't recall that in the fall of 1935 we closed down one of our plants because all our storage was full. We didn't close our plant down. I don't recall that we closed one of our refineries.

Mr. Dorr: Your Honor, may I give the stenographer this for the record?

The Court: Yes, you may.

(The following typewritten statement was presented by Mr. Dorr, to be inserted in the record:)

"In view of the offer of Exhibit 1031 in evidence by the prosecution on rebuttal, and on the grounds on which they were heretofore offered, we re-offer in evidence the following Exhibits:

"1. EXHIBIT 1030 for identification, being a certified copy of a report to Mr. Ickes by Mr. Fahy, Chairman of the Petroleum Administrative Board, dated March 23, 1935. 3531

"2. EXHIBITS 915, 916, 925, 971, 972 and 973 for identification, being telegrams and correspondence relative to the request made by the Chairman of the Petroleum Administrative Board to Mr. Arnott to take up the stabilization of refinery prices in Pennsylvania, and a statement to Senator Davis that Mr. Arnott's Stabilization Committee is the proper body to take up such matters.

"3. EXHIBIT 914 for identification, being certain portions of the report issued by the Department of the Interior of the activities of the Marketing Division of the Petroleum Administrative Board, the same being issued in 1936.

"These Exhibits are re-offered at this time on the following grounds:

"1. The Government has introduced the letter of Secretary Ickes of July 20, 1934. On rebuttal it has offered in evidence Exhibit 1031, a letter written by Mr. Maguire in the summer of 1934. This has been offered as bearing on the construction of the letter of July 20, 1934. This is an additional ground which makes competent evidence showing the administrative construction of the letter of July 20th, 3532 particularly evidence showing that construction after January 1, 1935, the period covered by the indictment. Exhibit 1030, a report by Mr. Fahy to Mr. Ickes, states specifically that the Oil Administration and the Petroleum Administrative Board is encouraging the stabilization activities at the time being directed to aid the independent refiner. This statement is made in comment upon a report by the Blazer Committee that buying by the majors would be the most helpful thing in the present situation for the independent refiners and after the buying activities of the Stabilization Committee in aid of the independent refiner by taking up his distress gasoline had been put before the Petroleum Administrative Board on March 12th. Further, this statement is in direct corroboration of Mr. Arnott's testimony that he was encouraged to proceed with those activities by the Petroleum Administrative Board on that occasion.

"2. The so-called Pennsylvania Exhibits 915, 916, 925, 971, 972 and 973 are directly in corroboration of Mr. Arnott's testimony as to his interpretation of the letter of July 20, 1934, and are administrative construction by the Deputy Administrator of the Oil Administration that the letter of July 20 included within 3533 its scope the problem of refinery prices which were out of parity with crude and of surplus or distress products.

"3. The statements in the report of the Department of the Interior in its Marketing Report of June, 1936, are admissions by the Government of an administrative construction of the letter of July 20, 1934, showing a far broader construction than that which is now claimed by the Government for that letter and in corroboration of Mr. Arnott's testimony as to his understanding of that letter and as to what had been said about it by the Petroleum Administration at the time he was asked to undertake this work. The administrative construction of the letter of July 20th is important as bearing on how these transactions came about, the credibility of witnesses, the issue of the encouragement of these activities by the Government which is a proper element to be considered in determining whether these activities were a reasonable and lawful effort to remove abuses in the industry or whether they were an unlawful restraint of trade.

"The exclusion of these Exhibits or any of them would be particularly prejudicial to the defendants in view of the claims made before 3534 this jury by the prosecutors and the ruling of the Court at the time Mr. McDowell was on the stand and the letter of July 20th offered by the defendants and excluded."

The Court: I have considered those Mr. Dorr and the Court is not inclined to change its rulings.

Mr. Dorr: And we may have an exception on the grounds stated?

The Court: Yes, you may.

(The following occurred in absence of jury):

Mr. Dorr: It appears that in response to a request of the defense that the Court takes judicial notice of the provisions of the Code of Fair Competition of the Petroleum Industry, that the Court indicated it would for its own purpose take judicial notice of such provisions, but would not take judicial notice of those provisions for the purpose of having the same put before the jury. To which we note an exception.

Mr. Francis: Your Honor, subject to any objections that the government might have, could the record reflect that the mandate in the Schechter case issued in the Supreme Court on June 22, 1935, subject to their general check as to that date? Of 3535 course the decision does not become final until the mandate issues.

The Court: The record may show also the date of the mandate.

Mr. Chaffetz: It is stipulated the record may show that Exhibit 193 was offered and received, and is in evidence.

Mr. Donovan: I object to Exhibit 193 on the same ground as previously made with respect to similar documents as appears at R. pp. 1874-75.

The Court: Overruled. Exception allowed.

(Document referred to is received in evidence as EXHIBIT 193.)

(Stipulation referred to is received in evidence as EXHIBIT 1053.)

3536 Thereupon, on January 14, 1938, the defendants rested and the plaintiff rested also.

(The following proceedings occurred in the absence of the jury.)

The Court: I assume that all of the defendants will make a motion for directed verdict, and you may file those in writing. With that assumption, and that being made a part of the record now, the Court is going to grant the motion of James Nagle, that a verdict be directed for James Nagle. And the others, I will take under consideration. I won't hear any argument. File a motion.

Mr. German: I understand your Honor, that we may file our written motions Monday morning.

The Court: Yes, you may.

On the same date, January 14, 1938, the Honorable Patrick T. Stone caused to be filed with the Clerk of the above Court a Judgment providing that the Indictment in this cause be dismissed as to the defendant James Nagle and that the Clerk of the said Court had filed and entered a verdict of "not guilty" in this cause as to the defendant James Nagle.

Thereafter, on January 17, 1938, at a hearing of the 3537 above cause, the attorneys for the defendants filed with the Clerk of the Court a Motion to Strike, as at the close of all the evidence on behalf of each of the defendants named at the end of said Motion. Thereafter the said Motion to Strike was denied by the Court, and exception allowed.

To avoid printing those portions of the Motion to Strike which related to exhibits, the admission of which is not assigned on these appeals as error, certain portions of said original Motion to Strike relating to such exhibits have been omitted. The said Motion to Strike is as follows:

3538 IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

MOTION TO STRIKE.

Now Comes, William J. Donovan and Herbert H. Thomas, Attorneys for certain of the individual and corporate defendants, as shown by the record herein at the close of all the testimony introduced by and on behalf of the Government and the defendants, this motion being made for each said defendant separately with the same force and effect as if repeated in the record as to each such defendant so represented, and moves the Court to strike out the Exhibits hereinafter listed, together with the testimony relative to each such Exhibit which is in the record, said Exhibits being listed by number, and the portions of said record herein referred to being listed by page reference of said record, and to the introduction of which in evidence objections by defendants' counsel were duly made for the reasons set forth in such objections and likewise for the reasons and on the grounds hereinafter set forth, the said motion being directed to each said Exhibit separately and likewise separately as to the testimony offered and received relating to each said Exhibit listed herein, that is to say:

Exhibit 489, from F. L. Koopman to Budget and Operating Committee of the Phillips Petroleum Company, R. p. 557;

Exhibit 509, from F. L. Koopman to Budget and Operating Committee of the Phillips Petroleum Company, R. p. 557;

Exhibit 516, from F. L. Koopman to A. M. Hughes, R. p. 557.

For the reasons and on the grounds:

(1) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that the writer of said Exhibits at any time during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, participated or engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, and each of said Exhibits was admitted only upon condition that such proof be adduced.

(2) Even if there is substantial competent evidence in the record herein which establishes or tends to establish that the writer of said Exhibits during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, participated or engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, each of said Exhibits, nevertheless, is inadmissible as the declaration of a co-conspirator:

(a) Because said Exhibit in itself is incompetent as mere hearsay;

(b) Because it was not made in furtherance of any object of the conspiracy;

(c) Because it contains merely narratives of past events and statements of the opinions of the writer;

3540 (d) Because it is apparent from the face of the Exhibit that the statements therein are mere hearsay and the repetition of rumor, opinions of others and market reports;

(e) Because it is apparent from the face of the Exhibit that the statements therein are of facts of which the writer did not have and could not have had personal knowledge;

(f) Because it is not verified by any suppletory oath;

(g) Because it is not a writing or record made in the regular course of business, and

(h) Because the admission and use of said Exhibit as evidence establishing or tending to establish as facts the matters, things, rumors and opinions set forth or referred to therein deprive the defendants of their rights under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States;

(i) Because the use of said Exhibit or of statements and references contained therein as evidence establishing or tending to establish the participation in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, of any person or corporation other than the writer of the Exhibit, or the corpora-3541 tion, if any, for which he wrote said Exhibit as its duly authorized agent acting within the scope of his authority, would be improper, and the admission of said Exhibit in evidence, even under instructions properly limiting its application and use, is improper because it is prejudicial to each and every defendant herein except the said writer and his said principal, if any.

II.

Exhibit No. 94, from J. F. Nagle to W. T. Atkins, R. p. 506.

Exhibit No. 100, from J. F. Nagle to L. H. Poland, R. p. 506.

Exhibit No. 101, from J. F. Nagle to W. T. Atkins, R. p. 506.

Exhibit No. 103, from J. F. Nagle to A. V. Bourque, R. p. 506.

Exhibit No. 120, from J. F. Nagle to W. T. Atkins, R. p. 506.

Exhibit No. 122, from J. F. Nagle to L. H. Poland, R. p. 506.

Exhibit No. 124, from J. F. Nagle to L. H. Poland, R. p. 506.

Exhibit No. 126, from J. F. Nagle to L. H. Poland, R. p. 506.

For the reasons and on the grounds:

(1) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that the writer of said Exhibits at any time during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, participated or engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, and each of said Exhibits was admitted only upon condition that such proof be adduced.

3542 (2) Even if there is substantial competent evidence in the record herein which establishes or tends to establish that the writer of said Exhibits during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, participated or engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, each of said Exhibits, nevertheless, is inadmissible as the declaration of a co-conspirator:

(a) Because said Exhibit in itself is incompetent as mere hearsay;

(b) Because it was not made in furtherance of any object of the conspiracy;

(c) Because it contains merely narratives of past events and statements of the opinions of the writer;

(d) Because it is apparent from the face of the Exhibit that the statements therein are mere hearsay and the repetition of rumor, opinions of others and market reports;

(e) Because it is apparent from the face of the Exhibit that the statements therein are of facts of which the writer did not have and could not have had personal knowledge;

(f) Because it is not verified by any suppletory oath;

3543 (g) Because it is not a writing or record made in the regular course of business, and

(i) Because the use of said Exhibit or of statements and references contained therein as evidence establishing or tending to establish the participation in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, of any person or corporation other than the writer of the Exhibit, or the corporation, if any, for which he wrote said Exhibit as its duly authorized agent acting within the scope of his authority, would be improper, and the admission of said Exhibit in evidence, even under instructions properly limiting its application and use, is improper because it is prejudicial to each and every defendant herein except the said writer and his said principal, if any.

Exhibit 97, from J. F. Nagle to W. T. Atkins, R. p. 1876.

Exhibit 121, from J. F. Nagle to A. H. Prendergrass, R. p. 1876.

For the reason and on the grounds:

3544 (1) That the writers of said Exhibits, due to the granting of their respective motions for directed verdicts by the Court in the above entitled action, are not defendants and are not co-conspirators in said action, and cannot be said to have participated or engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment and said Exhibits therefore are incompetent and inadmissible.

III.

Exhibit 488, from D. K. Chamberlin to C. W. Snider, R. p. 620.

Exhibit 327, from D. K. Chamberlin to R. N. Cline, R. p. 650.

For the reasons and on the grounds:

(1) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that the writer of said Exhibits at any time during the period beginning in the month of February 1935 and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, participated or engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, and each of said Exhibits was admitted only upon condition that such proof be adduced.

(2) Even if there is substantial competent evidence in the record herein which establishes or tends to establish that the writer of said Exhibits during the period beginning in the month of February 1935 and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, participated or engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, each of said Exhibits, nevertheless, is inadmissible as the declaration of a co-conspirator:

3545 (a) Because said Exhibit in itself is incompetent as mere hearsay;

(b) Because it was not made in furtherance of any object of the conspiracy;

(c) Because it contains merely narratives of past events and statements of the opinions of the writer;

(d) Because it is apparent from the face of the Exhibit that the statements therein are mere hearsay and the repetition of rumor, opinions of others and market reports;

(e) Because it is apparent from the face of the Exhibit that the statements therein are of facts of which the writer did not have and could not have had personal knowledge;

(f) Because it is not verified by any suppletory oath;

(g) Because it is not a writing or record made in the regular course of business, and

3546 (i) Because the use of said Exhibit or of statements and references contained therein as evidence establishing or tending to establish the participation in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, of any person or corporation other than the writer of the Exhibit, or the corporation, if any, for which he wrote said Exhibit as its duly authorized agent acting within the scope of his authority, would be improper, and the admission of said Exhibit in evidence, even under instructions properly limiting its application and use, is improper because it is prejudicial to each and every defendant herein except the said writer and his said principal, if any.

Exhibit 295, from J. W. Warner to J. D. Collins, R. p. 786.
Exhibit 296, from J. W. Warner to J. D. Collins, R. p. 786.

For the reasons and on the grounds:

(1) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that the writer of said Exhibits at any time during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935 and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, participated or engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, and each of said Exhibits was admitted only upon condition that such proof be adduced.

(2) Even if there is substantial competent evidence in the record herein which establishes or tends to establish that the writer of said Exhibits during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, participated or engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, each of said Exhibits, nevertheless, is inadmissible as the declaration of a co-conspirator:

(a) Because said Exhibit in itself is incompetent as mere hearsay;

(b) Because it was not made in furtherance of any object of the conspiracy;

3548 (c) Because it contains merely narratives of past events and statements of the opinions of the writer;

(d) Because it is apparent from the face of the Exhibit that the statements therein are mere hearsay and the repetition of rumor, opinions of others and market reports;

(e) Because it is apparent from the face of the Exhibit that the statements therein are of facts of which the writer did not have and could not have had personal knowledge;

(f) Because it is not verified by any suppletory oath;

(g) Because it is not a writing or record made in the regular course of business, and

(i) Because the use of said Exhibit or of statements and references contained therein as evidence establishing or tending to establish the participation in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, of 3549 any person or corporation other than the writer of the Exhibit, or the corporation, if any, for which he wrote said Exhibit as its duly authorized agent acting within the scope of his authority, would be improper, and the admission of said Exhibit in evidence, even under instructions properly limiting its application and use, is improper because it is prejudicial to each and every defendant herein except the said writer and his said principal, if any.

(3) The evidence in the record herein affirmatively establishes that each said Exhibit was written by the said Warner as an employee of Tidewater Oil Company an Oklahoma corporation which was not made a defendant to the indictment, to the said Collins, an employee of Tidewater Oil Company, a New Jersey corporation, as to which, together with Tidewater Associated Oil Company, a Delaware corporation, the indictment has been dismissed against their objection, and said Exhibits therefore further are inadmissible:

(a) Because said Warner is charged in paragraph 4 of the indictment only with having actively engaged in the management, direction and control of the affairs and policies of the said Tidewater Associated Oil Company, and because the only alleged participation by the said 3550 Warner in the alleged conspiracy, is because, as alleged in paragraph 19, the said Tidewater Associated Oil Company and the said Tidewater Oil Company (New Jersey), acted through or under his direction in engaging and participating in the two alleged buying programs which are referred to in said paragraph 19 as (a) the East Texas buying program, and (b) the Mid-Continent buying program. Under the allegations of the indictment, which now has been dismissed as to said Tidewater Associated Oil Company and said Tidewater Oil Company (New Jersey) said Warner now is not charged with being a party to the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment.

(b) Because said Exhibit in itself is incompetent as mere hearsay;

(c) Because it was not established that the writer of said Exhibit could not have been called as a witness to testify under oath, subject to cross-examination, as to the matters and things referred to or stated in said Exhibit.

(d) Because said Exhibit in itself is not competent evidence of the facts therein stated in that the writer of said Exhibit was not called as a witness and did not testify under oath, subject to cross-examination, that, al-3551 though after reading it he cannot recall the circumstances and facts so as to state them independently from his memory, the said Exhibit was written by him presently after the transaction or transactions to which it relates and that he then had a clear and distinct recollection of everything there stated or preferred to, and that he knows that it was correct when prepared.

(e) Because the admission and use of said Exhibit as evidence establishing or tending to establish as facts the matters, things, rumors and opinions set forth or referred to therein deprive the defendants of their rights under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

For the reasons and on the grounds that:

(1) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that the writer of said Exhibits at any time during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment participated or engaged in the conspiracy, if any,

alleged in the indictment, and each of said Exhibits was admitted only upon condition that such proof be adduced.

3552 (2) Even if there is substantial competent evidence in the record herein which establishes or tends to establish that the writer of said Exhibits during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, participated or engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, each of said Exhibits, nevertheless, is inadmissible as the declaration of a co-conspirator:

(a) Because said Exhibit in itself is incompetent as mere hearsay;

(b) Because it was not made in furtherance of any object of the conspiracy;

(c) Because it contains merely narratives of past events and statements of the opinions of the writer;

(d) Because it is apparent from the face of the Exhibit that the statements therein are mere hearsay and the repetition of rumor, opinions of others and market reports;

(e) Because it is apparent from the face of the Exhibit that the statements therein are of facts of which the writer did not have and could not have had personal knowledge;

(f) Because it is not verified by any suppletory oath;

3553 (g) Because it is not a writing or record made in the regular course of business, and

(i) Because the use of said Exhibit or of statements and references contained therein as evidence establishing or tending to establish the participation in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, of any person or corporation other than the writer of the Exhibit, or the corporation, if any, for which he wrote said Exhibit as its duly authorized agent acting within the scope of his authority, would be improper, and the admission of said Exhibit in evidence, even under instructions properly limiting its application and use, is improper because it is prejudicial to each and every defendant herein except the said writer and his said principal, if any.

3554 For the reasons and on the grounds:

(1) That it appears by competent affirmative evidence that said letters were written by one H. Jacobs, not made a defendant to this indictment and not therein alleged to have been a co-conspirator and that there is no substantial, competent evidence in the record herein which establishes or tends to establish that said Jacobs, during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment participated or engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, and each of said Exhibits therefore is incompetent and inadmissible for the more specific reasons and grounds stated below:

(2) (a) Because said Exhibit in itself is incompetent as mere hearsay;

(b) Because it was not made in furtherance of any object of the conspiracy;

(c) Because it contains merely narratives of past events and statements of the opinions of said Jacobs;

(d) Because it appears from affirmative evidence that the statements made by said Jacobs in the said Exhibits are mere hearsay and the repetition of rumors, opinions of others, market reports, and information gathered from the trade publications;

3555 (e) Because it is apparent from the face of the Exhibit that the statements therein are of facts of which the said Jacobs did not have and could not have had personal knowledge;

(f) Because it is not verified by any suppletory oath;

(g) Because it is not a writing or record made in the regular course of business;

(h) Because said Exhibit in itself is not competent evidence of the facts therein stated in that the writer of said Exhibit did not testify that although after reading it he could not recall the circumstances and facts so as to state them independently from his memory, the said Exhibit was written by him presently after the transaction or transactions to which it relates and that he then had a clear and distinct recollection of everything therein stated or referred to, and that he knows that it was correct when prepared;

(i) Because the admission and use of said Exhibit as evidence establishing or tending to establish as facts the matters, things, rumors, and opinions set forth or referred to therein deprive the defendants of their rights under 3556 the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States;

(j) Because the use of said Exhibit or of statements and references contained therein as evidence establishing or tending to establish the participation in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, of any person or corporation other than the writer of the Exhibit, or the corporation, if any, for which he wrote said Exhibit as its duly authorized agent acting within the scope of his authority, would be improper, and the admission of said Exhibit in evidence, even under instructions properly limiting its application and use, is improper because prejudicial to each and every defendant herein except the said writer and his said principal, if any.

VII.

Exhibit 487 from C. W. Snider to D. K. Chamberlin, R. p. 621.

For the reasons and on the grounds that:

(1) The said writer of the Exhibit is not a defendant under said indictment and is not therein alleged to have been a co-conspirator and to have participated or engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment and said Exhibits therefore are incompetent and inadmissible:
3557 (a) Because said Exhibit in itself is incompetent as mere hearsay;

(b) Because it was not established that the writer of said Exhibit could not have been called as a witness to testify under oath, subject to cross-examination, as to the matters and things referred to or stated in said Exhibit;

(c) Because said Exhibit in itself is not competent evidence of the facts therein stated in that the writer of said Exhibit was not called as a witness and did not testify under oath, subject to cross-examination, that, although after reading it he cannot recall the circumstances and facts so as to state them independently from his memory, the said Exhibit was written by him presently after the transaction or transactions to which it relates and that he then had a clear and distinct recollection of everything therein stated or referred to, and that he knows that it was correct when prepared.

(d) Because the admission and use of said Exhibit as evidence establishing or tending to establish as facts the matters, things, rumors and opinions set forth or referred to therein, deprive the defendants of their rights under 3558 the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States;

(e) Because the use of said Exhibit or of statements and references contained therein as evidence establishing or tending to establish the participation in the conspiracy if any, alleged in the indictment, of any person or corporation other than the writer of the Exhibit, or the corporation, if any, for which he wrote said Exhibit as its duly authorized agent acting within the scope of his authority, would be improper, and the admission of said Exhibit in evidence, even under instructions properly limiting its application and use, is improper because prejudicial to each and every defendant herein except the said writer and his said principal, if any.

VIII.

For the reasons and on the grounds:

(1) The writer of said Exhibit is not a defendant to this indictment and is not therein alleged to have participated in the alleged conspiracy and there is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that the writer of said Exhibit engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment and statements of the said writer are not binding on the defendant, J. W. Carnes or any other 3559 defendant in this indictment, and each of said Exhibits is inadmissible for the reasons stated in (2) below:

(2) Even if there is substantial competent evidence in the record herein which establishes or tends to establish that the writer of said Exhibit, during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, participated or engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, each of said Exhibits, nevertheless, is inadmissible:

(a) Because it is not made in furtherance of the objects of the conspiracy;

(b) Because it contains merely narratives of past events and statements of the opinions of the writer;

(c) Because it is apparent from the face of the Exhibit that the statements therein are mere hearsay and the repetition of opinions of others and market reports;

(d) Because it is apparent from the face of the Exhibit that statements therein are of facts which the said writer did not have and could not have had personal knowledge;

3560 (e) Because it is not verified by any suppletory oath;

(f) Because it is not a record made in the regular course of business;

(g) Because said Exhibit in itself is incompetent as mere hearsay;

(h) Because the admission and use of said Exhibit as evidence establishing or tending to establish as facts the matters, things, rumors, and opinions set forth therein deprive the defendants of their rights under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States;

(i) Because the use of said Exhibit or of statements and references contained therein as evidence establishing or tending to establish the participation in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, of any person or corporation other than the writer of the Exhibit, or the corporation, if any, for which he wrote said Exhibit as its duly authorized agent acting within the scope of his authority, would be improper, and the admission of said Exhibit in evidence, even under instructions properly limiting its application and use, is improper because prejudicial to each and every defendant herein except the said writer and his said principal, if any.

Exhibit No. 95, from W. T. Atkins to Emby Kaye, R. p. 506.

Exhibit No. 96, from W. T. Atkins to J. F. Nagle, R. p. 506.

Exhibit No. 99, from L. H. Poland to J. F. Nagle, R. p. 506.

Exhibit No. 123, from Clara Gartman to L. H. Poland, R. p. 506.

For the reasons and on the grounds that:

(1) Said writers of said Exhibits are not defendants to this indictment and are not therein alleged to have participated in the alleged conspiracy and there is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that said writers or any of them engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment and statements of said writers are not binding on any defendant to this indictment, and each of said Exhibits is therefore inadmissible:

(a) Because said Exhibit in itself is incompetent as mere hearsay;

(b) Because it was not established that the writer of said Exhibit could not have been called as a witness to testify under oath, subject to cross-examination, as to the matters and things referred to or stated in said Exhibit;

(c) Because said Exhibit in itself is not competent evidence of the facts therein stated in that the writer of said Exhibit was not called as a witness and did not testify under oath, subject to cross-examination, that, although after reading it he cannot recall the circumstances and 3562 facts so as to state them independently from his memory, the said Exhibit was written by him presently after the transaction or transactions to which it relates and that he then had a clear and distinct recollection of everything therein stated or referred to, and that he knows that it was correct when prepared;

(d) Because the admission and use of said Exhibit as evidence, establishing or tending to establish as facts the matters, things, rumors, and opinions set forth or referred to therein deprive the defendants of their rights under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States;

(2) Even if there is substantial competent evidence in the record herein which establishes or tends to establish that said writers, during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, participated or engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, each of said Exhibits, nevertheless, is inadmissible against any defendant as the declaration of a co-conspirator;

(a) Because it was not made in furtherance of the objects of the conspiracy.

(b) Because it contains merely narratives of past events and statements of the opinions of said writers.

3563 (c) Because it is apparent from the face of the Exhibit that the statements therein are mere hearsay and the repetition of opinions of others and market reports.

(d) Because it is apparent from the face of the Exhibit that the statements therein are of facts of which the writer did not have and could not have had personal knowledge.

(e) Because it is not verified by any suppletory oath.

(f) Because it is not a record made in the regular course of business.

(g) Because said Exhibit in itself is incompetent as hearsay.

(h) Because the admission and use of said Exhibit as evidence establishing or tending to establish as facts the matters, things, and opinions set forth therein deprive the defendants of their rights under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

(i) Because the use of said Exhibit or of statements and references contained therein as evidence establishing or tending to establish the participation in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, of any person or corporation other than the writer of the Exhibit, or the 3564 corporation, if any, for which he wrote said Exhibit as its duly authorized agent acting within the scope of his authority, would be improper, and the admission of said Exhibit in evidence, even under instructions properly limiting its application and use, is improper because prejudicial to each and every defendant herein except the said writer and his said principal, if any.

Exhibit No. 93, From W. T. Atkins to J. Nagle, R. p. 1876.

Exhibit No. 128, From W. T. Atkins to J. Nagle, R. p. 1876.

For the reasons and on the grounds that:

(1) The said writer of the Exhibit is not a defendant under said indictment and is not therein alleged to have been a co-conspirator and to have participated or engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment and said Exhibits therefore are incompetent and inadmissible:

(a) Because said Exhibit in itself is incompetent as mere hearsay;

(b) Because it was not established that the writer of said Exhibit could not have been called as a witness to testify under oath, subject to cross-examination, as to the matters and things referred to or stated in said Exhibit;

(c) Because said Exhibit in itself is not competent evidence of the facts therein stated in that the writer
3565 of said Exhibit was not called as a witness and did not testify under oath, subject to cross-examination, that, although after reading it he cannot recall the circumstances and facts so as to state them independently from his memory, the said Exhibit was written by him presently after the transaction or transactions to which it relates and that he then had a clear and distinct recollection of everything therein stated or referred to, and that he knows that it was correct when prepared;

(d) Because the admission and use of said Exhibit as evidence establishing or tending to establish as facts the matters, things, rumors and opinions set forth or referred to therein, deprive the defendants of their rights under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States;

(e) Because the use of said Exhibit or of statements and references contained therein as evidence establishing or tending to establish the participation in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, of any person or corporation other than the writer of the Exhibit, or the corporation, if any, for which he wrote said Exhibit as its duly authorized agent acting within the scope of his authority, would be improper, and the admission of said Exhibit in evidence, even under instructions properly limiting its application and use, is improper, because prejudicial to each and every defendant herein except the said writer and his said principal, if any.

Exhibit No. 117, From Clara Gartman to A. V. Bourque, R. p. 506.

Exhibit No. 118, From Clara Gartman to A. V. Bourque, R. p. 506.

For the reasons and on the grounds that:

(1) Said Clara Gartman is not a defendant to this indictment and is not therein alleged to have participated in the alleged conspiracy and there is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that said Clara Gartman engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment and statements of said Clara Gartman are not binding on the defendant Skelly Oil Company, or the defendant A. V. Bourque or any other defendant in this indictment, and each of said Exhibits therefore is inadmissible:

(a) Because said Exhibit in itself is incompetent as mere hearsay;

(b) Because it was not established that the writer of said Exhibit could not have been called as a witness to testify under oath, subject to cross-examination, as to the matters and things referred to or stated in said Exhibit;

3567 (c) Because said Exhibit in itself is not competent evidence of the facts therein stated in that the writer of said Exhibit was not called as a witness and did not testify under oath, subject to cross-examination, that, although after reading it she cannot recall the circumstances and facts so as to state them independently from her memory, the said Exhibit was written by her presently after the transaction or transactions to which it relates and that she then had a clear and distinct recollection of everything therein stated or referred to, and that she knows that it was correct when prepared;

(d) Because the admission and use of said Exhibit as evidence establishing or tending to establish as facts the matters, things, rumors, and opinions set forth or referred to therein deprive the defendants of their rights under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

(2) Even if there is substantial competent evidence in the record herein which establishes or tends to establish that said Clara Gartman, during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, participated or engaged in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, each of said Exhibits, nevertheless, is inadmissible against any other defendant as the declaration of a co-conspirator:

3568 (a) Because it was not made in furtherance of the objects of the conspiracy.

(b) Because it contains merely narratives of past events.

(c) Because it is not verified by any suppletory oath.

(d) Because it is not a record made in the regular course of business.

(e) Because the admission and use of said Exhibits as evidence establishing or tending to establish as facts the matters and things, set forth therein deprive the defendants of their rights under the Sixth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

(f) Because the use of said Exhibit or of statements and references contained therein as evidence establishing or tending to establish the participation in the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, of any person or corporation other than the writer of the Exhibit, or the corporation, if any, for which she wrote said Exhibit as its duly authorized agent acting within the scope of her authority, would be improper, and the admission of said Exhibit in evidence, even under instructions properly limiting its application and use, is improper because prejudicial to each and every defendant herein except the said writer and her said principal, if any.

3569 In the event the foregoing motion to strike is denied in whole or in part, each said defendant making the above motion to strike, in the alternative, individually moves the Court to instruct the jury that the constitutional right of the defendants to be confronted by the witnesses against them prohibits the use of any Exhibit heretofore admitted in evidence for any purpose beyond that for which it was admitted by the Court or to which it may be restricted by the Court's instructions; that no statement or reference in any such Exhibit can be used or considered to be evidence establishing, or tending to establish, the participation in the conspiracy, if any should be found, of any person or corporation other than the person who wrote said Exhibit and the corporation, if any, for which the writer wrote the Exhibit as its agent making a report concerning his own actions in behalf of the corporation or concerning the corporation's property under his supervision; that Exhibits, such as letters, telegrams, etc., written by persons not alleged in the indictment or shown in the evidence to have had any connection with the alleged conspiracy may be considered only as evidence that the recipients were informed of the alleged facts stated in them, but, in the absence of a finding that a defendant adopted statements in one of these Exhibits as his own, they may not be considered as evidence that the alleged facts they recite actually occurred; that dec-3570 larations appearing in any Exhibit, as letters, telegrams, etc., which were made by individuals named as defendants or alleged in the indictment to have been coconspirators with the defendants, may not be considered as evidence of the alleged facts which they recite, as against any other defendant, unless they have been adopted by another defendant or the declarant has been found beyond a reasonable doubt to have been a co-conspirator with some of the defendants and to have made the declarations during, and in furtherance of the objects of, the alleged conspiracy; and that any statement occurring in any Exhibit, as letters, telegrams, etc., which, by expressions appearing on its face, or by the testimony of the writer of the Exhibit, shows that any such statement was not made from the personal knowledge of the writer but was merely a repetition of the statements, gossip and opinion of others, may not be considered as evidence of the alleged facts recited in any such statement.

Therefore, the defendants respectfully move that the above listed Exhibits and testimony should be stricken from the record.

3572 On the same date, January 17, 1938, at a hearing of the above cause before the said Court, the following occurred:

Mr. Thomas: Now, if the Court please, I have a motion on behalf of the defendants I ask leave to file, and I assume your Honor will follow your practice and hear arguments on it after the verdict.

The Court: Yes.

(Motion handed to the Clerk.)

Mr. Denton: I desire to file motions for directed verdict on behalf of the defendant Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, and also on behalf of each of the individual defendants, Jacob France, Robert W. McDowell, and James W. Fitzgerald.

The Court: You may file them.

Mr. Denton: Do I understand your Honor has made an order reserving the ruling on these motions until some later day?

The Court: On all motions for directed verdict the Court will reserve a ruling on those motions until some later day, and will not hear any argument.

(Motions handed to Clerk.)

3573 Mr. Wood: I would like the record to show the filing of motions to dismiss and for a directed verdict in behalf of the defendant J. W. Carnes.

Also similar motions on behalf of the defendant Sinclair Refining Company.

(Motions handed to the Clerk.)

Mr. Francis: Your Honor, could the record reflect that like motions have been filed for all of the several defendants as appears from the records in the Clerk's office, without stating in the record the name of each one of them?

The Court: Yes, let the records show motions for directed verdicts have been filed on behalf of all defendants, and the ruling thereon reserved by the Court until some later date.

Are there any other motions to be heard at this time?

Mr. Donovan: Note an exception on behalf of all the defendants for failure to rule on motions for directed verdicts at this time.

On January 17, 1938, the defendants hereinafter named, by their attorneys, each filed with the Clerk of the above Court, his or its Motion for a Directed Verdict at the 3574 close of all of the evidence. MOTION OF DEFENDANT SOCONY-VACUUM OIL COMPANY, INC. FOR A DIRECTED VERDICT.

(Filed January 17, 1938)

Comes now the defendant, Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc., at the close of all the evidence adduced herein, and moves the Court to direct the jury to find a verdict of "Not Guilty" as to it, and in support thereof specifies the following reasons and grounds:

(1) The said indictment fails to allege that the defendants entered into the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin, or that the defendants, or any of them, performed or did any act pursuant to the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin.

(2) The said indictment discloses on its face that the trial of this defendant thereunder in the Western District of Wisconsin violates the right of this defendant under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States to a trial by an impartial jury of the State and District wherein the crime, if any, alleged in the indictment was committed.

3577 (3) The said indictment fails to describe and to particularize the alleged combination and conspiracy with sufficient definiteness and certainty and so specifically as to enable this defendant to plead an acquittal or a conviction thereunder in bar to any other proceedings against it based on the same matters or things, or on any of them, on which the indictment is based.

(5) The said indictment shows on its face that the conspiracy therein alleged did not and could not restrain interstate trade and commerce in gasoline within the meaning of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (15 U. S. C. A. § 1.)

(6) The said indictment fails to allege facts showing any violation by the defendant of any law of the United States.

3578 (7) There is no competent substantial proof to support the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 11 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that the "said defendant major oil companies have uniformly adopted and have embodied in their respective standard forms of jobber contracts employed throughout the Mid-Western area virtually identical provisions governing terms and conditions of sale."

The evidence shows that the forms of jobber contracts in use by the various defendant major oil companies were not uniform and contain various provisions in regard to the price, some of them providing for the low price, published in Platt's Oilgram or in the Chicago Journal of Commerce, some of them providing for the average of the high and low prices, some of them providing for a guaranteed margin of 5½¢ per gallon, and some of them providing for what is described in the evidence as a "split margin."

(8) There is no competent substantial proof to support the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 18 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that the defendants and other persons to the grand jurors unknown "have combined and conspired together for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing the tank car prices of gasoline in the aforementioned spot markets, and, as intended by them, defendants have artificially raised 3579 and fixed said spot market tank car prices of gasoline and have maintained said prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels, and at levels agreed upon among them."

The competent substantial evidence produced totally fails to prove that this defendant combined and conspired with others for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing tank car prices, and totally fails to prove that this defendant with others artificially raised and fixed the spot market tank car prices, and totally fails to prove that this defendant with others maintained said prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels, and totally fails to prove that this defendant with others maintained said prices at levels agreed upon among them.

(9) There is no competent substantial proof to support the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 19 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that the defendants "engaged and participated in two concerted gasoline buying programs hereinafter referred to as (a) the East Texas buying programs and (b) the Mid-Continent buying program," which allegation is further explained by the answer to paragraph No. 13 of the bill of particulars filed by the government to the corporation and individual demand therefor, in which answer it is alleged as follows:

> "The Government claims that each of the defendants—including Gulf—engaged and participated > 3580 with the other defendants in a general conspiracy in which two concerted buying programs were used simultaneously and concurrently for carrying it out and for common purposes."

There is no evidence that this defendant participated in the alleged East Texas buying program or in the alleged Mid-Continent buying program.

The evidence shows that in East Texas the independent refiners organized the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association and engaged in a general effort to sell gasoline through that association, but there is no evidence of any concerted buying or of any buying program by other defendants from said independent refiners or from the said East Texas Refiners Marketing Association. The evidence further shows that there was no general conspiracy which included a buying program in East Texas, and that the formation of said East Texas Refiners Marketing Association and the sale of gasoline through said association had no relation to any alleged buying program in the Mid-Continent field.

(10) There is no competent substantial proof to support the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 19 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that the defendants engaged in two concerted buying programs "for the purchase by each of them from independent refiners in spot transactions of large quantities of gasoline in the East Texas and Mid-Continent fields at uniform, high, and at times progressively increased prices."

3581 The evidence shows that there was no such concerted buying either in the East Texas or Mid-Continent fields, but that purchases were made by some of the defendants to meet their own needs and that prices were agreed upon with the seller in regard to each sale and that said prices were not uniform, and that said prices were not high as compared with prevailing market prices at the time of such purchases.

(11) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein in support of the following allegation contained in paragraph No. 21 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that "said independent refiners have, at the instance of defendant Arnott, and the aforesaid Buckley, curtailed their production of gasoline."

The evidence shows that such curtailment of production of gasoline as occurred in the East Texas field was due to refinery allocations made by the District Allocator acting under the Planning and Coordination Committee under the provisions of the Code of Fair Competition for the petroleum industry. There is no substantial competent evidence that either the defendant Arnott or the witness Buckley caused the independent refiners in East Texas to curtail their production. The evidence discloses that it was a part of the purposes of the independent refiners in the formation of the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association that all the members of that 3582 association should comply with all provisions of the law, both State and Federal, and should not manufacture gasoline from illegally produced crude oil and should not produce gasoline in excess of the allocations of the Federal District Allocator.

(12) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein in support of the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 23 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged as follows: "Each of the defendant major oil companies named in the preceding paragraph has taken a part of the large quantities of gasoline purchased, as aforesaid, as from time to time allotted to it by defendants McDowell and Tuttle and Bourque, and the aforesaid Jacobi."

The competent substantial evidence wholly fails to show that any quantity of gasoline was ever allotted for purchase to this defendant or to any of the defendants by the defendants McDowell, Tuttle and Bourque and by the witness Jacobi.

amounts which the aforementioned defendant major oil companies would have purchased apart from their 3583 participation in said buying program, and they have been made at uniform, high, arbitrary, and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices, as agreed upon by said defendant major oil companies."

The competent substantial evidence shows that the defendant major oil companies have only made purchases in order to supply their needs and have not made purchases in excess of the amounts which they would have purchased apart from their participation in the alleged buying program. There is no substantial competent evidence to the effect that this defendant ever made purchases of gasoline in excess of its needs or in excess of such amounts as it would have purchased apart from the alleged buying program in the Mid-Continent area. The competent substantial evidence further shows that such purchases as were made by various defendants were not made at uniform prices and were not made at high prices, and were not made at arbitrary and non-competitive prices. The competent substantial evidence further shows that the said purchases were not made at prices agreed upon by the defendant major oil companies. The competent substantial evidence wholly fails to show any agreement whatsoever by this defendant with others or among the defendants as to the prices paid or to be paid for such purchases.

(14) There is no substantial competent evidence herein to support the following allegation contained in paragraph 3584 No. 23 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged as follows: "In furtherance of said unlawful purposes, said independent refiners have, at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque, curtailed their production of gasoline."

The competent substantial evidence shows that such curtailment of the production of gasoline as occurred in the Mid-Continent field was due to refinery allocations made by the District Allocator acting under the Planning and Coordination Committee under the provisions of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry. There is no competent substantial evidence that independent refiners curtailed their production of gasoline at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque.

(15) There is no substantial competent evidence to support the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 24 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that defendants Chicago Journal of Commerce and Keith Fashier and defendants Platt's Oilgram, National Petroleum News and Warren C. Platt "have been the chief agencies and instrumentalities through which the wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the major oil companies as aforesaid have affected the prices paid by jobbers, retail dealers, and consumers for gasoline in the Mid-Western area, including the Western 3585 Division of Wisconsin"; and there is no evidence in support of the allegation contained in said paragraph No. 24 that said defendants "while representing the price quotations published by them, as aforesaid, to be gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots * * * knowingly published and circulated as such price quotations the wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the defendant major oil companies as aforesaid in the East Texas buying program and Mid-Continent buying program"; and there is no evidence in support of the allegation contained in said paragraph No. 24 that said defendants engaged and participated in a combination and conspiracy with the other defendants as set forth in said indictment, as said allegations are explained in the answer to the corporate demand for a bill of particulars, No. 60 (See R. p. 71, Par. 27), which reads as follows:

> "Paragraph 24 of the indictment sets forth the participation of the market journals in the general combination and conspiracy charged in the indictment, and the Government claims that the allegation of this paragraph that the acts of the journals were done intentionally 'In the combination and conspiracy set forth in this indictment' amounts to saying that they were done in combination with all of the other defendants and conspirators (including Gulf, Bourque and Boggs)".

The evidence wholly fails to show that said defendants ever entered into any agreement with the other defendants in regard to the quotation of prices and wholly fails to show that said defendants quoted prices paid by major oil companies to independent refiners as prices paid by jobbers.

3586 The participation of the market journals was a necessary and essential element of the conspiracy which the indictment attempts to allege, and the failure to prove such participation of the market journals is a fatal variance and amounts to a failure of proof of the conspiracy or combination alleged.

(16) The substantial competent evidence fails to show that this defendant did any act whatsoever with any wrongful purpose or criminal intent. All the substantial competent evidence in the record herein is as consistent with the presumption of the innocence of this defendant as it is consistent with its guilt of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(18) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in gasoline among the several States of the United States in violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, as charged in Paragraph No. 18 of the indictment,

3587 (19) All competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that the only plan, arrangement, concert of action, or program for or relative to the sale and purchase of gasoline in the Mid-Continent field in which this defendant participated or engaged during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of the indictment, was a plan, arrangement, or program to reduce the amount of so-called distress gasoline on the market by securing reliable information as to the amounts of such gasoline which the independent refiners named in Paragraph No. 22 of the indictment had or would have on hand for sale, and by disseminating such information among the defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph No. 22.

(20) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period, this defendant engaged or participated in any combination, arrangement, agreement, understanding, concert of action, or program whereby, or as the result of which this defendant was or became obligated regularly to purchase any specific amount or any definite share, percentage or allotment of the surplus gasoline available or that would become available for purchase from the independent refiners, or from any of them.

3588 (21) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that any defendant major oil company performed or did any act within the Western District of Wisconsin pursuant to the alleged combination and conspiracy, if any, as alleged in the indictment herein.

(22) In addition to the fatal variance alleged in paragraph No. 15 hereof there is a fatal variance between the allegations of the indictment and the substantial competent evidence produced herein in this, to-wit, that whereas the indictment, as explained by the answer to paragraph No. 13 of the bill of particulars filed by the Government in response to the corporate demand (See R. p. 66, Par. 10), alleges that there was one general conspiracy which included two concerted buying programs, one in East Texas and the other in the Mid-Continent, the evidence shows that there was no buying program in East Texas, and that if any buying program existed it referred to the Mid-Continent only.

(23) There is a fatal variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence produced herein in this, to-wit, by reasserting the variances set forth in paragraph No. 22 hereof and adding thereto the following: the indictment in paragraph No. 23 charges that the independent refiners have at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs, and Bourque curtailed their production of gasoline, whereas the competent substantial evidence shows that the only curtailment in the manufacture of gasoline by the independent refiners 3589 was that required of them by the Federal Allocator under the Petroleum Code.

(24) There is a fatal variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence produced herein in this, to-wit, by reasserting the variances set forth in paragraph No. 23 hereof and adding thereto the following: the indictment charges that the gasoline purchased by the defendant major oil companies was allotted to each such defendant by defendants McDowell, Tuttle, Bourque, and the witness W. P. Jacobi, whereas the competent substantial evidence shows that no gasoline was allotted to any of said major oil company defendants, but was purchased by each such defendant only when required by it in its normal business operations.

(25) There is a fatal variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence produced therein in this, to-wit, by reasserting the variances set forth in paragraph No. 24 hereof and adding thereto the following: the indictment in paragraph No. 23 charges that the purchases of gasoline made by the major oil company defendants were "made at uniform, high, arbitrary, and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices, as agreed upon by said defendant major oil companies;" whereas the competent substantial evidence shows that the purchases of said defendant major oil companies were made at various 3590 and non-uniform prices; were made in most cases at prices at or below the low of the published market for like grade of gasoline; were not made at any arbitrary price, but were made at prices agreed upon between the seller and the buyer and in many instances differed as to prices on purchases made on the same day, and were made in sharp competition and in most cases at or below the published market prices therefor.

Wherefore, this defendant respectfully moves the Court to direct the jury to return a verdict of "Not Guilty" as to it.

Dated at Madison, Wisconsin, this 14th day of January, A. D. 1938.

MOTION OF DEFENDANT WADHAMS OIL COMPANY FOR A DIRECTED VERDICT.

(Filed January 17, 1938.)

Comes Now the defendant, Wadhams Oil Company, at the close of all the evidence adduced herein, and moves the Court to direct the jury to find a verdict of "Not Guilty" as to it, and in support thereof specifies the following reasons and grounds:

(1) The said indictment fails to allege that the defendants entered into the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin, or that the defendants, or any of them, performed or did any act pursuant to the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin.

(2) The said indictment discloses on its face that the trial of this defendant thereunder in the Western District of Wisconsin violates the right of this defendant under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of 3594 the United States to a trial by an impartial jury of the State and District wherein the crime, if any, alleged in the indictment was committed.

(3) The said indictment fails to describe and to particularize the alleged combination and conspiracy with sufficient definiteness and certainty and so specifically as to enable this defendant to plead an acquittal or a conviction thereunder in bar to any other proceedings against it based on the same matters or things, or on any of them, on which the indictment is based.

(5) The said indictment shows on its face that the conspiracy therein alleged did not and could not restrain interstate trade and commerce in gasoline within 3595 the meaning of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (15 U. S. C. A. § 1.)

(6) The said indictment fails to allege facts showing any violation by the defendant of any law of the United States.

(7) There is no competent substantial proof to support the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 11 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that the "said defendant major oil companies have uniformly adopted and have embodied in their respective standard forms of jobber contracts employed throughout the Mid-Western area virtually identical provisions governing terms and conditions of sale."

The evidence shows that the forms of jobber contracts in use by the various defendant major oil companies were not uniform and contain various provisions in regard to the price, some of them providing for the low price published in Platt's Oilgram or in the Chicago Journal of Commerce, some of them providing for the average of the high and low prices, some of them providing for a guaranteed margin of 5½¢ per gallon, and some of them providing for what is described in the evidence as a "split margin".

(8) There is no competent substantial proof to support the following allegations contained in paragraph 3596 No. 18 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that the defendants and other persons to the grand jury unknown "have combined and conspired together for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing the tank car prices of gasoline in the aforementioned spot markets, and, as intended by them, defendants have artificially raised and fixed said spot market tank car prices of gasoline and have maintained said prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels, and at levels agreed upon among them".

The competent substantial evidence produced totally fails to prove that this defendant combined and conspired with others for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing tank car prices, and totally fails to prove that this defendant with others artificially raised and fixed the spot market tank car prices, and totally fails to prove that this defendant with others maintained said prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels, and totally fails to prove that this defendant with others maintained said prices at levels agreed upon among them.

3597 program", which allegation is further explained by the answer to paragraph No. 13 of the bill of particulars filed by the Government (See R. p. 66, Par. 10) to the corporation and individual demand therefor, in which answer it is alleged as follows:

> "The Government claims that each of the defendants—including Gulf—engaged and participated with the other defendants in a general conspiracy in which two concerted buying programs were used simultaneously and concurrently for carrying it out and for common purposes."

There is no evidence that this defendant participated in the alleged East Texas buying program or in the alleged Mid-Continent buying program.

The evidence shows that in East Texas the independent refiners organized the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association and engaged in a general effort to sell gasoline through that association, but there is no evidence of any concerted buying or of any buying program by other defendants from said independent refiners or from the said East Texas Refiners Marketing Association. The evidence further shows that there was no general conspiracy which included a buying program in East Texas, and that the formation of said East Texas Refiners Marketing Association and the sale of gasoline through said association had no relation to any alleged buying program in the Mid-Continent field.

3598 (10) There is no competent substantial proof to support the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 19 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that the defendants engaged in two concerted buying programs "for the purchase by each of them from independent refiners in spot transactions of large quantities of gasoline in the East Texas and Mid-Continent fields at uniform, high, and at times progressively increased prices."

The evidence shows that there was no such concerted buying either in the East Texas or Mid-Continent fields, but that purchases were made by some of the defendants to meet their own needs and that prices were agreed upon with the seller in regard to each sale and that said prices were not uniform, and that said prices were not high as compared with prevailing market prices at the time of such purchases.

(11) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein in support of the following allegation contained in paragraph No. 21 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that "said independent refiners have, at the instance of defendant Arnott, and the aforesaid Buckley, curtailed their production of gasoline."

The evidence shows that such curtailment of production of gasoline as occurred in the East Texas field was due to refinery allocations made by the District Allocator 3599 acting under the Planning and Coordination Committee under the provisions of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry. There is no substantial competent evidence that either the defendant Arnott or the witness Buckley caused the independent refiners in East Texas to curtail their production. The evidence discloses that it was a part of the purposes of the independent refiners in the formation of the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association that all the members of that association should comply with all provisions of the law, both State and Federal, and should not manufacture gasoline from illegally produced crude oil and should not produce gasoline in excess of the allocations of the Federal District Allocator.

(12) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein in support of the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 23 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged as follows: "Each of the defendant major oil companies named in the preceding paragraph has taken a part of the large quantities of gasoline purchased, as aforesaid, as from time to time allotted to it by defendants McDowell and Tuttle and Bourque, and the aforesaid Jacobi."

The competent substantial evidence wholly fails to show that any quantity of gasoline was ever allotted for 3600 purchase to this defendant or to any of the defendants by the defendants McDowell, Tuttle and Bourque and by the witness Jacobi.

which the aforementioned defendant major oil companies would have purchased apart from their participation in said buying program, and they have been made at uniform, high, arbitrary, and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices, as agreed upon by said defendant major oil companies."

The competent substantial evidence shows that the defendant major oil companies have only made purchases in order to supply their needs and have not made purchases in excess of the amounts which they would have purchased apart from their participation in the alleged buying program. There is no substantial competent evidence to the effect that this defendant ever made purchases of gasoline in excess of its needs or in excess of such amounts as it would have purchased apart from the alleged buying program in the Mid-Continent area. The competent substantial evidence further shows that such purchases as were made by various defendants were not made at uni-3601 form prices and were not made at high prices, and were not made at arbitrary and non-competitive prices. The competent substantial evidence further shows that the said purchases were not made at prices agreed upon by the defendant major oil companies. The competent substantial evidence wholly fails to show any agreement whatsoever by this defendant with others or among the defendants as to the prices paid or to be paid for such purchases.

(14) There is no substantial competent evidence herein to support the following allegation contained in paragraph No. 23 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged as follows: "In furtherance of said unlawful purposes, said independent refiners have, at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque, curtailed their production of gasoline."

The competent substantial evidence shows that such curtailment of the production of gasoline as occurred in the Mid-Continent field was due to refinery allocations made by the District Allocator acting under the Planning and Coordination Committee under the provisions of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry. There is no competent substantial evidence that independent refiners curtailed their production of gasoline at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque.

3602 (15) There is no substantial competent evidence to support the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 24 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that defendants Chicago Journal of Commerce and Keith Fanshier and defendants Platt's Oilgram, National Petroleum News and Warren C. Platt "have been the chief agencies and instrumentalities through which the wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the major oil companies as aforesaid have affected the prices paid by jobbers, retail dealers, and consumers for gasoline in the Mid-Western area, including the Western Division of Wisconsin"; and there is no evidence in support of the allegation contained in said paragraph No. 24 that said defendants "while representing the price quotations published by them, as aforesaid, to be gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots * * * knowingly published and circulated as such price quotations the wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the defendant major oil companies as aforesaid in the East Texas buying program and Mid-Continent buying program"; and there is no evidence in support of the allegation contained in said paragraph No. 24 that said defendants engaged and participated in a combination and conspiracy with the other defendants as set forth in said indictment, as said allegations are explained in the 3603 answer to the corporate demand for a bill of particulars, No. 60 (See R. p. 71, Par. 27), which reads as follows:

> "Paragraph 24 of the indictment sets forth the participation of the market journals in the general combination and conspiracy charged in the indictment, and the Government claims that the allegation of this paragraph that the acts of the journals were done intentionally 'in the combination and conspiracy set forth in this indictment' amounts to saying that they were done in combination with all of the other defendants and conspirators (including Gulf, Bourque and Boggs)."

The evidence wholly fails to show that said defendants ever entered into any agreement with the other defendants in regard to the quotation of prices and wholly fails to show that said defendants quoted prices paid by major oil companies to independent refiners as prices paid by jobbers.

The participation of the market journals was a necessary and essential element of the conspiracy which the indictment attempts to allege, and the failure to prove such participation of the market journals is a fatal variance and amounts to a failure of proof of the conspiracy or combination alleged.

(16) The substantial competent evidence fails to show that this defendant did any act whatsoever with any wrongful purpose or criminal intent. All the substantial competent evidence in the record herein is as consistent with the presumption of the innocence of this defendant as 3604 it is consistent with its guilt of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(17) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein of facts which exclude every other hypothesis but that of the guilt of this defendant of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(18) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in gasoline among the several States of the United States in violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, as charged in Paragraph No. 18 of the indictment.

(19) All competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that the only plan, arrangement, concert of action, or program for or relative to the sale and purchase of gasoline in the Mid-Continent field in which this defendant participated or engaged during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of the indictment, was a plan, arrangement, or program to reduce the amount of so-called distress gasoline on the market by securing reliable information as to the amounts of such gasoline which the independent refiners named in Paragraph No. 22 of the indictment had or would have on hand for sale, and by disseminating 3605 such information among the defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph No. 22.

(20) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period, this defendant engaged or participated in any combination, arrangement, agreement, understanding, concert of action, or program whereby, or as the result of which this defendant was or became obligated regularly to purchase any specific amount or any definite share, percentage or allotment of the surplus gasoline available or that would become available for purchase from the independent refiners, or from any of them.

(21) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that any defendant major oil company performed or did any act within the Western District of Wisconsin pursuant to the alleged combination and conspiracy, if any, as alleged in the indictment herein.

(22) In addition to the fatal variance alleged in paragraph No. 15 hereof there is a fatal variance between the allegations of the indictment and the substantial competent evidence produced herein in this, to-wit, that whereas the indictment, as explained by the answer to paragraph No. 13 of the bill of particulars filed by the Government 3606 (See R. p. 66, Par. 10) in response to the corporate demand, alleges that there was one general conspiracy which included two concerted buying programs, one in East Texas and the other in the Mid-Continent, the evidence shows that there was no buying program in East Texas, and that if any buying program existed it referred to the Mid-Continent only.

(23) There is a fatal variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence produced herein in this, to-wit, by reasserting the variances set forth in paragraph No. 22 hereof and adding thereto the following: the indictment in paragraph No. 23 charges that the independent refiners have at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs, and Bourque curtailed their production of gasoline, whereas the competent substantial evidence shows that the only curtailment in the manufacture of gasoline by the independent refiners was that required of them by the Federal Allocator under the Petroleum Code.

(24) There is a fatal variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence produced herein in this, to-wit, by reasserting the variances set forth in paragraph No. 23 hereof and adding thereto the following: the indictment charges that the gasoline purchased by the defendant major oil companies was allotted to each such defendant by defendants McDowell, Tuttle, Bourque, and the 3607 witness W. P. Jacobi, whereas the competent substantial evidence shows that no gasoline was allotted to any of said major oil company defendants, but was purchased by each such defendant only when required by it in its normal business operations.

(25) There is a fatal variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence produced herein in this, to-wit, by reasserting the variances set forth in paragraph No. 24 hereof and adding thereto the following: the indictment in paragraph No. 23 charges that the purchases of gasoline made by the major oil company defendants were "made at uniform, high, arbitrary, and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices, as agreed upon by said defendant major oil companies," whereas the competent substantial evidence shows that the purchases of said defendant major oil companies were made at various and non-uniform prices; were made in most cases at prices at or below the low of the published market for like grade of gasoline; were not made at any arbitrary price, but were made at prices agreed upon between the seller and the buyer and in many instances differed as to prices on purchases made on the same day, and were made in sharp competition and in most cases at or below the published market prices therefor.

3608 Wherefore, this defendant respectfully moves the Court to direct the jury to return a verdict of "Not Guilty" as to it.

Dated at Madison, Wisconsin, this 14th day of January, A. D., 1938.

MOTION OF EMPIRE OIL AND REFINING COMPANY TO DISMISS THE INDICTMENT AND FOR A DIRECTED VERDICT.

(Filed 1/17/38.)

Comes now the defendant Empire Oil and Refining Company, (a Delaware corporation, the name of which has been changed to Cities Service Oil Company since the date of the indictment), at the close of all the evidence adduced herein, and moves the Court to dismiss the indictment and the proceedings thereunder, and to direct the jury to find a verdict of "Not Guilty" as to it, and in support thereof specifies the following reasons and grounds:

(1) The said indictment fails to allege that the defendants entered into the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin, or that the defendants, or any of them, performed or did any act pursuant to, in furtherance of, or to effect the object of the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin.

3610 (2) The said indictment discloses on its face that trial of this defendant thereunder in the Western District of Wisconsin violates the right of this defendant under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States to a trial by an impartial jury of the State and District wherein the crime, if any, alleged in the indictment was committed.

(5) The said indictment shows on its face that the conspiracy therein alleged did not and could not restrain interstate trade and commerce in gasoline within the meaning of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 1).

(6) The said indictment fails to allege facts showing any violation by the defendant of any law of the United States.

(7) There is no competent evidence in the record herein to warrant the jury in finding this defendant guilty of the offense charged in the indictment.

(8) All the substantial competent evidence in the record herein is as consistent with the innocence of this defendant as with its guilt of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(9) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein of facts which exclude every other hypothesis but that of the guilt of this defendant of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(10) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant combined or conspired together with the other defendants named in the indictment, or with any of them, or with other persons referred to in the indictment, or with any of them, as charged in 3612 Paragraph 18 of the indictment or elsewhere in the indictment.

(11) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant combined and conspired together with any defendant or other person or corporation for the purpose of artificially raising or fixing the tank car prices of gasoline in the spot markets mentioned in the indictment, or that this defendant, in combination or conspiracy with any other defendant or person or corporation referred to in the indictment or otherwise raised or fixed or maintained said spot market tank car prices of gasoline at artificially high or non-competitive levels or at levels agreed upon among them, or intentionally increased or fixed the tank car prices of gasoline, or arbitrarily exacted money from jobbers, or intentionally raised the general level of retail prices.

(12) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant engaged in an unlawful combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in gasoline among the several States of the United States in violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

(13) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or at any time during said
3613 period, this defendant engaged and participated in two concerted gasoline buying programs referred to in Paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the East Texas Buying Program, and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, as alleged in said paragraph.

(14) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant purchased gasoline at any time during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, from the independent refiners referred to in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or from any of them, at uniform, high, arbitrary or non-competitive prices, or from time to time at progressively increased prices, pursuant to any agreement between this defendant and the other defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 22, or any of them.

(15) All the competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that the only plan, arrangement, concert of action, or program for or relative to the sale and purchase of gasoline in the Mid-Continent field in which this defendant participated or engaged during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of the indictment, was a plan, arrangement, or program to reduce the amount of so-called distress gasoline on the market by securing reliable 3614 information as to the amounts of such gasoline which the independent refiners referred to in Paragraph 22 of the indictment had or would have on hand for sale, and by disseminating such information among the defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 22.

(16) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period, this defendant engaged or participated in any combination, arrangement, agreement, understanding, concert of action, or program whereby, or as the result of which, this defendant was or became obligated regularly to purchase any specific amount or any definite share, percentage or allotment of the surplus gasoline available or that would become available for purchase from the independent refiners referred to in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or whereby or as the result of which this defendant was or became obligated to pay any specific price or any price designated or fixed by any person or persons other than its own officers for such surplus gasoline as it might purchase from said independent refiners, or from any of them.

(17) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that any defendant or any other person performed or did any act within the Western District of 3615 Wisconsin pursuant to, or in furtherance of, or to effect the object of the combination and conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment herein.

(18) There is a fatal, material and prejudicial variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence adduced by and on behalf of the Government in support thereof, in that the indictment alleges in a single count that the defendants engaged in one general conspiracy to artificially raise and fix the prices of gasoline, and that they used as the means for accomplishing the purposes of that single conspiracy the two buying programs which are referred to in paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the East Texas Buying Program and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, some of the defendant major oil companies allegedly purchasing gasoline in the East Texas field, some of them allegedly purchasing gasoline in the Mid-Continent field, and only three of them allegedly purchasing in both fields, whereas the competent evidence in the record herein, even on the assumption that it tends to prove any violation or violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, only tends to prove that the defendants named in paragraphs 20 and 21 of the indictment engaged in a buying program in the East Texas field and that the defendants named in paragraphs 22 and 23 of the indictment engaged in another and entirely separate, distinct and different buying program in the 3616 Mid-Continent field.

(19) There is a fatal, material and prejudicial variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence adduced by and on behalf of the Government in support thereof, as follows:

The indictment alleges in paragraph 18 in a single count that the defendants engaged in one general conspiracy to artificially raise and fix the tank car prices of gasoline in the spot markets described in the indictment, and thereby to intentionally increase and fix the tank car prices of gasoline contracted to be sold, and sold, in interstate commerce in the Mid-Western area, and, by reason of the prevailing form of jobber contracts described in the indictment, to exact large sums of money from thousands of jobbers with whom they had such contracts in the Mid-Western area, and in turn to intentionally raise the general level of retail prices prevailing in said Mid-Western areas.

The indictment further alleges that the defendants used as the means for accomplishing the purposes of that alleged conspiracy,

First, the two buying programs which are referred to in paragraph nineteen of the indictment as (a) the East Texas Buying Program and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, and

Second, the participation of the defendant market
3617 journals, the Chicago Journal of Commerce, Platt's Oilgram and the National Petroleum News, which are alleged in paragraph 24 of the indictment to have been the chief agencies and instrumentalities through which the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the major oil companies affected the prices paid by jobbers, retail dealers and consumers for gasoline in the Mid-Western area, in that said market journals, while representing the price quotations published by them to be gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots, knowingly published and circulated as such price quotations the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the defendant major oil companies in said alleged East Texas Buying Program and Mid-Continent Buying Program.

On the contrary, however, the evidence in the record herein entirely fails to support said allegations with reference to the alleged participation in said alleged conspiracy of said market journals, but instead affirmatively establishes that said market journals, during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, as at all other times, published in their price quotations only the gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots, as represented by them, with the result that the United 3618 States moved to dismiss the indictment against said defendant market journals and against the defendant Warren C. Platt, which said motion, against the opposition of said defendants, was granted by this court.

The result of such complete failure of proof is that the defendant market journals, an alleged "necessary element" in the alleged scheme of the defendants; the alleged "connecting link between the immediate objective, the raising of the spot market price, and the ultimate objective" of the alleged conspiracy, that is, as alleged, "unjust enrichment for the major oil companies;" the alleged "outstanding means, the absolutely necessary means toward getting the conspiracy through" and the alleged "chief agencies and instrumentalities" through which the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline allegedly affected the prices paid by jobbers, retail dealers and consumers ~~for gasoline in~~ the Mid-Western area, and especially within the Western District of Wisconsin, have been proved by the evidence and have been found by order of this court not to have participated in or to have aided and abetted the other and now the only remaining defendants in carrying out the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, and that the conspiracy, if any, charged in the indictment has not been and cannot be proved.

(20) The evidence in this case does not permit the jury to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants 3619 or that any of them have violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act by participating and engaging in any buying program or programs as alleged in the indictment, for the following additional reasons:

The evidence introduced on behalf of the defendants establishes that the defendant Arnott was appointed Chief Stabilizer of the Petroleum Industry by a letter dated July 20, 1934 from the Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes, as Administrator of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, and carried on stabilization activities under the authority or the supposed authority of that letter until the termination of all code activities on May 27, 1935.

When the defendant Arnott on January 4, 1935, appointed the Tank Car Stabilization Committee and instructed that Committee to take steps to relieve the condition of the independent refiners, he reasonably believed that he was authorized so to do by said letter of July 20, 1934, and that in so doing he had the approval of the Petroleum Administrator and was acting to carry out his plans and policies. The defendant Arnott so told the defendants who were members of said Tank Car Stabilization Committee and said defendants reasonably believed and acted on those statements, and not otherwise, in carrying on the activities of that committee.

In all his connections with the buying of surplus 3620 gasoline in the Mid-Continent and in the East Texas fields, the defendant Arnott believed that he was acting under the authority of the letter of July 20, 1934, that he had the approval of the Petroleum Administrator and of his assistants and that he was acting in conformity with and for the purpose of effectuating the plans and policies of the Petroleum Administration. The defendant Arnott so advised the individual defendants who had any connection with such buying activities and each of said defendants reasonably believed said statements and for that reason, and not otherwise, participated in the so-called East Texas and Mid-Continent programs to the extent, if any, that each is shown by the evidence to have participated.

The Petroleum Administrator, through the Petroleum Administrative Board and through members of that Board, and otherwise, was advised of the activities of the defendant Arnott and of the so-called East Texas and Mid-Continent programs and at least tacitly approved and encouraged the carrying on of these so-called programs as a part of stabilization and as a means of assisting in the accomplishment of the ends and the objectives of the Petroleum Administration, and no criticism of those activities, nor request for their termination, was ever made by the Petroleum Administrator either directly or through the Petroleum Administrative Board or through the Planning 3621 and Coordination Committee of the Petroleum Industry.

The Government of the United States consists of many departments and bureaus and agencies. The Department of Justice and the Department of the Interior are equal and coordinate branches of the Government of the United States. Neither the court nor the jury, therefore, may find that what the defendants did under the authorization and at the request and with the knowledge and approval of the Government of the United States as represented during the period of the National Industrial Recovery Act and of the Petroleum Code by the Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes, as the Petroleum Administrator exercising the powers delegated to the President of the United States by said Act, whether such authorization was expressed or shown directly or through the Petroleum Administrative Board as the Administrative Agency of the Petroleum Code, constituted a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

Dated January 17, 1938.

MOTION TO DISMISS THE INDICTMENT AND FOR A DIRECTED VERDICT

(Filed January 14, 1938)

Come now the defendants, Continental Oil Company, a corporate defendant herein, Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy and L. T. Cramer, individually and separately, and not appearing otherwise, and at the close of all of the evidence adduced by the Government and at the close of all of the evidence adduced by the defendants in this case, move the court to dismiss the indictment and the proceedings thereunder, and direct the jury to find and return a verdict of "Not Guilty" as to the defendants Continental Oil Company, a corporate defendant, and as to Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy and L. T. Cramer, individual defendants, and each of said named defendants separately, and for grounds of said motion states:

I.

That all of the substantial evidence in the case wholly fails to establish that the said defendants, Continental Oil Company, Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy and L. T. Cramer entered into any unlawful combination and 3623 conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in gasoline among the several States of the United States in violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, or any amendments thereof, as charged in Paragraph 18 of the indictment.

II.

That there is no substantial evidence in the case that the said defendants, Continental Oil Company, Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy and L. T. Cramer committed an overt act in pursuance of the conspiracy charged in the indictment.

III.

That all of the evidence in the case wholly fails to establish the allegations of the indictment and fails to establish any fact alleged in said indictment upon which a verdict other than a verdict of "Not Guilty" can be sustained by the evidence in the case and the law of the case.

IV.

The said indictment fails to allege that the defendants entered into the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin, or that the defendants or any of them performed or did any act pursuant to the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin.

V.

The said indictment discloses on its face that the trial of these defendants thereunder in the Western District of Wisconsin violates the rights of these defendants under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States to a trial by an impartial jury of the State and District wherein the crime, if any, alleged in the indictment was committed.

VI.

The said indictment fails to describe and to particularize the alleged combination and conspiracy with sufficient definiteness and certainty and so specifically as to enable these defendants to prepare and make their defense thereto and to plead an acquittal or a conviction thereunder in bar to any other proceedings against them based on the same matters or things, or on any of them, on which the indictment is based.

VII.

The said indictment fails to describe and to particularize the alleged combination and conspiracy and the means agreed upon to accomplish the purposes thereof with sufficient definiteness and certainty and so specifically as to charge any offense against the United States and as to enable this court, from an inspection of the said indictment, to ascertain whether, if carried into effect, the alleged means would cause a restraint of interstate 3625 trade and commerce within the prohibitions of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (15 U. S. C. A. § 1.)

VIII.

The said indictment shows on its face that the conspiracy therein alleged did not and could not restrain interstate trade and commerce in gasoline within the meaning of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (15 U. S. C. A. § 1.)

IX.

The said indictment fails to allege the facts showing any violation by the defendants of any law of the United States.

X.

All the substantial competent evidence in the record herein is as consistent with the presumption of the innocence of these defendants as it is consistent with their guilt of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

XI.

There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein of facts which exclude every other hypothesis but that of the guilt of these defendants of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

XII.

There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that these defendants combined and conspired together with the other defendants named in the indictment, or with any of them, and with certain other persons referred to in the indictment, or with any of them, as charged in Paragraph 18 of the indictment.

XIII.

There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that these defendants engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in gasoline among the several States of the United States in violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, as charged in Paragraph 18 of the indictment.

XIV.

There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period the defendants engaged and participated in two concerted gasoline buying programs referred to in Paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the East Texas Buying Program, and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, as alleged in said Paragraph.

XV.

There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that, beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period the defendant Continental Oil Company purchased gasoline from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or from any of them, under the supervision and direction of the defendants Arnott and Carnes, and of one Neil Buckley, as alleged in Paragraph 21 of the indictment. That all the substantial evidence adduced in the case establishes that Continental Oil Company, acting by and through its officers, agents and representatives, and the defendants Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy and L. T. Cramer did not enter into any combination, agreement, arrangement or understanding that said Continental Oil Company would purchase gasoline from independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or from any of them, under the supervision and direction of the defendants Arnott and Carnes, and of one Neil Buckley, as alleged in Paragraph 21 of the indictment.

XVI.

There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that one Neil Buckley, acting in a liaison capacity between the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association, which is referred to in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, and the defendant major oil companies, instigated and directed any purchase of gasoline made by the de-3628 fendants, Continental Oil Company, Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy and L. T. Cramer during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of the indictment, from any independent refiner named in said Paragraph 20.

XVII.

There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that Continental Oil Company or the defendants Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy and L. T. Cramer, from time to time, or at any time during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, arranged with the other defendant major oil companies or any of their officers, agents or representatives named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or with any of them, to purchase any part or any amount of the gasoline sold by the independent refiners named in said Paragraph 20, whether sold through the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association or otherwise.

XVIII.

There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that Continental Oil Company or the defendants, Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy and L. T. Cramer at any time during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, purchased any gasoline from any independent refiner named in Paragraph 20 of the 3629 indictment, whether sold through the East Texas
Refiners Marketing Association, or otherwise, in accordance with or pursuant to any arrangements between the defendant Continental Oil Company and the other defendant major oil companies, their officers, agents or representatives, named in said Paragraph 20, or any of them.

XIX.

There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period, Continental Oil Company or the defendants Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy and L. T. Cramer engaged or participated in any combination, arrangement, agreement, understanding, concert of action or program for or relative to the purchase by the defendant major oil companies named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment of large quantities of gasoline from independent refiners in the East Texas field, as alleged in Paragraphs 19 to 21, inclusive, of the indictment.

XX.

There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that Continental Oil Company or the defendants Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy and L. T. Cramer purchased any gasoline during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, from any independent refiner named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment as 3630 the result of or in accordance with any arrangement, agreement or understanding between the defendant Continental Oil Company and the other defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 20, or any of them.

XXI.

There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that Continental Oil Company or the defendants Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy and L. T. Cramer purchased any gasoline during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of this indictment, or from any of them, at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices as agreed upon between the defendant Continental Oil Company and the other defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 20, or any of them.

XXII.

There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or any of them, at any time during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, curtailed their production of gasoline at the insistence of the defendant Arnott or of one Neil Buckley.

3631 XXIII.

The competent evidence in the record herein affirmatively establishes that at no time during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment was there an East Texas Buying Program, as alleged in Paragraphs 19 to 21, inclusive, of the indictment.

XXIV.

All the competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that the only plan, arrangement, concert of action, or program relative to spot transactions in gasoline in the East Texas field during the period beginning in the month of February 1935 and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment consisted of the organization of the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association by certain of the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, and of the operation and use of that Association by said independent refiners to sell the gasoline which they produced and for which they did not have regular established outlets or channels of distribution through service stations or jobbers.

XXV.

All the competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that the only plan, arrangement, concert of action, or program in effect at any time during the period beginning in the month of February 1935 and continu-3632 ing to the date of the presentation of this indictment for or relative to the sale and purchase of gasoline in the East Texas field was a selling program organized, maintained, and operated solely by the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment on their own initiative and in their own interests.

XXVI.

All the competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that the defendants Continental Oil Company, Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy and L. T. Cramer did not participate in any East Texas program for or relative to the sale and purchase of East Texas gasoline during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, except insofar as the defendant Continental Oil Company acting individually and not in pursuance of or in accordance with any combination, conspiracy, arrangement, agreement, program or concert of action, purchased gasoline in the regular course of its business on spot transactions from independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or from some of them.

XXVII.

All the competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that every purchase of gasoline made by the defendant Continental Oil Company, by or through any of its officers, agents or representatives, during the period beginning in the month of February 1935 and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, from any independent refiner named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, was made by the defendant Continental Oil Company in the free exercise of its own independent discretion as to the party with whom it would deal, as to the amount which it would purchase and as to the price that it would pay. 3633

XXVIII.

There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that the defendant, Continental Oil Company or the defendants Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy and L. T. Cramer purchased gasoline during the period beginning in the month of February 1935 and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or from any of them, at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices as agreed upon between defendant, Continental Oil Company, and the other defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 22, or any of them.

XXIX.

There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or any of them, at any time during the period beginning in the month of February 3634 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, curtailed their production of gasoline at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque.

XXX.

All the competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that the only plan, arrangement, concert of action, or program for or relative to the sale and purchase of gasoline in the Mid-Continent field in which this defendant, Continental Oil Company or the defendants, Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy and L. T. Cramer participated or engaged during the period beginning in the month of February 1935 and continuing to the date of the presentation of the indictment was a plan, arrangement, or program to reduce the amount of so-called distress gasoline on the market by securing reliable information as to the amounts of such gasoline which the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment had or would have on hand for sale, and by disseminating such information among the defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 22.

XXXI.

There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February 1935 and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that any time during said period, Continental Oil Company or the defendants Dan
Moran, Harry J. Kennedy and L. T. Cramer engaged 3635 or participated in any combination, arrangement, agreement, understanding, concert of action, or program whereby, or as the result of which, the defendant Continental Oil Company was or became obligated regularly to purchase any specific amount or any definite share, percentage or allotment of the surplus gasoline available or that would become available for purchase from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or whereby, or as the result of which, the defendant Continental Oil Company was or became obligated to pay any specific price or any price designated or fixed by any person or persons other than its own officers for such surplus gasoline as it might purchase from said independent refiners, or from any of them.

XXXII.

There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that any defendant major oil company performed or did any act within the Western District of Wisconsin pursuant to the combination and conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment herein.

XXXIII.

3636 acy to artificially raise and fix the prices of gasoline, and that they used as the means for accomplishing the purposes of that single conspiracy the two buying programs which are referred to in Paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the East Texas Buying Program and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, some of the defendant major oil companies allegedly purchasing gasoline in the East Texas field, some of them allegedly purchasing gasoline in the Mid-Continent field, and only three of them allegedly purchasing in both fields, whereas the competent evidence in the record herein, on the assumption that it tends to prove any violation or violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, only tends to prove that the defendants named in Paragraphs 20 and 21 of the indictment engaged in a buying program in the East Texas field and that the defendants named in Paragraphs 22 and 23 of the indictment engaged in another and entirely separate, distinct and different buying program in the Mid-Continent field.

XXXIV.

There is a fatal, material and prejudicial variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence adduced by and on behalf of the Government in support thereof, as follows:

The indictment alleges in Paragraph 18 in a single count that the defendants engaged in one general conspiracy to artificially raise and fix the tank car prices of gasoline in the spot markets described in the indictment, and 3637 thereby to intentionally increase and fix the tank car prices of gasoline contracted to be sold, and sold, in interstate commerce in the Mid-Western area, and, by reason of the prevailing form of jobber contracts described in the indictment, to exact large sums of money from thousands of jobbers with whom they had such contracts in the Mid-Western area, and in turn to intentionally raise the general level of retail prices prevailing in said Mid-Western area.

The indictment further alleges that the defendants used as the means for accomplishing the purposes of that alleged conspiracy—

First, the two buying programs which are referred to in Paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the East Texas Buying Program and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, and

Second, the participation of the defendant market journals, the Chicago Journal of Commerce, Platt's Oilgram and the National Petroleum News, which are alleged in Paragraph 24 of the indictment to have been the chief agencies and instrumentalities through which the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the major oil companies affected the prices paid by jobbers, retail dealers and consumers for gasoline in the Mid-Western area, in that said market journals, while representing the price quotations published by them to be gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots, knowingly published and circulated as such price quotations the alleged wrongfully and ar-3638 tificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the defendant major oil companies in said alleged East Texas Buying Program and Mid-Continent Buying Program.

On the contrary, however, the evidence in the record herein entirely fails to support said allegations with reference to the alleged participation in said alleged conspiracy of said market journals, but instead affirmatively establishes that said market journals, during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, as at all other times, only published in their price quotations the gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots, as represented by them, with the result that the United States moved to dismiss the indictment against said defendant market journals and against the defendant Warren C. Platt, which said motion, against the opposition of said defendants, was granted by this court.

XXXV.

That the evidence in the case establishes that if the defendant, Continental Oil Company and the defendants Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy and L. T. Cramer participated or engaged in the plan or program to purchase distressed gasoline from independent refineries either in the East Texas or Mid-Continent areas as alleged in the indictment the said defendants and each of them had reason to and did believe that the purchase of gasoline from said 3639 independent refineries was pursuant to and in conformity with the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act and the Code of Fair Competition of the Petroleum Industry, and that said purchases, if any, were made with the knowledge, approval and acquiescence of the Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes, Administrator of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, and with the knowledge, approval and acquiescence of the Petroleum Administrative Board and the members thereof, which Board and the members were appointed by the said Petroleum Administrator for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act and the Code of Fair Competition of the Petroleum Industry, and especially for the purpose of stabilizing said industry and the markets of petroleum products. That said Petroleum Administrator and said Petroleum Administrative Board and the members thereof were fully advised by the petroleum industry and the defendants in this case that the major oil companies, defendants herein, commencing in the month of March 1935 and thereafter, and including the month of December 1936 were purchasing so-called distress gasoline from independent refineries in the East Texas and Mid-Continent areas and that said Petroleum Administrator and said Petroleum Administrative Board and the members thereof, with such knowledge, approved, acquiesced in and encouraged the defendant major companies to participate in and carry on the purchase of so-called distress gasoline from independent refineries as a means of stabilizing the petroleum in-3640 dustry and stabilizing the markets of petroleum products of said industry. That by reason of the acts and conduct of said Petroleum Administrator and the members of said Petroleum Board and those acting under and by their authority these defendants were led to believe and did believe that the buying of so-called distress gasoline from independent refineries in said East Texas and Mid-Continent areas was under the approval and sanction of the officers of the government of the United States and that by reason thereof these defendants are entitled to a directed verdict of Not Guilty in this case.

Wherefore, the defendants, Continental Oil Company, the corporate defendant, Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy and L. T. Cramer, individually and separately, and not otherwise, respectfully pray the Court that the motion of said defendants as to each of them separately for a directed verdict of "Not Guilty" be sustained.

MOTION OF THE PURE OIL COMPANY FOR DIRECTED VERDICT.

(Filed 1/14/38)

Comes Now the defendant, The Pure Oil Company, a corporation, at the close of all of the evidence introduced herein, and requests that the court give to the jury the following instructions:

"The Court instructs the Jury to find the defendant, The Pure Oil Company, not guilty".

Without limiting, in any way, the general effect of this motion for a directed verdict, the said defendant specifies as particular reasons, among others, why such instruction should be given, the following, to-wit:

(1) All the substantial competent evidence in the record herein is as consistent with the presumption of the innocence of this defendant as it is consistent with its guilt of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

3642 (2) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein of facts which exclude every other hypothesis but that of the guilt of this defendant of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(3) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in gasoline among the several States of the United States in violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the "Sherman Anti-Trust Act", as charged in Paragraph 18 of the indictment.

(4) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant beginning in February, 1935, entered into an agreement to artificially raise and fix the tank car price of gasoline in the spot markets in the East Texas and Mid-Continent fields and in Chicago, Illinois, and thereby increased and fixed the tank car price of gasoline sold in the Mid-Western area, nor is there any evidence that this defendant either agreed to or did artificially raise and fix said spot market tank car price of gasoline and maintain such price at artificially high and non-competitive levels and at levels agreed upon between this defendant and others.

(5) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record that during the period beginning with the month of February, 1935 and continuing to the date of the 3643 presentation of the indictment that this defendant engaged and participated in two gasoline buying programs referred to in the indictment as (1) the East Texas buying program, and (2) the Mid-Continent buying program, for the purchase from independent refiners in spot transactions of large quantities of gasoline in the East Texas and Mid-Continent fields at uniform, high and at times progressively increased prices.

(6) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record that this defendant ever adopted, participated in or agreed to use a plan or scheme for purchasing gasoline from independent refiners at artificially high and above the current or going market price as a means for effectuating an alleged conspiracy to raise and fix the price of gasoline.

(7) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant purchased any gasoline during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, from any independent refiner named in paragraph 20 of the indictment as the result of or in accordance with any agreement, arrangement or understanding between this defendant and the other defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 20, or any of them.

(8) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant purchased any gaso-
3644 line during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or from any of them, at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices and from time to time at progressively increased prices as agreed upon between this defendant and the other defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 20, or any of them.

(9) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or any of them, at any time during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, curtailed their production of gasoline at the insistence of the defendant Arnott or of one Neil Buckley.

(10) The competent evidence in the record herein affirmatively establishes that at no time during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, was there an East Texas buying program, as alleged in Paragraphs 19 to 21, inclusive, of the indictment.

(11) All the competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that the only plan, arrangement, concert of action, or program relative to spot transactions
3645 in gasoline in the East Texas field during the period
beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, consisted of the organization of the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association by certain of the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, and of the operation and use of that association by said independent refiners to sell the gasoline which they produced and for which they did not have regular established outlets or channels of distribution through service stations or jobbers.

(12) All the competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that this defendant did not participate in any East Texas program for or relative to the sale and purchase of East Texas gasoline during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, and not in pursuance of or in accordance with any combination, conspiracy, arrangement, agreement, program or concert of action, purchased gasoline in the regular course of its business on spot transactions from independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or from some of them.

(13) All the competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that every purchase of gasoline 3646 made by this defendant during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of presentation of this indictment, from any independent refiner named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, was made by this defendant in the free exercise of its own independent discretion as to the party with whom it would deal, as to the amount which it would purchase, and as to the price that it would pay.

(14) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant purchased gasoline during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or from any of them, at uniform, high, arbitrary, and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices as agreed upon between this defendant and the other defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 22, or any of them.

(15) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or any of them, at any time during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, curtailed their production of gasoline at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque.

3647 (16) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of the indictment, or that at any time during said period, this defendant engaged or participated in any combination, arrangement, agreement, understanding, concert of action, or program whereby, or as the result of which, this defendant was or became obligated regularly to purchase any specific amount or any definite share, percentage or allotment of the surplus gasoline available or that would become available for purchase from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or whereby, or as the result of which, this defendant was or became obligated to pay any specific price or any price designated or fixed by any person or persons other than its own officers for such surplus gasoline as it might purchase from said independent refiners, or from any of them.

(17) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that any defendant major oil company, or other defendant herein, performed or did any act within the Western District of Wisconsin pursuant to the combination and conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment herein.

(18) There is a fatal, material and prejudicial variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence adduced by and on behalf of the government in support thereof, in that the indictment alleges in a 3648 single count that the defendants engaged in one general conspiracy to artificially raise and fix the prices of gasoline, and that they used as the means for accomplishing the purposes of that single conspiracy the two buying programs which are referred to in Paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the East Texas Buying Program and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, some of the defendant major oil companies allegedly purchasing gasoline in the East Texas field, some of them allegedly purchasing gasoline in the Mid-Continent field, and only three of them allegedly purchasing in both fields, whereas the competent evidence in the record herein, on the assumption that it tends to prove any violation or violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (which is denied) only tends to prove (at most) that the defendants named in Paragraphs 20 and 21 of the indictment engaged in a buying program in the East Texas field and that the defendants named in Paragraphs 22 and 23 of the indictment engaged in another and entirely separate, distinct and different buying program in the Mid-Continent field.

(19) There is no competent evidence that the trade journals named in Paragraph 24 of the indictment have been the chief agencies by means of which any artificial prices have been exacted from jobbers and consumers of gasoline in the Mid-Western area.

(20) There is a fatal variance between the allega- 3649 tions in the indictment and the evidence in the record herein in that the indictment alleges that the market journals intentionally engaged and participated in the alleged conspiracy; that they directly and materially aided defendants in effectuating the alleged conspiracy and that they were the chief agencies and instrumentalities through which they wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the defendant under the alleged buying programs, affected the prices paid for gasoline through jobbers by retail dealers and by consumers in the Mid-Western area. Further, that said market journals while representing the price quotations published by them to be prices prevailing in spot gasoline sales to jobbers in tank car lots, and while knowing and intending such prices to be relied on as such by jobbers and to be made the basis of prices to jobbers for gasoline supplied under the jobber contracts described in the indictment, in fact knowingly published and circulated as such price quotations the artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by this and other defendant major oil companies in the East Texas and Mid-Continent buying programs and there is no evidence to support any of said allegations in the indictment relating to the said market journals.

(21) The United States of America has failed to prove by any competent or sufficient evidence that this defendant, The Pure Oil Company, has done any act or thing constituting, in whole or in part, any violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known 3650 as the "Sherman Anti-Trust Act."

(22) The evidence in this case does not establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants or that any of them can be held to have violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act by participating and engaging in any buying program or programs as alleged in the indictment for the following reasons:

The evidence introduced on behalf of the defendants establishes or tends to establish that the defendant Arnott was appointed Chief Stabilizer of the Petroleum Industry by a letter dated July 20, 1934 from the Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes, as Administrator of the Code of Fair Competition for the petroleum industry. The defendant Arnott carried on stabilization activities under the authority or the supposed authority of that letter until the termination of all code activities on May 27, 1935.

When the defendant Arnott on January 4, 1935, appointed the Tank Car Stabilization Committee and instructed that Committee to take steps to relieve the condition of the independent refiners, he reasonably believed that he was authorized so to do by said letter of July 20, 1934, and he reasonably believed that in so doing he had the approval of the Petroleum Administrator and was acting to carry out his plans and policies. The and said defendants reasonably believed and acted on those statements, and not otherwise, in carrying on the activities of that Committee.

In all his connections with the buying of surplus gasoline in the Mid-Continent and in the East Texas fields the defendant Arnott believed that he was acting under the authority of the letter of July 20, 1934, and that he had the approval of the Petroleum Administrator and of his assistants and that he was acting in conformity with and for the purpose of effectuating the plans and policies of the Petroleum Administration. The defendant Arnott so advised each individual defendant who had any connection with such buying activities and each of said defendants reasonably believed said statements and for that reason, and not otherwise, participated in the so-called East Texas and Mid-Continent buying programs to the extent each is shown by the evidence in this case to have participated.

The Petroleum Administrator, through the Petroleum Administrative Board and through members of that Board, and otherwise, was advised of the activities of the defendant Arnott and of the so-called East Texas and 3652 Mid-Continent buying programs and at least tacitly approved and encouraged the defendants in carrying on these so-called buying programs as a part of stabilization and as a means of assisting in the accomplishment of the ends and the objectives of the Petroleum Administration. If the Petroleum Administrator either directly or through the Petroleum Administrative Board or through the Planning and Coordination Committee of the Petroleum Industry had requested that said buying activities be terminated, the same would have been terminated. No such request, however, ever was made nor was any criticism of those activities ever offered.

The Government of the United States consists of many departments and bureaus and agencies. The Department of Justice and the Department of the Interior are equal and coordinate branches of the Government of the United States. Neither this court nor this jury, therefore, may find that what these defendants did under the authorization and at the request and with the knowledge and approval of the Government of the United States as represented during the period of the National Industrial Recovery Act and of the Petroleum Code by the Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes, as the Petroleum Administrator exercising the powers delegated to the President 3653 dent of the United States by said Act, whether such authorization was expressed or shown directly or through the Petroleum Administrative Board as the Administrative Agency of the Petroleum Code, constituted a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

Dated this 14th day of Jan., A. D., 1938.

MOTION OF R. H. McELROY, JR., FOR DIRECTED VERDICT.

(Filed January 14, 1938.)

Now Comes R. H. McElroy, Jr., defendant in the above entitled cause, by his attorney, at the close of all the evidence, and moves the Court to give to the jury the following instruction:

"The Court instructs the jury to find the defendant R. H. McElroy, Jr. not guilty".

Without limiting, in any way, the general effect of this request for a directed verdict, the said defendant specifies as particular reasons, among others, why such instruction should be given, the following, to-wit:

(1) All the substantial competent evidence in the record herein is as consistent with the presumption of the innocence of this defendant as it is consistent with his guilt of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

3655 (2) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein of facts which exclude every other hypothesis but that of the guilt of this defendant of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(3) There is no substantial evidence in the record herein that this defendant combined and conspired together with the other defendants named in the indictment, or with any of them, and with any of them, and with certain other persons referred to in the indictment, or with any of them, as charged in Paragraph 18 of the indictment.

(4) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that the defendant engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in gasoline among the several states of the United States in violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the "Sherman Anti-Trust Act", as charged in Paragraph 18 of the indictment.

(5) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of the indictment, or that at any time during said period, the defendant The Pure Oil Company, acting through or under the direction of this defendant, engaged and participated in two concerted gasoline buying programs, referred to in Paragraph 19 of the indictment, as (a) the East Texas buying program, and (b) the Mid-Continent buying program, as alleged in said paragraph.

(7) There is a fatal, material and prejudicial variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence in that the indictment alleges in a single count that the defendants engaged in one general conspiracy to artificially raise and fix the prices of gasoline, and that they used as the means for accomplishing the purposes of that single conspiracy the two buying programs which are referred to in paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the East Texas buying program and (b) the Mid-Continent buying program, some of the defendant major oil companies allegedly purchasing gasoline in the East Texas field, some of them allegedly purchasing gasoline in the Mid-Continent field, and only three of them allegedly purchasing in both fields, whereas the competent evidence in the record herein, on the assumption that it tends to prove any violation or violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, only tends to prove that the defendants named in paragraphs 20 and 21 of the indictment engaged in a buying program in the East Texas field and that the defendants named in paragraphs 22 and 23 of the indictment engaged in another and entirely separate, distinct and different buying program in the Mid-Continent field.

3657 (8) The United States of America has failed to prove by competent evidence that this defendant as an officer, director or agent of The Pure Oil Company, or otherwise, authorized, ordered or did any of the acts constituting in whole or in part any violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the "Sherman Anti-Trust Act."

(9) There is no substantial competent evidence that this defendant knew of the alleged conspiracy and its unlawful purposes and that he knowingly participated therein, either authorizing, ordering or doing any of the acts constituting, in whole or in part, the unlawful conspiracy.

(10) The evidence in this case does not establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants or that any of them can be held to have violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act by participating and engaging in any buying program or programs as alleged in the indictment for the following reasons:

> The evidence introduced on behalf of the defendants establishes or tends to establish that the defendant Arnott was appointed Chief Stabilizer of the Petroleum Industry by a letter dated July 20, 1934 from the Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes, as Administrator of the Code of Fair Competition for the petroleum industry. The defendant Arnott carried on stabilization activities under the 3658 authority or the supposed authority of that letter until the termination of all code activities on May 27, 1935.
>
> When the defendant Arnott on January 4, 1935, appointed the Tank Car Stabilization Committee and instructed that Committee to take steps to relieve the condition of the independent refiners, he reasonably believed that he was authorized so to do by said letter of July 20, 1934, and he reasonably believed that in so doing he had the approval of the Petroleum Administrator and was acting to carry out his plans and policies. The defendant Arnott so told the defendants who were members of said Tank Car Stabilization Committee and said defendants reasonably believed and acted on those statements, and not otherwise, in carrying on the activities of that Committee.
>
> In all his connections with the buying of surplus gasoline in the Mid-Continent and in the East Texas fields the defendant Arnott believed that he was acting under the authority of the letter of July 20, 1934, and that he had the approval of the Petroleum Administrator and of his assistants and that he was 3659 acting in conformity with and for the purpose of effectuating the plans and policies of the Petroleum Administration. The defendant Arnott so advised each individual defendant who had any connection with such buying activities and each of said defendants reasonably believed said statements and for that reason, and not otherwise, participated in the so-called East Texas and Mid-Continent buying programs to the extent each is shown by the evidence in this case to have participated.

The Petroleum Administrator, through the Petroleum Administrative Board and through members of that Board, and otherwise, was advised of the activities of the defendant Arnott and of the so-called East Texas and Mid-Continent buying programs and at least tacitly approved and encouraged the defendants in carrying on these so-called buying programs as a part of the stabilization and as a means of assisting in the accomplishment of the ends and the objectives of the Petroleum Administration. If the Petroleum Administrator either directly or through the Petroleum Administrative Board or 3660 through the Planning and Coordination Committee of the Petroleum Industry had requested that said buying activities be terminated, the same would have been terminated. No such request, however, ever was made nor was any criticism of those activities ever offered.

The government of the United States consists of many departments and bureaus and agencies. The Department of Justice and the Department of the Interior are equal and coordinate branches of the government of the United States. Neither this court nor this jury, therefore, may find that what these defendants did under the authorization and at the request and with the knowledge and approval of the government of the United States as represented during the period of the National Industrial Recovery Act and of the Petroleum Code by the Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes, as the Petroleum Administrator exercising the powers delegated to the President of the United States by said Act, whether such authorization was expressed or shown directly or through the Petroleum Administrative Board as 3661 the Administrative Agency of the Petroleum Code, constituted a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

Dated this 14th day of Jan., A. D. 1938.

MOTION OF DEFENDANT SHELL PETROLEUM CORPORATION FOR A DIRECTED VERDICT

(Filed January 15, 1938)

Comes now the defendant, Shell Petroleum Corporation, at the close of all the evidence adduced herein, and moves the Court to direct the jury to find a verdict of "Not Guilty" as to it, and in support thereof specifies the following reasons and grounds:

(1) The said indictment fails to allege that the defendants entered into the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin, or that the defendants, or any of them, performed or did any act pursuant to the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin.

(2) The said indictment discloses on its face that the trial of this defendant thereunder in the Western District of Wisconsin violates the right of this defendant under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the 3663 United States to a trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime, if any, alleged in the indictment was committed.

(3) The said indictment fails to describe and to particularize the alleged combination and conspiracy with sufficient definiteness and certainty and so specifically as to enable this defendant to prepare and to make its defense thereto and to plead an acquittal or a conviction thereunder in bar to any other proceedings against it based on the same matters or things, or on any of them, on which the indictment is based.

(4) The said indictment fails to describe and to particularize the alleged combination and conspiracy and the means agreed upon to accomplish the purposes thereof with sufficient definiteness and certainty and so specifically as to charge any offense against the United States and as to enable this Court, from an inspection of the said indictment, to ascertain whether, if carried into effect, the alleged means would cause a restraint of interstate trade and commerce within the prohibitions of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 1).

(5) The said indictment shows on its face that the conspiracy therein alleged did not and could not restrain interstate trade and commerce in gasoline within the meaning of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 3664 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15
U. S. C. A. § 1).

(6) The said indictment fails to allege facts showing any violation by the defendant of any law of the United States.

(7) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 11 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that the "said defendant major oil companies have uniformly adopted and have embodied in their respective standard forms of jobber contracts employed throughout the Mid-Western area virtually identical provisions governing terms and conditions of sale."

The evidence shows that the forms of jobber contracts in use by the various defendant major oil companies were not uniform and contain various provisions in regard to the price, some of them providing for the low price published in Platt's Oilgram or in the Chicago Journal of Commerce, some of them providing for the average of the high and low prices, some of them providing for a guaranteed margin of 5½¢ per gallon, and some of them providing for what is described in the evidence as a "split margin."

(8) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 18 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that the defendants and other persons to the grand jurors unknown "have combined and conspired together for the purpose of 3665 artificially raising and fixing the tank car prices of gasoline in the aforementioned spot markets, and, as intended by them, defendants have artificially raised and fixed said spot market tank car prices of gasoline and have maintained said prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels, and at levels agreed upon among them."

The evidence produced totally fails to prove that this defendant combined and conspired with others for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing tank car prices, and totally fails to prove that this defendant with others artificially raised and fixed the spot market tank car prices, and totally fails to prove that this defendant with others maintained said prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels, and totally fails to prove that this defendant with others maintained said prices at levels agreed upon among them.

(9) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 19 of the indictment; wherein it is alleged that the defendants "engaged and participated in two concerted gasoline buying programs hereinafter referred to as (a) the East Texas buying program and (b) the Mid-Continent buying program," which allegation is further explained by the answer to paragraph No. 1 of the bill of particulars filed by the Shell Petroleum Corporation (See R. p. 66, Par. 10), in which answer it is alleged as follows:

> "The Government claims that each of the defendants—including Gulf—engaged and participated with the other defendants in a general conspiracy in which two concerted buying programs were used simultaneously and concurrently for carrying it out and for common purposes."

There is no evidence that this defendant participated in the alleged East Texas buying program or in the alleged Mid-Continent buying program.

The evidence shows that in East Texas the independent refiners organized the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association and engaged in a general effort to sell gasoline through that association, but there is no evidence of any concerted buying or of any buying program by other defendants from the said independent refiners or from the said East Texas Refiners Marketing Association. The evidence further shows that there was no general conspiracy which included a buying program in East Texas, and that the formation of said East Texas Refiners Marketing Association and the sale of gasoline through said association had no relation to any alleged buying program in the Mid-Continent field.

(10) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 19 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that the defendants engaged in two concerted buying programs "for the purchase by each of them from independent refiners in spot transactions of large quantities of gasoline in the 3667 East Texas and Mid-Continent fields at uniform, high, and at times progressively increased prices."

The evidence shows that there was no such concerted buying either in the East Texas or Mid-Continent fields, but that purchases were made by some of the defendants to meet their own needs and that prices were agreed upon with the seller in regard to each sale and that said prices were not uniform and that said prices were not high as compared with prevailing market prices at the time of such purchases.

The evidence shows that all purchases made by Shell Petroleum Corporation which were made at a flat price (i.e. a price not determined by published quotations on the date of shipment) were made at prices at or below the low of the published quotations for gasoline of like grade and quality.

3668 (12) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegation contained in paragraph
No. 21 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that "said independent refiners have, at the instance of defendant Arnott, and the aforesaid Buckley, curtailed their production of gasoline."

The evidence shows that such curtailment of production of gasoline as occurred in the East Texas field was due to refinery allocations made by the District Allocator acting under the Planning and Coordination Committee under the provisions of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry. There is no evidence that either the defendant Arnott or the witness Buckley caused the independent refiners in East Texas to curtail their production. The evidence discloses that it was a part of the purposes of the independent refiners in the formation of the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association that all the members of that association should comply with all provisions of the law, both State and Federal, and should not manufacture gasoline from illegally produced crude oil and should not produce gasoline in excess of the allocations of the Federal District Allocator.

(13) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 23 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged as follows:
3669 "Each of the defendant major oil companies named in the preceding paragraph has taken a part of the large quantities of gasoline purchased, as aforesaid, as from time to time allotted to it by defendants McDowell and Tuttle and Bourque, and the aforesaid Jacobi."

The evidence wholly fails to show that any quantity of gasoline was ever allotted for purchase to this defendant or to any of the defendants by the defendants McDowell, Tuttle and Bourque and by the witness Jacobi.

The evidence shows that the defendant major oil companies have only made purchases in order to supply their needs and have not made purchases in excess of the amounts which they would have purchased apart from their participation in the alleged buying program. There is no evidence to the effect that this defendant ever made purchases of gasoline in excess of its needs or in excess 3670 of such amounts as it would have purchased apart from the alleged buying program in the Mid-Continent area. The evidence further shows that such purchases as were made by various defendants were not made at uniform prices and were not made at high prices, and were not made at arbitrary and non-competitive prices. The evidence further shows that the said purchases were not made at prices agreed upon by the defendant major oil companies. The evidence wholly fails to show any agreement whatsoever by this defendant with others or among the defendants as to the prices paid or to be paid for such purchases. The evidence shows that all purchases made by Shell Petroleum Corporation which were made at a flat price (i.e. a price not determined by published quotations on the date of shipment) were made at prices at or below the low of the published quotations for gasoline of like grade and quality.

(15) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegation contained in paragraph 23 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged as follows: "In furtherance of said unlawful purposes, said independent refiners have, at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque, curtailed their production of gasoline."

The evidence shows that such curtailment of the production of gasoline as occurred in the Mid-Continent field was due to refinery allocations made by the District Allocator acting under the Planning and Coordination Committee under the provisions of the Code of Fair 3671 Competition for the Petroleum Industry. There is no evidence that independent refiners curtailed their production of gasoline at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque.

(16) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 24 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that defendants Chicago Journal of Commerce and Keith Fanshier and defendants Platt's Oilgram, National Petroleum News and Warren C. Platt "have been the chief agencies and instrumentalities through which the wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the major oil companies as aforesaid have affected the prices paid by jobbers, retail dealers, and consumers for gasoline in the Mid-Western area, including the Western Division of Wisconsin;" and there is no evidence in support of the allegation contained in said paragraph No. 24 that said defendants "while representing the price quotations published by them, as aforesaid, to be gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots * * * knowingly published and circulated as such price quotations the wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the defendant major oil companies as aforesaid in the said East Texas buying program and Mid-Continent buying program;" and there is no evidence in support of the allegation contained in said para-3672 graph No. 24 that said defendants engaged and participated in a combination and conspiracy with the other defendants as set forth in said indictment, as said allegations are explained in the answer to the individual demand for a bill of particulars, No. 58 (See R. p. 71, Par. 27), which reads as follows:

> "Paragraph 24 of the indictment sets forth the participation of the market journals in the general combination and conspiracy charged in the indictment, and the Government claims that the allegation of this paragraph that the acts of the journals were done intentionally 'in the combination and conspiracy set forth in this indictment' amounts to saying that they were done in combination with all of the other defendants and conspirators (including Gulf, Bourque and Boggs)".

The evidence wholly fails to show that said defendants ever entered into any agreement with the other defendants in regard to the quotation of prices and wholly fails to show that said defendants quoted prices paid by major oil companies to independent refiners as prices paid by jobbers.

The participation of the market journals was a necessary and essential element of the conspiracy which the indictment attempts to allege, and the failure to prove such participation of the market journals is a fatal variance and amounts to a failure of proof of the conspiracy or combination alleged.

(17) The evidence fails to show that this defendant did any act whatsoever with any wrongful purpose or criminal intent. All the substantial competent evidence 3673 in the record herein is as consistent with the presumption of the innocence of this defendant as it is consistent with its guilt of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(18) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein of facts which exclude every other hypothesis but that of the guilt of this defendant of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(19) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in gasoline among the several States of the United States in violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, as charged in Paragraph 18 of the indictment.

(20) All competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that the only plan, arrangement, concert of action, or program for or relative to the sale and purchase of gasoline in the Mid-Continent field in which this defendant participated or engaged during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of the indictment, was a plan, arrangement, or program to reduce the amount of so-called distress gasoline on the market by securing reliable information as to the amounts of such gasoline which the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment 3674 had or would have on hand for sale, and by disseminating such information among the defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 22.

(21) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period, this defendant engaged or participated in any combination, arrangement, agreement, understanding, concert of action, or program whereby, or as the result of which, this defendant was or became obligated regularly to purchase any specific amount or any definite share, percentage or allotment of the surplus gasoline available or that would become available for purchase from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or, whereby, or as the result of which, this defendant was or became obligated to pay any specific price or any price designated or fixed by any person or persons other than its own officers for such surplus gasoline as it might purchase from said independent refiners, or from any of them.

(22) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that any defendant major oil company performed or did any act within the Western District of Wisconsin pursuant to the alleged combination and conspiracy, if any, as alleged in the indictment herein.

3675 (23) There is a fatal variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence produced by the Government in this, to-wit, that whereas the indictment, as explained by the answer to paragraph No. 1 of the bill of particulars filed by the Shell Petroleum Corporation, alleges that there was one general conspiracy which included two concerted buying programs, one in East Texas and the other in the Mid-Continent, the evidence shows that there was no buying program in East Texas, and that if any buying program existed it referred to the Mid-Continent only.

(24) The evidence herein shows that if the defendant Shell Petroleum Corporation, or any of the other defendants herein, participated or engaged in any buying of gasoline, as charged in the indictment, that defendants acted with the knowledge and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes, as Petroleum Administrator exercising the powers delegated under and by virtue of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and with the knowledge and approval of the Petroleum Administrative Board and the individual members thereof, who were duly authorized agents of said Petroleum Administrator. The evidence further shows that if the defendant Shell Petroleum Corporation, or any of the defendants herein, participated or engaged in any buying of gasoline, as charged in the indictment, that defendants acted with the understanding and belief that they had the approval of said Petroleum 3676 Administrator and his duly authorized agents and that their participation in such buying was in aid of and in furtherance of the aims, plans and policies of said Petroleum Administrator. Neither this Court nor this jury, therefore, may find that what this defendant and any of the other defendants did under the authorization or with the knowledge and approval of said Petroleum Administrator constituted a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

Wherefore, this defendant respectfully moves the Court to direct the jury to return a verdict of "Not Guilty" as to it.

MOTION OF DEFENDANT P. E. LAKIN FOR A DIRECTED VERDICT.

(Filed 1/15/38.)

Comes now the defendant, P. E. Lakin, at the close of all the evidence adduced herein and moves the Court to direct the jury to find a verdict of "Not Guilty" as to him, and in support thereof specifies the following reasons and grounds:

(1) The said indictment fails to allege that the defendants entered into the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin, or that the defendants, or any of them, performed or did any act pursuant to the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin.

(2) The said indictment discloses on its face that the trial of this defendant thereunder in the Western District of Wisconsin violates the right of this defendant under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the 3678 United States to a trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime, if any, alleged in the indictment was committed.

(5) The said indictment shows on its face that the conspiracy therein alleged did not and could not restrain interstate trade and commerce in gasoline within the meaning of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of 3679 July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 1).

(6) The said indictment fails to allege facts showing any violation by the defendant of any law of the United States.

(7) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 11 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that the "said defendant major oil companies have uniformly adopted and have embodied in their respective standard forms of jobber contracts employed throughout the Mid-Western area virtually identical provisions governing terms and conditions of sale."

The evidence shows that the forms of jobber contracts in use by the various defendant major oil companies were not uniform and contain various provisions in regard to the price, some of them providing for the low price published in Platt's Oilgram or in the Chicago Journal of Commerce, some of them providing for the average of the high and low prices, some of them providing for a guaranteed margin of 5½¢ per gallon, and some of them providing for what is described in the evidence as a "split margin".

3680 artificially raising and fixing the tank car prices of gasoline in the aforementioned spot markets, and, as intended by them, defendants have artificially raised and fixed said spot market tank car prices of gasoline and have maintained said prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels, and at levels agreed upon among them."

The evidence produced totally fails to prove that the defendant Shell Petroleum Corporation, of which this defendant is Vice-President, combined and conspired with others for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing tank car prices and totally fails to prove that said defendant, Shell Petroleum Corporation, with others artificially raised and fixed the spot market tank car prices, and totally fails to prove that said defendant, Shell Petroleum Corporation, with others maintained said prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels, and totally fails to prove that said defendant, Shell Petroleum Corporation, with others maintained said prices at levels agreed upon among them.

3681 program", which allegation is further explained by the answer to paragraph No. 1 of the bill of particulars filed by the Shell Petroleum Corporation, in which answer it is alleged as follows:

> "The Government claims that each of the defendants—including Gulf—engaged and participated with the other defendants in a general conspiracy in which two concerted buying programs were used simultaneously and concurrently for carrying it out and for common purposes."

There is no evidence that the defendant, Shell Petroleum Corporation, participated in the alleged East Texas buying program or in the alleged Mid-Continent buying program.

The evidence shows that in East Texas the independent refiners organized the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association and engaged in a general effort to sell gasoline through that association, but there is no evidence of any concerted buying or of any buying program by other defendants from the said independent refiners or from the said East Texas Refiners Marketing Association. The evidence further shows that there was no general conspiracy which included a buying program in East Texas, and that the formation of said East Texas Refiners Marketing Association and the sale of gasoline through said association had no relation to any alleged buying program in the Mid-Continent field.

The evidence shows that there was no such concerted buying either in the East Texas or Mid-Continent fields, but that purchases were made by some of the defendants to meet their own needs and that prices were agreed upon with the seller in regard to each sale and that said prices were not uniform, and that said prices were not high as compared with prevailing market prices at the time of such purchases.

(11) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 19 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that the defendants engaged in two concerted buying programs "for the purchase by each of them from independent refiners in spot transactions of large quantities of gasoline in the East Texas and Mid-Continent fields at uniform, high and at times progressively increased prices".

The evidence shows that all purchases made by Shell Petroleum Corporation which were made at a flat 3683 price (i. e. shipment) were made at prices at or below the low of the published quotations for gasoline of like grade and quality.

(12) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegation contained in paragraph No. 21 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that "said independent refiners have, at the instance of defendant Arnott, and the aforesaid Buckley, curtailed their production of gasoline".

The evidence shows that such curtailment of production of gasoline as occurred in the East Texas field was due to refinery allocations made by the District Allocator acting under the Planning and Coordination Committee under the provisions of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry. There is no evidence that either the defendant Arnott or the witness Buckley caused the independent refiners in East Texas to curtail their production. The evidence discloses that it was a part of the purposes of the independent refiners in the formation of the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association that all the members of that association should comply with all provisions of the law, both State and Federal, and should not manufacture gasoline from illegally produced crude oil and should not produce gasoline in excess of the allocations of the Federal District Allocator.

The evidence wholly fails to show that any quantity of gasoline was ever allotted for purchase to the defendant, Shell Petroleum Corporation, of which this defendant is Vice-President, or to any of the defendants by the defendants McDowell, Tuttle and Bourque and by the witness Jacobi.

of the indictment, wherein it is alleged as follows, "Said purchases have been in excess of the amounts which the aforementioned defendant major oil companies would have purchased apart from their participation in said buying program, and they have been made at uniform, high, arbitrary, and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices, as agreed upon by said defendant major oil companies."

3685 The evidence shows that the defendant major oil companies have only made purchases in order to supply their needs and have not made purchases in excess of the amounts which they would have purchased apart from their participation in the alleged buying program. There is no evidence to the effect that the defendant, Shell Petroleum Corporation, ever made purchases of gasoline in excess of its needs or in excess of such amounts as it would have purchased apart from the alleged buying program in the Mid-Continent area. The evidence further shows that such purchases as were made by various defendants were not made at uniform prices and were not made at high prices, and were not made at arbitrary and non-competitive prices. The evidence further shows that the said purchases were not made at prices agreed upon by the defendant major oil companies. The evidence wholly fails to show any agreement whatsoever by this defendant or said Shell Petroleum Corporation with others or among the defendants as to the prices paid or to be paid for such purchases.

The evidence shows that all purchases made by Shell Petroleum Corporation which were made at a flat price (i. e., a price not determined by published quotations on the date of shipment) were made at prices at or below the low of the published quotations for gasoline of like grade and quality.

3686 (15) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegation contained in paragraph No. 23 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged as follows: "In furtherance of said unlawful purposes, said independent refiners have, at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque, curtailed their production of gasoline".

The evidence shows that such curtailment of the production of gasoline as occurred in the Mid-Continent field was due to refinery allocations made by the District Allocator acting under the Planning and Coordination Committee under the provisions of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry. There is no evidence that independent refiners curtailed their production of gasoline at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque.

3687 gasoline in the Mid-Western area, including the Western Division of Wisconsin"; and there is no evidence in support of the allegation contained in said paragraph No. 24 that said defendants "while representing the price quotations published by them, as aforesaid, to be gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots * * * knowingly published and circulated as such price quotations the wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the defendant major oil companies as aforesaid in the said East Texas buying program and Mid-Continent buying program"; and there is no evidence in support of the allegation contained in said paragraph No. 24 that said defendants engaged and participated in a combination and conspiracy with the other defendants as set forth in said indictment, as said allegations are explained in the answer to the individual demand for a bill of particulars, No. 58 (See R. p. 71, Par. 27), which reads as follows:

> "Paragraph 24 of the indictment sets forth the participation of the market journals in the general combination and conspiracy charged in the indictment, and the Government claims that the allegation of this paragraph that the acts of the journals were done intentionally 'in the combination and conspiracy set forth in this indictment' amounts to saying that they were done in combination with all of the other defendants and conspirators (including Gulf, Bourque and Boggs)."

The evidence wholly fails to show that said defendants ever entered into any agreement with the other defendants in regard to the quotation of prices and wholly 3688 fails to show that said defendants quoted prices paid by major oil companies to independent refiners as prices paid by jobbers.

The participation of the market journals was a necessary and essential element of the conspiracy which the indictment attempts to allege, and the failure to prove such participation of the market journals is a fatal variance and amounts to a failure of proof of the conspiracy or combination alleged.

(17) The evidence fails to show that this defendant did any act whatsoever with any wrongful purpose of criminal intent. All the substantial competent evidence in the record herein is as consistent with the presumption of the innocence of this defendant as it is consistent with his guilt of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(18) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein of facts which exclude every other hypothesis but that of the guilt of this defendant of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(19) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in gasoline among the several states of the United States in violation of Section 1 of the Act 3689 of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, as charged in Paragraph 18 of the indictment.

(20) All competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that the only plan arrangement, concert of action, or program for or relative to the sale and purchase of gasoline in the Mid-Continent field in which this defendant participated or engaged during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of the indictment, was a plan, arrangement, or program to reduce the amount of so-called distress gasoline on the market by securing reliable information as to the amounts of such gasoline which the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment had or would have on hand for sale, and by disseminating such information among the defendant major companies named in said Paragraph 22.

(21) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period, this defendant or the defendant Shell Petroleum Corporation, of which this defendant is Vice-President, engaged or participated in any combination, arrangement, agreement, understanding, concert of action, program whereby, or as the result of which, said de-3690 fendant Shell Petroleum Corporation was or became obligated regularly to purchase any specific amount or any definite share, percentage or allotment of the surplus gasoline available or that would become available for purchase from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or whereby, or as the result of which, said defendant Shell Petroleum Corporation was or became obligated to pay any specific price or any price designated or fixed by any person or persons other than its own officers for such surplus gasoline as it might purchase from said independent refiners, or from any of them.

(22) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that any defendant major oil company performed or did any act within the Western District of Wisconsin pursuant to the alleged combination and conspiracy, if any, as alleged in the indictment herein.

(23) There is a fatal variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence produced by the Government in this, to-wit, that whereas the indictment, as explained by the answer to paragraph No. 1 of the bill of particulars filed by the Shell Petroleum Corporation (See R. p. 66, Par. 10), alleges that there was one general conspiracy which included two concerted buying programs, one in East Texas and the other in the Mid-Continent, the evidence shows that there was no buying program in East 3691 Texas, and that if any buying program existed it referred to the Mid-Continent only.

Mid-Continent Buying Program, as alleged in said paragraph.

(25) There is no evidence that this defendant actively participated in a buying program during the period of time covered by the indictment or that this defendant participated in the purchase of any gasoline in pursuance of such program, if any there was, and there is no evidence that this defendant knew what purchases were being made during said period or participated in or authorized such purchases, and there is no evidence that this defendant knew of any improper motive or purpose, if any there was in regard to purchases made by said Shell Petroleum Corporation.

(26) There is no evidence that this defendant ever received or saw during the period covered by the indictment any of the numerous letters, telegrams, price 3692 reviews and other documents taken from the files of the Shell Petroleum Corporation and offered in evidence, and there is no evidence that this defendant ever took any action or gave any instructions or wrote any answers or acknowledgment of the receipt of any of such documents.

(27) There is no evidence that this defendant ever attended any meetings or held any conference or took any action whatsoever in support of any alleged buying program during the period covered by the indictment.

(28) This defendant cannot be held guilty of crime merely because of the fact that he was Vice-President of Shell Petroleum Corporation, even if the said Shell Petroleum Corporation should be convicted of criminal conduct, because there is no evidence in this record that this defendant, with guilty knowledge, either participated or authorized any conduct by the Shell Petroleum Corporation or any of its subordinate officers or agents contributing to the commission of any such offense.

(29) The evidence herein shows that if this or any of the other defendants herein, participated or engaged in any buying of gasoline as charged in the indictment, that defendants acted with the knowledge and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes, as Petroleum Administrator exercising the powers delegated under and by virtue of the National Industrial Recovery Act, 3693 and with the knowledge and approval of the Petroleum Administrative Board and the individual members thereof, who were duly authorized agents of said Petroleum Administrator. The evidence further shows that if the defendant Shell Petroleum Corporation, or any of the defendants herein, participated or engaged in any buying of gasoline, as charged in the indictment, that defendants acted with the understanding and belief that they had the approval of said Petroleum Administrator and his duly authorized agents and that their participation in such buying was in aid of and in furtherance of the aims, plans and policies of said Petroleum Administrator. Neither this Court nor this jury, therefore, may find that what this defendant and any of the other defendants did under the authorization or with the knowledge and approval of said Petroleum Administrator constituted a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

Wherefore, this defendant respectfully moves the Court to direct the jury to return a verdict of "Not Guilty" as to him.

MOTION TO DISMISS THE INDICTMENT AND FOR A DIRECTED VERDICT.

(Filed 1/17/38.)

Comes now the defendant, Sinclair Refining Company, at the close of all the evidence adduced herein, and moves the Court to dismiss the indictment and the proceedings thereunder, and to direct the jury to find a verdict of "Not Guilty" as to it, and in support thereof specifies the following reasons and grounds:

(1) The said indictment fails to allege that the defendants entered into the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin, or that the defendants, or any of them, performed or did any act pursuant to the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin.

(2) The said indictment discloses on its face that the trial of this defendant thereunder in the Western District of Wisconsin violates the right of this defend-3695 ant under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States to a trial by an impartial jury of the State and District wherein the crime, if any, alleged in the indictment was committed.

(3) The said indictment fails to discribe and to particularize the alleged combination and conspiracy with sufficient definiteness and certainty and so specifically as to enable this defendant to prepare and to make its defense thereto and to plead an acquittal or a conviction thereunder in bar to any other proceedings against it based on the same matters or things, or on any of them, on which the indictment is based.

(5) The said indictment shows on its face that the conspiracy therein alleged did not and could not re-3996 strain interstate trade and commerce in gasoline within the meaning of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 1.)

(6) The said indictment fails to allege facts showing any violation by the defendant of any law of the United States.

(7) All the substantial competent evidence in the record herein is as consistent with the presumption of the innocence of this defendant as it is consistent with its guilt of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(8) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein of facts which exclude every other hypothesis but that of the guilt of this defendant of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(9) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant combined and conspired together with the other defendants named in the indictment, or with any of them, and with certain other persons referred to in the indictment, or with any of them, as charged in Paragraph 18 of the indictment.

(10) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in gasoline among the several States
3697 of the United States in violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, as charged in Paragraph 18 of the indictment.

(11) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period, this defendant engaged and participated in two concerted gasoline buying programs, referred to in Paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the East Texas Buying Program, and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, as alleged in said paragraph, or in either of said buying programs.

(12) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period, this defendant purchased gasoline from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or from any of them, under the supervision and direction of the defendant Arnott and of one Neil Buckley, as alleged in Paragraph 21 of the indictment.

(13) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that one Neil Buckley, acting in a liaison capacity between the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association, which is referred to in Paragraph 3698 20 of the indictment, and the defendant major oil companies, instigated and directed any purchase of gasoline made by this defendant during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of the indictment, from any independent refiner named in said Paragraph 20.

(14) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant from time to time, or at any time during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, arranged with the other defendant major oil companies named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or with any of them, to purchase any part or any amount of the gasoline sold by the independent refiners named in said Paragraph 20, whether sold through the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association, or otherwise.

(15) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant at any time during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, purchased any gasoline from any independent refiner named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, whether sold through the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association, or otherwise, in accordance with or pursuant to any 3699 arrangement between this defendant and the other defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 20, or any of them.

(16) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period, this defendant engaged or participated in any combination, arrangement, agreement, understanding, concert of action or program for or relative to the purchase by the defendant major oil companies named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment of large quantities of gasoline from independent refiners in the East Texas field, as alleged in Paragraphs 19 to 21, inclusive, of the indictment.

(17) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant purchased any gasoline during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, from any independent refiner named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment as the result of or in accordance with any arrangement, agreement or understanding between this defendant and the other defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 20, or any of them.

(18) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant purchased any gasoline during the period beginning in the month of February, 3700 ary, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or from any of them, at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices as agreed upon between this defendant and the other defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 20, or any of them.

(19) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or any of them, at any time during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, curtailed their production of gasoline at the insistence of the defendant Arnott or of one Neil Buckley.

(20) The competent evidence in the record herein affirmatively establishes that at no time during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, was there an East Texas buying program, as alleged in Paragraphs 19 to 21, inclusive, of the indictment.

(21) All the competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that the only plan, arrangement, concert of action, or program relative to spot transactions in gasoline in the East Texas field during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to 3701 the date of the presentation of this indictment, consisted of the organization of the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association by certain of the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, and of the operation and use of that association by said independent refiners to sell the gasoline which they produced and for which they did not have regular established outlets or channels of distribution through service stations or jobbers.

(22) All the competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that the only plan, arrangement, concert of action, or program in effect at any time during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, for or relative to the sale and purchase of gasoline in the East Texas field, was a selling program organized, maintained, and operated solely by the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment on their own initiative and in their own interests.

(23) All the competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that this defendant did not participate in any East Texas program for or relative to the sale and purchase of East Texas gasoline during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, except in so far as this defendant, acting individually and not 3702 in pursuance of or in accordance with any combination, conspiracy, arrangement, agreement, program or concert of action, purchased gasoline in the regular course of its business on spot transactions from independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or from some of them.

(24) All the competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that every purchase of gasoline made by this defendant during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, from any independent refiner named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, was made by this defendant in the free exercise of its own independent discretion as to the party with whom it would deal, as to the amount which it would purchase, and as to the price that it would pay.

(25) Even if it be assumed that there has been a prima facie showing of the existence of a Mid-Continent buying program as described in Paragraphs 22 and 23 of the indictment, there is no substantial competent evidence that this defendant was an original party to said Mid-Continent program or that it thereafter became a party thereto either by express agreement or by performing [illegible] in furtherance of said buying program with knowledge of its existence and with the intent to further its purpose.

(26) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant purchased gasoline
3703 during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or from any of them, at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices as agreed upon between this defendant and the other defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 22, or any of them.

(27) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or any of them, at any time during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, curtailed their production of gasoline at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque.

(28) All competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that the only plan, arrangement, concert of action, or program for or relative to the sale and purchase of gasoline in the Mid-Continent field in which this defendant participated or engaged during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of the indictment, was a plan, arrangement, or program to reduce the amount of so-3704 called distress gasoline on the market by securing reliable information as to the amounts of such gasoline which the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment had or would have on hand for sale, and by disseminating such information among the defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 22.

(29) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period, this defendant engaged or participated in any combination, arrangement, agreement, understanding, concert of action, or program whereby, or as the result of which, this defendant was or became obligated regularly to purchase any specific amount or any definite share, percentage or allotment of the surplus gasoline available or that would become available for purchase from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or, whereby or as the result of which, this defendant was or became obligated to pay any specific price or any price designated or fixed by any person or persons other than its own officers for such surplus gasoline as it might purchase from said independent refiners, or from any of them.

3705 (30) There is no substantial competent evidence that if this defendant conspired to raise and fix and did raise, fix and maintain the spot market prices of gasoline, it thereby intentionally increased and fixed the tank car prices of gasoline contracted to be sold or arbitrarily exacted large sums of money from jobbers in the Mid-Western area or intentionally raised the general level of retail prices in the Mid-Western area, as alleged in Paragraph 18 of the indictment.

(31) All the competent evidence in the record herein establishes that the standard forms of jobber contracts employed by the defendant Sinclair Refining Company in the Standard of Indiana territory did not embody provisions substantially in the form set forth in Paragraph 11 of the indictment, and, more particularly, that the standard forms of jobber contracts employed by said defendant did not provide that the price of gasoline to the jobber should be determined by quotations published in Platt's Oilgram and the Chicago Journal of Commerce, or in either of them.

(32) The variance between the matters alleged in Paragraph 11 of the indictment and the facts proved with respect to the provisions of the standard forms of jobber contracts employed by Sinclair Refining Company is material and prejudicial, since it is such as to preclude 3706 this defendant from pleading an acquittal or a conviction herein in bar to any other proceedings against it based on the same matters or things, or on any of them, which have been established by the evidence herein.

(33) The variance between the matters alleged in Paragraph 11 of the indictment and the facts proved with respect to the provisions of the standard forms of jobber contracts employed by Sinclair Refining Company is material and prejudicial, since it discloses that trial of this defendant in the Western District of Wisconsin violates the right of this defendant under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States to a trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime, if any, proved by the evidence was committed.

(34) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that any defendant major oil company performed or did any act within the Western District of Wisconsin pursuant to the combination and conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment herein.

(35) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that any defendant major oil company performed or did any act within the Western District of Wisconsin pursuant to the combination or conspiracy, if any, to which this defendant was a party, or in which this defendant participated.

3707 (36) There is a variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence adduced by and on behalf of the Government in support thereof, as follows:

The indictment alleges in Paragraph 18 in a single count that the defendants engaged in one general conspiracy to artificially raise and fix the tank car prices of gasoline in the spot markets described in the indictment, and thereby to intentionally increase and fix the tank car prices of gasoline contracted to be sold, and sold, in interstate commerce in the Mid-Western area, and, by reason of the prevailing form of jobber contracts described in the indictment, to exact large sums of money from thousands of jobbers with whom they had such contracts in the Mid-Western area, and in turn to intentionally raise the general level of retail prices prevailing in said Mid-Western area.

The indictment further alleges that the defendants used as the means for accomplishing the purposes of that alleged conspiracy,

First, the two buying programs which are referred to in Paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the East Texas Buying Program and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, and

Second, the participation of the defendant market journals, the Chicago Journal of Commerce, Platt's Oilgram and the National Petroleum News, which are alleged 3708 in Paragraph 24 of the indictment to have been the chief agencies and instrumentalities through which the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the major oil companies affected the prices paid by jobbers, retail dealers and consumers for gasoline in the Mid-Western area, in that said market journals, while representing the price quotations published by them to be gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots, knowingly published and circulated as such price quotations the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the defendant major oil companies in said alleged East Texas Buying Program and Mid-Continent Buying Program.

On the contrary, however, the evidence in the record herein entirely fails to support said allegations with reference to the alleged participation in said alleged conspiracy of said market journals, but instead affirmatively establishes that said market journals, during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, as at all other times, only published in their price quotations the gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots, as represented by them, with the result that the United States moved to dismiss the indictment against said defendant market journals and against the defendant Warren C. Platt, which said motion, against the opposi-
3709 tion of said defendants, was granted by this Court.

The result of such complete failure of proof is that the defendant market journals, an alleged "necessary element" in the alleged scheme of the defendants; the alleged "connecting link between the immediate objective, the raising of the spot market price, and the ultimate objective" of the alleged conspiracy, that is, as alleged, "unjust enrichment for the major oil companies;" the alleged "out standing means, the absolutely necessary means toward getting the conspiracy through" and the alleged "chief agencies and instrumentalities" through which the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline allegedly affected the prices paid by jobbers, retail dealers and consumers for gasoline in the Mid-Western area, and especially within the Western District of Wisconsin, have been proved by the evidence and have been found by order of this Court not to have participated in or to have aided and abetted the other and now the only remaining defendants in carrying out the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, and that the conspiracy, if any, charged in the indictment has not been and cannot be proved.

The variance thus established is material and prejudicial, since it is such as to preclude this defendant from pleading an acquittal or a conviction herein in bar to any 3710 other proceedings against it based on the same matters or things, or on any of them, which have been established by the evidence herein.

(37) All the substantial competent evidence herein establishes that any buying programs in which this defendant participated were authorized by the letter of July 20, 1934, from Administrator Ickes to the defendant Arnott and that this defendant's participation therein was continued after May 27, 1935, if at all, by reason of the inducement and instigation of officials of the United States.

(38) All the substantial competent evidence herein establishes that this defendant reasonably believed that any buying programs in which this defendant participated were authorized by the letter of July 20, 1934, from Administrator Ickes to the defendant Arnott and that this defendant's participation therein was continued after May 27, 1935, if at all, by reason of the inducement and instigation of officials of the United States.

(39) All the substantial competent evidence herein establishes that any buying programs in which this defendant participated were duly authorized by proper officials of the United States, and that this defendant's participation therein was continued after May 27, 1935, if at all, by reason of the inducement and instigation of officials of the United States.

3711 (40) All the substantial competent evidence herein establishes that this defendant reasonably believed that any buying programs in which this defendant participated were duly authorized by proper officials of the United States and that this defendant's participation therein was continued after May 27, 1935, if at all [illegible] reason of the inducement and instigation of officials of [illegible] United States.

(41) All the substantial competent evidence herein establishes that this defendant's participation in any buying programs and its continued support of any such programs after May 27, 1935, were induced and instigated by officials of the United States.

MOTION ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANT, MID-CONTINENT PETROLEUM CORPORATION, TO DISMISS THE INDICTMENT AND FOR A DIRECTED VERDICT.

Comes now the defendant, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Delaware corporation, at the close of all the evidence adduced herein, and moves the Court to dismiss the indictment and the proceedings thereunder, and to direct the jury to return a verdict of "Not Guilty" as to it, on the following grounds and for the following reasons, to-wit:

1. Said indictment fails to allege that the defendants, or any two or more of them, entered into the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin or within the State of Wisconsin; and fails to allege that the defendants, or any of them, performed or did any act pursuant to or in furtherance of the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western Dis-
3713 trict of Wisconsin or within the State of Wisconsin.

2. Said indictment alleges facts which affirmatively show that the trial of this defendant on the charge contained in said indictment within the Western District of Wisconsin violates the rights of this defendant under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which guarantees to this defendant the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the state and district wherein the alleged crime shall have been committed.

3. Said indictment alleges facts which affirmatively show that this Honorable Court does not have any venue or jurisdiction over said defendants, or any of them, or any venue or jurisdiction to try said defendants, or any of them, for the alleged combination and conspiracy, by reason of Section 3, Article III of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that the trial of all crimes shall be held in the State wherein the alleged crime shall have been committed.

4. There is no substantial competent evidence herein which shows, or tends to show, that the alleged combination and conspiracy was entered into within the Western District of Wisconsin or within the State of Wisconsin; or that said defendants, or any of them, performed or did any act pursuant to or in furtherance of the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of 3714 Wisconsin or within the State of Wisconsin.

5. Said indictment does not inform this defendant, or any of said defendants herein, of the nature and cause of the accusation against it, or any of them, with sufficient definiteness and certainty to enable it, or any of them, to prepare and to make a defense thereto, or to plead an acquittal or a conviction thereunder in bar of a subsequent prosecution for the same offense attempted to be charged therein, as required by the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

6. Said indictment fails to allege facts constituting any violation by this defendant, or by any of the defendants herein, of any law of the United States.

7. Said indictment shows on its face that said combination and conspiracy attempted to be charged therein did not and could not restrain interstate trade or commerce in gasoline within the meaning of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (15 U. S. C. A., (1).)

8. Said indictment fails to describe and to particularize the alleged combination and conspiracy and the manner and means by which the same is alleged to have been effectuated with sufficient definiteness and certainty to charge any offense against the United States and to enable this Court, from an inspection of said indictment, to ascer-
3715 tain whether said manner and means alleged in Paragraphs 19 to 24, inclusive, would cause a restraint of interstate trade or commerce within the prohibitions of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (15 U. S. C. A., (1).)

9. That all the substantial competent evidence herein and all the reasonable inferences arising therefrom are wholly insufficient to prove, and do not tend to prove, that this defendant entered into or engaged in the unlawful combination and conspiracy attempted to be charged in the indictment to restrain interstate trade or commerce in gasoline in violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (15 U. S. C. A., (1).)

10. All the substantial competent evidence herein is as consistent with the innocence of this defendant as it is consistent with its guilt of the offense charged in the indictment.

11. There is no substantial competent evidence herein which excludes every other reasonable hypothesis but that of the guilt of this defendant of the offense charged in the indictment.

12. There is no substantial competent evidence herein that this defendant combined and conspired together with the other defendants named in the indictment, or with 3716 any of them, or with any other person, as charged in the indictment.

13. There is no substantial competent evidence herein that this defendant engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy as charged in the indictment, or that said defendant authorized, ordered or performed any act or acts alleged to have been the manner and means of effectuating said combination and conspiracy.

14. There is no substantial competent evidence herein that this defendant, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Delaware corporation, or its subsidiary, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Kentucky corporation, or any other defendant, knowingly and unlawfully engaged and participated in the two concerted buying programs, or either of them, referred to and described in Paragraphs 19 to 24, inclusive, of the indictment, for the purpose of effectuating the said combination and conspiracy as charged; or, if said Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Kentucky corporation, or any other person or defendant, did knowingly and unlawfully engage and participate in said two concerted buying programs, or either of them, for the purpose of effectuating said combination and conspiracy, as charged, there is no substantial competent evidence herein to show, or which tends to show, that any of the acts performed or any of the purchases made by anyone so engaging and participating in the said two concerted 3717 buying programs, or either of them, were performed or made through or under the direction of this defendant.

15. There is no substantial competent evidence herein showing, or tending to show, that any purchase of gasoline was made by the defendant, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Delaware corporation, or by its subsidiary, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Kentucky corporation, from any independent refiner in the East Texas Field or in the Mid-Continent Field, during the period named and as charged in the indictment, or that whatever purchase or purchases of gasoline were made by anyone from independent refiners in the East Texas field or in the Mid-Continent field, as charged in the indictment, that this defendant authorized or directed said purchases, or any of them.

16. There is no substantial competent evidence herein showing, or tending to show, that the defendant, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Delaware corporation, or its subsidiary, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Kentucky corporation, or any other defendant, made "large and increased purchases of gasoline from many of the independent refiners located in the Mid-Continent fields," as charged in the indictment; or, if any such purchases were made by the Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Kentucky corporation, or by any 3718 other person or defendant, there is no substantial competent evidence herein showing or tending to show, that such purchases, or any of them, were made through or under the direction or authority of this defendant.

17. There is no substantial competent evidence herein showing, or tending to show, that any purchase or purchases of gasoline made by said defendant, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Delaware corporation, or by its subsidiary, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Kentucky corporation, or by any other defendant herein, from any of said independent refiners located in the Mid-Continent field, during the period named and as charged in the indictment, were "made at the instigation and under the supervision and direction of defendants Arnott, Ashton, McDowell, Tuttle and Bourque, and one Walter Paul Jacobi, an employee of defendant Wadhams," or either of them; or, if any such large and increased purchases of gasoline were made by the Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Kentucky corporation, or by any other person or defendant, there is no substantial competent evidence herein showing, or tending to show, that such purchases, or any of them, were made through or under the direction or authority of this defendant.

18. There is no substantial competent evidence herein showing or tending to show, that the defendant, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Delaware corporation, or its subsidiary, Mid-Continent Petroleum Cor-3719 poration, a Kentucky corporation, or any other defendant herein, has taken a part of the large quantities of gasoline purchased from the independent refiners located in the Mid-Continent field, during the period named and as charged in the indictment, "as from time to time allotted to it by defendants McDowell and Tuttle and Bourque, and the aforesaid Jacobi;" or, if the Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Kentucky corporation, or any other person or defendant herein, has taken a part of the large quantities of gasoline purchased from said independent refiners as from time to time was so allotted, there is no substantial competent evidence herein showing, or tending to show, that the same was taken from time to time and was so allotted through or under the direction or authority of this defendant.

3720 competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices, as agreed upon by said defendant major oil companies," or any of them; or, if such purchases of gasoline, or any of them, were made in any such excess amounts, or at any such uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices, as alleged in the indictment, there is no substantial competent evidence herein showing, or tending to show, that such purchases, or any of them, were made through or under the direction or authority of this defendant.

20. There is no substantial competent evidence herein showing, or tending to show, that the independent refiners, or any of them, named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, "have, at the instance of defendant Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque, curtailed their production of gasoline," during the period named and as charged in the indictment; or, if the production of gasoline by said independent refiners, or any of them, was curtailed as alleged, there is no substantial competent evidence herein showing, or tending to show, that such curtailment was caused or done through or under the direction of this defendant.

21. There is no substantial competent evidence herein showing, or tending to show, that the defendants, Chicago Journal of Commerce and Keith Fanshier, its petroleum editor, and the defendant Platt's Oilgram, National Petroleum News and Warren C. Platt, their president, or any of them, well knowing all the facts alleged in 3721 the indictment, have intentionally and wrongfully engaged and participated in the combination and conspiracy set forth in said indictment, and have directly and materially aided the other defendants in effectuating the same; or that said named defendants have been the chief agencies and instrumentalities through which the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices of gasoline paid by the major oil companies have affected the prices paid by jobbers, retail dealers and consumers for gasoline in the Mid-Western area, including the Western District of Wisconsin; or that, while representing the price quotations published by them, as aforesaid, to be gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots, and while knowing and intending said prices to be relied on as such by jobbers and to be made the basis of prices to jobbers for gasoline in the prevailing forms of jobber contracts in the Mid-Western area, described in paragraph 11 of the indictment, said named defendant trade journals have throughout said period in the Mid-Western area, including the Western District of Wisconsin, knowingly published and circulated as such price quotations the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the defendant major oil companies, as aforesaid, in the said East Texas Buying Program and Mid-Continent Buying Program; or, if any of said acts were intentionally and knowingly done 3722 or performed by said defendant trade journals, or any of them, as charged, there is no substantial competent evidence herein showing, or tending to show that any of said acts were done or performed through or under the direction or authority of this defendant.

22. There is a material and fatal variance between the allegations of the indictment and all the evidence introduced herein in support thereof, which materially and prejudicially affects the substantial rights of the defendants, and each of them, in this, to-wit:

The Conspiracy

(1) The indictment, in paragraph 18, alleges in a single count that the defendants (a) "have combined and conspired together for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing the tank car prices of gasoline in the aforementioned spot markets;" (b) that "as intended by them, defendants have artificially raised and fixed said spot market tank car prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels and at levels agreed upon among them;" and as a result thereof said defendants (c) "have maintained said prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels and at levels agreed upon among them," and (d) "have thereby intentionally increased and fixed the tank car prices of gasoline contracted to be sold, and sold, 3723 in interstate commerce in the Mid-Western area," and (e) "have arbitrarily, by reason of the prevailing form of jobber contracts above described in Paragraph 11, exacted large sums of money from thousands of jobbers with whom they have had such contracts in said Mid-Western area," and (f) "in turn have intentionally raised the general level of retail prices prevailing in the said Mid-Western area."

But not only does all the substantial competent evidence herein, and all the reasonable and proper inferences to be drawn therefrom, wholly fail to prove that said defendants, or any two or more of them, combined and conspired together to artificially raise and fix such spot market tank car prices of gasoline, or that said defendants did artificially raise and fix said prices, or did maintain said prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels, or at levels agreed upon among the defendants, or that the results of said alleged conspiracy was to increase and fix such prices in interstate commerce, or to exact large sums of money from jobbers, or to raise the general level of retail prices in the Mid-Western area; but all said evidence does affirmatively show that what the Government has alleged to be an unlawful combination and conspiracy of the defendants was nothing more than a plan formulated, adopted and carried out by the Tank Car Stabilization Committee under the Code of Fair Competition 3724 for the Petroleum Industry and the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior and the Petroleum Administrator, to bring about an orderly marketing of distress gasoline produced by independent refiners in the East Texas and in the Mid-Continent fields, at a fair market price, by putting a prospective buyer in touch with an independent refiner and leaving the buyer and seller independent and free to make their own deal as to amounts, specifications, prices and all other terms of sale.

Manner and Means of Effectuating the Conspiracy

(2) The indictment, in paragraph 19 thereof, further alleges that the alleged unlawful combination and conspiracy has been effectuated in the following manner and by the following means, in that the defendants, acting through or under the direction of their respective officers and agents and through defendants Bourque and Boggs, "have knowingly and unlawfully engaged and participated in two concerted gasoline buying programs, hereinafter referred to as" the East Texas Buying Program and the Mid-Continent Buying Program, for the purchase of large quantities of gasoline from independent refiners in spot transactions "in the East Texas and Mid-Continent fields, at uniform, high and at times progressively increased prices." But there is no proof to support these allegations.

East Texas Buying Program

The indictment, in paragraph 20, further alleges 3725 that in the alleged East Texas buying program certain named defendants made purchases of gasoline from independent refiners in the East Texas field who were members of an association known as the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association, and which latter was formed in February, 1935, with the knowledge and approval of some of the defendants.

The indictment, in paragraph 21, further alleges that purchases of gasoline in the East Texas field were made "at the instigation and under the supervision and direction of defendants Arnott and Carnes, with one Neil Buckley, employee of Cities Service Export, acting in a liaison capacity between said Association and the defendant major oil companies;" that such purchases were made "in excess of the amounts which the aforementioned defendant major oil companies would have purchased apart from their participation in said buying program;" that such purchases were "made at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices, as agreed upon by said defendant major oil companies;" and that "said independent refiners have, at the instance of defendant Arnott and the aforesaid Buckley, curtailed their production of gasoline."

But all the substantial competent evidence, and the proper inferences to be drawn therefrom, wholly fail to prove the above material allegations in the indict-3726 ment characterizing the alleged "East Texas Buying Program;" but, on the contrary, said evidence does affirmatively show: That said alleged East Texas Buying Program was not in fact a buying program or pool on the part of the defendants, or any of them, but was in truth and in fact a mere selling program organized and carried out by the independent refiners in the East Texas field, under the name of the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association, for the purpose of selling their distress gasoline at a fair market price, and that in all such sales by said independent refiners the defendant major oil company purchaser bought only the gasoline it needed at the time, and of such quality and at such prices as was agreed upon in free and open negotiation between the buyer and seller; that such purchases in the East Texas field were not in quantities in excess of the amounts the purchasers needed or otherwise would have bought; that such purchases were not "made at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices, as agreed upon by the defendant major oil companies;" that there was no curtailing of the production of gasoline by said independent refiners other than that required by the allocations by the Government under the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry.

Mid-Continent Buying Program.

The indictment, in paragraph 22, further alleges that purchases of gasoline in the Mid-Continent field were 3727 "made at the instigation and under the supervision and direction of defendants Arnott, Ashton, McDowell, Tuttle and Bourque, and one Walter Paul Jacobi, an employee of defendant Wadhams"; that each of certain defendant companies named "have taken a part of the large quantities of gasoline purchased, as aforesaid, as from time to time allotted to it by defendants McDowell and Tuttle and Bourque, and the aforesaid Jacobi"; that "said purchases have been in excess of the amounts which the aforementioned defendant major oil companies would have purchased apart from their participation in said buying program"; that such purchases were "made at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices, as agreed upon by said defendant major oil companies"; and that said independent refiners "have, at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque, curtailed their production of gasoline."

But all the substantial competent evidence herein, and the proper inferences to be drawn therefrom, wholly fail to prove the above material allegations of the indictment characterizing the alleged "Mid-Continent Buying Program"; but, on the contrary, said evidence does affirmatively show that said alleged Mid-Continent Buying Program was not in fact a buying program or pool adopted and carried out by the defendants, as alleged in the indictment, but was merely a plan formulated, recommended and adopted by the Tank Car Stabilization Committee 3728 appointed by C. E. Arnott, Chairman of the Marketing Committee of the Planning and Coordination Committee, and by virtue of his authority contained in the letter of July 20, 1934, from Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior and the Petroleum Administrator; that said plan of said Tank Car Stabilization Committee was merely a cooperative effort on the part of the Petroleum Administrator and the petroleum industry to bring about an orderly marketing of distress gasoline produced by independent refiners in the Mid-Continent field, at a fair price, by putting an independent refiner having distress gasoline for sale in touch with a prospective purchaser thereof, and leaving the buyer and seller independent and free to make their own deal as to amounts, specifications and all other terms of sale; that under said plan all that a defendant major company did was to buy from an independent refiner the distress gasoline which it needed at the time, in such quantities and of such quality and at such prices as was agreed upon in a free and open negotiation between the buyer and the seller; that purchases of gasoline from said independent refiners in the Mid-Continent field, during the period named in the indictment, were not made under the supervision and direction of defendants Arnott, Ashton, McDowell, Tuttle and Bourque, and the aforesaid Walter Paul Jacobi, or either of them; that in making purchases of gasoline from said independent refiners each purchaser acted freely, voluntarily and 3729 independently of all other defendants and persons, and each such purchase was only in the amount which the purchaser needed in its due and regular course of business, and each such purchase was made at or below the fair going market price agreed upon at the time by said purchaser and said seller; and that said independent refiners did not curtail their production of gasoline at the instance of the defendants, Ashton, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque, or any of them.

Participation of Trade Journals.

(3) The indictment, in paragraph 24, further alleges that the defendant market journals, Chicago Journal of Commerce, Platt's Oilgram and National Petroleum News, "intentionally and wrongfully engaged and participated in the combination and conspiracy" set forth in the indictment; that said defendants "have been the chief agencies and instrumentalities through which the wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the major oil companies as aforesaid have affected the prices paid by jobbers, retail dealers and consumers for gasoline in the Mid-Western area", in that said market journals, "while representing the price quotations published by them, as aforesaid, to be gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots, and while knowing and intending them to be relied on as such by jobbers and to be made the basis of prices to jobbers for gasoline in the pre-3730 vailing forms of jobber contracts in the Mid-Western area", have "knowingly published and circulated as such price quotations the wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the defendant major oil companies as aforesaid in the said East Texas buying program and Mid-Continent buying program".

But, contrary to the allegations in the indictment, all the substantial competent evidence herein, and the reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, wholly fail to support any such allegations; but said evidence affirmatively establishes: That said market journals, during the period named in the indictment, did not have any connection with the alleged conspiracy or in the alleged buying programs in the East Texas and Mid-Continent fields; that said market journals were not the chief agencies and instrumentalities by which the alleged conspiracy was carried out; that said defendant trade publications did not represent the prices paid by defendant major oil companies in said alleged buying programs to be gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots; and that said defendant trade publications have not knowingly published and circulated the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices; all with the result that the United States has moved to dismiss the indictment against said defendant market journals and against Warren C. Platt, and which said motion was granted by this Court against the opposition 3731 of said defendants.

Conclusion.

The result of the foregoing is that there is a material and fatal variance between the material allegations of the indictment and the evidence herein which prejudicially affects the rights of this defendant, and requires its motion for a directed verdict herein to be sustained.

23. That if the evidence herein shows, which the defendants deny, that the defendants, or any two or more of them, combined and conspired together for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing the tank car prices of gasoline, as charged in the indictment, and that said alleged combination and conspiracy was effectuated or carried out by means of two concerted gasoline buying programs, to-wit, the East Texas buying program and the Mid-Continent buying program, as defined in the indictment, then all the substantial competent evidence herein affirmatively shows that said defendants, and each of them, were instigated and induced to engage and participate in said combination and conspiracy and in said alleged buying programs by Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior and the Petroleum Administrator, duly appointed by the President of the United States under Section 2(b) of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and other officers and agents of the Government, and by virtue of the provisions of the Code of Fair Competition for the Pe-
3732 troleum Industry duly signed by the President of the United States on August 19, 1933, and the administrative machinery provided for and set up to effectuate said Code, to accomplish and effectuate the policy set forth in the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Wherefore, this defendant, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Delaware corporation, respectfully prays the Court to dismiss the indictment and the proceedings thereunder and to direct the jury to return a verdict of "not guilty" as to it.

J. C. Denton,
Attorney for Defendant, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation.

MOTION ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANT, ROBERT W. McDOWELL, TO DISMISS THE INDICTMENT AND FOR A DIRECTED VERDICT.

(Filed January 17, 1938.)

Comes now the defendant, Robert W. McDowell, at the close of all the evidence adduced herein, and moves the court to dismiss the indictment and the proceedings thereunder, and to direct the jury to return a verdict of "Not Guilty" as to him, on the following grounds and for the following reasons, to-wit:

1. Said indictment fails to allege that the defendants, or any two or more of them, entered into the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin or within the State of Wisconsin; and fails to allege that the defendants, or any of them, performed or did any act pursuant to or in furtherance of the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin or within the State of Wisconsin.

3734 2. Said indictment alleges facts which affirmatively show that the trial of this defendant on the charge contained in said indictment within the Western District of Wisconsin violates the rights of this defendant under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which guarantees to this defendant the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the state and district wherein the alleged crime shall have been committed.

3. Said indictment alleges facts which affirmatively show that this Honorable Court does not have any venue or jurisdiction over said defendants, or any of them, or any venue or jurisdiction to try said defendants, or any of them, for the alleged combination and conspiracy, by reason of Section 3, Article III of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that the trial of all crimes shall be held in the State wherein the alleged crime shall have been committed.

4. There is no substantial competent evidence herein which shows, or tends to show, that the alleged combination and conspiracy was entered into within the Western District of Wisconsin or within the State of Wisconsin; or that said defendants, or any of them, performed or did any act pursuant to or in furtherance of the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin or within the State of Wisconsin.

3735 5. Said indictment does not inform this defendant, or any of said defendants herein, of the nature and cause of the accusation against him, or any of them, with sufficient definiteness and certainty to enable him, or any of them, to prepare and to make a defense thereto, or to plead an acquittal or a conviction thereunder in bar of a subsequent prosecution for the same offense attempted to be charged therein, as required by the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

6. Said indictment fails to allege facts constituting any violation by this defendant, or any of the defendants herein, of any law of the United States.

7. Said indictment shows on its face that said combination and conspiracy attempted to be charged therein did not and could not restrain interstate trade or commerce in gasoline within the meaning of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (15 U. S. C. A., § 1).

8. Said indictment fails to describe and to particularize the alleged combination and conspiracy and the manner and means by which the same is alleged to have been effectuated with sufficient definiteness and certainty to charge any offense against the United States and to enable this Court from an inspection of said indictment, to ascertain whether said manner and means alleged in paragraphs 19 to 24, inclusive, would cause a restraint of interstate 3736 trade or commerce within the prohibitions of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (15 U. S. C. A. § 1).

9. That all the substantial competent evidence herein and all the reasonable inferences arising therefrom are wholly insufficient to prove, and do not tend to prove, that this defendant entered into or engaged in the unlawful combination and conspiracy attempted to be charged in the indictment to restrain interstate trade or commerce in gasoline in violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (15 U. S. C. A. § 1).

10. All the substantial competent evidence herein is as consistent with the innocence of this defendant as it is consistent with his guilt of the offense charged in the indictment.

11. There is no substantial competent evidence herein which excludes every other reasonable hypothesis but that of the guilt of this defendant of the offense charged in the indictment.

12. There is no substantial competent evidence herein that this defendant combined and conspired together with the other defendants named in the indictment, or with any of them, or with any other person, as charged in the indictment.

3737 13. There is no substantial competent evidence herein that this defendant engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy as charged in the indictment, or that said defendant authorized, ordered or performed any act or acts alleged to have been the manner and means of effectuating said combination and conspiracy.

14. There is no substantial competent evidence herein that any defendant knowingly and unlawfully engaged and participated in the two alleged concerted buying programs, or either of them, for the purpose and in the manner described in paragraphs 19 to 24, inclusive, of the indictment, or that any purchase, if any, made by the defendant, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Delaware corporation, or its subsidiary, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Kentucky corporation, through defendant, Robert W. McDowell, as Vice President, was made by either of said corporations in the manner described or for the purpose of ~~effectuating said~~ alleged combination and conspiracy, as charged in said indictment.

15. There is no substantial competent evidence herein showing, or tending to show, that any purchase of gasoline, if any, of the defendant, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Delaware corporation, or of its subsidiary, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Kentucky corporation, from any independent refiner in the East Texas field or in the Mid-Continent field, made through the defendant, 3738 Robert W. McDowell as Vice President of said corporations, or either of them, was made for the purposes and in the manner charged in the indictment.

16. There is no substantial competent evidence herein showing, or tending to show, that the defendant, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Delaware corporation, or its subsidiary, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Kentucky corporation, or either of them, by or through the defendant, Robert W. McDowell, made "large and increased purchases from any of the independent refiners located in the Mid-Continent fields," as charged in the indictment.

17. There is no substantial competent evidence herein showing, or tending to show, that any purchase of gasoline, if any, of the defendant, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Delaware corporation, or of its subsidiary, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Kentucky corporation, from any independent refiner in the Mid-Continent field, made by or through the defendant, Robert W. McDowell, as Vice President of said corporations, or either of them, was made "at the instigation and under the supervision and direction of defendants Arnott, Ashton, McDowell, Tuttle and Bourque, and one Walter Paul Jacobi, an employee of defendant Wadhams", or either of them, as charged in the indictment.

18. There is no substantial competent evidence herein showing, or tending to show, that the defendant, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Delaware corpora-3739 tion, or its subsidiary, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, a Kentucky corporation, or any other defendant herein, has taken a part of the large quantities of gasoline purchased from the independent refiners located in the Mid-Continent field, during the period named as charged in the indictment, "as from time to time allotted to it by defendants, McDowell and Tuttle and Bourque, and the aforesaid Jacobi", as charged in the indictment.

19. There is no substantial competent evidence herein showing or tending to show, that any purchase or purchases of gasoline made by the defendant major oil companies, or any of them, named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or any subsidiary thereof, from independent refiners located in the Mid-Continent fields "have been in excess of the amounts which the aforesaid defendant major oil companies would have purchased apart from their participation in" the alleged Mid-Continent buying program; or that such purchases of gasoline, or any of them, "have been made at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices, as agreed upon by said defendant major oil companies," or any of them, as charged in the indictment.

20. There is no substantial competent evidence herein showing, or tending to show, that the independent refiners, or any of them, named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, "have, at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowduction of gasoline," during the period named and as charged in the indictment.

21. There is no substantial competent evidence herein showing, or tending to show, that the defendants, Chicago Journal of Commerce and Keith Fanshier, its petroleum editor, and defendant Platt's Oilgram, National Petroleum News, and Warren C. Platt, their president, or any of them, well knowing all the facts alleged in the indictment, have intentionally and wrongfully engaged and participated in the combination and conspiracy set forth in the indictment, and have directly and materially aided the other defendants in effectuating the same; or that said named defendants have been the chief agencies and instrumentalities through which the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the major oil companies have affected the prices paid by jobbers, retail dealers and consumers for gasoline in the Mid-Western area, including the Western District of Wisconsin; or that, while representing the price quotations published by them, as aforesaid, to be gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots, and while knowing and intending said prices to be relied on as such by jobbers and to be made the basis of prices to jobbers for gasoline in the prevailing forms of jobber contracts in the Mid-Western area, described in paragraph 11 of the indictment, said named defendant trade journals have, 3741 throughout said period in the Mid-Western area, including the Western District of Wisconsin, knowingly published and circulated as such price quotations the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the defendant major oil companies, as aforesaid, in the said East Texas buying program and Mid-Continent buying program, or, if any of said acts were intentionally and knowingly done or performed by said named trade journals, or any of them, as charged, there is no substantial competent evidence herein showing, or tending to show, that any of said acts were done or performed through or under the direction or authority of this defendant, Robert W. McDowell, or that said defendant had any knowledge thereof at the time.

22. There is a material and a fatal variance between the allegations of the indictment and all the evidence introduced herein in support thereof, which materially and prejudicially affects the substantial rights of the defendants, and each of them, in this, to-wit:

The Conspiracy.

(1) The indictment, in paragraph 18, alleges in a single count that the defendants (a) "have combined and conspired together for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing the tank car prices of gasoline in the aforementioned spot markets"; (b) that "as intended by them, de-
3742 fendants have artificially raised and fixed said spot market tank car prices at artificially high and noncompetitive levels and at levels agreed upon among them"; and as a result thereof said defendants (c) "have maintained said prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels and at levels agreed upon among them," and (d) "have thereby intentionally increased and fixed the tank car prices of gasoline contracted to be sold, and sold, in interstate commerce in the Mid-Western area," and (e) "have arbitrarily, by reason of the prevailing form of jobber contracts above described in Paragraph 11, exacted large sums of money from thousands of jobbers with whom they have had such contracts in said Mid-Western area," and (f) "in turn have intentionally raised the general level of retail prices prevailing in the said Mid-Western area."

But not only does all the substantial competent evidence herein, and all the reasonable and proper inferences to be drawn therefrom, wholly fail to prove that said defendants, or any two or more of them, combined and conspired together to artificially raise and fix such spot market tank car prices of gasoline, or that said defendants did artificially raise and fix said prices, or did maintain said prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels or at levels agreed upon among the defendants, or that the result of said alleged conspiracy was to increase and fix such prices in interstate commerce, or to exact large sums of 3743 money from jobbers, or to raise the general level of retail prices in the Mid-Western area; but all said evidence does affirmatively show that what the Government has alleged to be an unlawful combination and conspiracy of the defendants was nothing more than a plan formulated, adopted and carried out by the Tank Car Stabilization Committee under the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry and the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior and the Petroleum Administrator, to bring about an orderly marketing of distress gasoline produced by independent refiners in the East Texas and in the Mid-Continent fields, at a fair market price, by putting a prospective buyer in touch with an independent refiner and leaving the buyer and seller independent and free to make their own deal as to amounts, specifications, prices and all other terms of sale.

Manner and Means of Effectuating the Conspiracy.

(2) The indictment, in paragraph 19 thereof, further alleges that the alleged unlawful combination and conspiracy has been effectuated in the following manner and by the following means, in that the defendants, acting through or under their respective officers and agents and through defendants Bourque and Boggs, "have knowingly and unlawfully engaged and participated in two concerted gasoline buying programs, hereinafter referred to as" the East Texas buying program and the Mid-Continent buying program, for the purchase of large quantities of gasoline from independent refiners in 3744 spot transactions "in the East Texas and Mid-Continent fields, at uniform, high and at times progressively increased prices". But there is no proof to support these allegations.

East Texas Buying Program.

The indictment, in paragraph 20, further alleges that in the alleged East Texas buying program certain named defendants made purchases of gasoline from independent refiners in the East Texas field who were members of an association known as the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association, and which latter was formed in February, 1935, with the knowledge and approval of some of the defendants.

The indictment, in paragraph 21, further alleges that purchases of gasoline in the East Texas field were made "at the instigation and under the supervision and direction of defendants Arnott and Carnes, with one Neil Buckley, employee of Cities Service Export, acting in a liaison capacity between said Association and the defendant major oil companies"; that such purchases were made "in excess of the amounts which the aforementioned defendant major oil companies would have purchased apart from their participation in said buying program"; that such purchases were "made at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices, as agreed upon by said defendant major oil companies"; and that "said independent refiners have, at the instance of defendant Arnott and the aforesaid Buckley, curtailed their production of gasoline". 3745

But all the substantial competent evidence, and all the proper inferences to be drawn therefrom, wholly fail to prove the above material allegations in the indictment characterizing the alleged "East Texas Buying Program"; but, on the contrary, said evidence does affirmatively show: That said alleged East Texas buying program was not in fact a buying program or pool on the part of the defendants, or any of them, but was in truth and in fact a mere selling program organized and carried out by the independent refiners in the East Texas field, under the name of the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association, for the purpose of selling their distress gasoline at a fair market price, and that in all such sales by said independent refiners the defendant major oil company purchaser bought only the gasoline it needed at the time, and of such quality and at such prices as was agreed upon in free and open negotiation between the buyer and seller; that such purchases in the East Texas field were not in quantities in excess of the amounts the purchaser needed or otherwise would have bought; that such purchases were not "made at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices, as agreed upon by the defendant major oil companies"; and that there was no curtailing of the production of gasoline by said independent refiners other than that required by the allocations by the Government under the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry.

3746 Mid-Continent Buying Program.

The indictment, in paragraph 22, further alleges that purchases of gasoline in the Mid-Continent field were "made at the instigation and under the supervision and direction of defendants Arnott, Ashton, McDowell, Tuttle and Bourque, and one Walter Paul Jacobi, an employee of defendant Wadhams"; that each of certain defendant companies named "have taken a part of the large quantities of gasoline purchased, as aforesaid, as from time to time allotted to it by defendants McDowell and Tuttle and Bourque, and the aforesaid Jacobi"; that "said purchases have been in excess of the amounts which the aforementioned defendant major oil companies would have purchased apart from their participation in said buying program"; that such purchases were "made at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices, as agreed upon by said defendant major oil companies"; and that said independent refiners "have, at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque, curtailed their production of gasoline".

But all the substantial competent evidence herein, and the proper inferences to be drawn therefrom, wholly fail to prove the above material allegations of the indictment characterizing the alleged "Mid-Continent Buying Program"; but, on the contrary, said evidence does affirmatively show that said alleged Mid-Continent Buying 3747 Program was not in fact a buying program or pool adopted and carried out by the defendants, as alleged in the indictment, but was merely a plan formulated, recommended and adopted by the Tank Car Stabilization Committee appointed by C. E. Arnott, Chairman of the Marketing Committee of the Planning and Coordination Committee, and by virtue of his authority contained in the letter of July 20, 1934, from Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior and the Petroleum Administrator; that said plan of said Tank Car Stabilization Committee was merely a cooperative effort on the part of the Petroleum Administrator and the petroleum industry to bring about an orderly marketing of distress gasoline produced by independent refiners in the Mid-Continent field, at a fair price, by putting an independent refiner having distress gasoline for sale in touch with a prospective purchaser thereof, and leaving the buyer and seller independent and free to make their own deal as to amounts, specifications and all other terms of sale; that under said plan all that a defendant major oil company did was to buy from an independent refiner the distress gasoline which it needed at the time, in such quantities and of such quality and at such prices as was agreed upon in a free and open negotiation between the buyer and the seller; that purchases of gasoline from said independent refiners in the Mid-Continent field, during the period named in the indictment, were not made under the supervision and direction of defendants 3748 Arnott, Ashton, McDowell, Tuttle and Bourque, and the aforesaid Walter Paul Jacobi, or either of them; that in making purchases of gasoline from said independent refiners each purchaser acted freely, voluntarily and independently of all other defendants and persons, and each such purchase was only in the amount which the purchaser needed in its due and regular course of business, and each such purchase was made at or below the fair going market price agreed upon at the time by said purchaser and said seller; and that said independent refiners did not curtail their production of gasoline at the instance of the defendants Ashton, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque, or any of them.

Participation of Trade Journals.

(3) The indictment, in paragraph 24, further alleges that the defendant market journals, Chicago Journal of Commerce, Platt's Oilgram and National Petroleum News, "intentionally and wrongfully engaged and participated in the combination and conspiracy" set forth in the indictment; that said defendants "have been the chief agencies and instrumentalities through which the wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the major oil companies as aforesaid have affected the prices paid by jobbers, retail dealers and consumers for gasoline in the Mid-Western area", in that said market journals, "while representing the price quotations published by them, as aforesaid, to be gasoline prices 3749 prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots, and while knowing and intending them to be relied on as such by jobbers and to be made the basis of prices to jobbers for gasoline in the prevailing forms of jobber contracts in the Mid-Western area", have "knowingly published and circulated as such price quotations the wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the defendant major oil companies as aforesaid in the said East Texas buying program and Mid-Continent buying program".

But, contrary to the allegations in the indictment, all the substantial competent evidence herein, and the reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, wholly fail to support any such allegations; but said evidence affirmatively establishes: That said market journals, during the period named in the indictment, did not have any connection with the alleged conspiracy or the alleged buying programs in the East Texas and Mid-Continent fields; that said market journals were not the chief agencies and instrumentalities by which the alleged conspiracy was carried out: that said defendant trade publications did not represent the prices paid by defendant major oil companies in said alleged buying programs to be gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots; and that said defendant trade publications have not knowingly published and circulated the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices: all with the result that the United States has moved to dismiss 3750 the indictment against said defendant market journals and against Warren C. Platt, and which said motion was granted by this Court against the opposition of said defendants.

Conclusion.

The result of the foregoing is that there is a material and fatal variance between the material allegations of the indictment and the evidence herein which prejudicially affects the rights of this defendant, and requires its motion for a directed verdict herein to be sustained.

23. That if the evidence herein shows, which the defendants deny, that the defendants, or any two or more of them, combined and conspired together for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing the tank car prices of gasoline, as charged in the indictment, and that said alleged combination and conspiracy was effectuated or carried out by means of two concerted gasoline buying programs, to-wit, the East Texas buying program and the Mid-Continent buying program, as defined in the indictment, then all the substantial competent evidence herein affirmatively shows that said defendants, and each of them, were instigated and induced to engage and participate in said combination and conspiracy and in said alleged buying programs by Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior and the Petroleum Administrator, duly appointed by the President of the United States under Section 2 (b) of the National Industrial Recov-3751 ery Act, and other officers and agents of the Government, and by virtue of the provisions of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry duly signed by the President of the United States on August 19, 1933, and the administrative machinery provided for and set up to effectuate said Code, to accomplish and effectuate the policy set forth in the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Wherefore, this defendant, Robert W. McDowell, respectfully prays the court to dismiss the indictment and the proceedings thereunder and to direct the jury to return a verdict of "not guilty" as to him.

MOTION TO DISMISS THE INDICTMENT AND FOR A DIRECTED VERDICT.

(Filed 1/17/38.)

Comes now the defendant, Phillips Petroleum Company, at the close of all the evidence adduced herein by and on behalf of the Government and by and on behalf of the defendants, and moves the Court to dismiss the indictment and the proceedings thereunder, and to direct the jury to find a verdict of "Not Guilty" as to it, and in support thereof specifies the following reasons and grounds:

(1) The said indictment fails to allege that the defendants entered into the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin, or that the defendants, or any of them, performed or did any act pursuant to the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin.

(2) The said indictment discloses on its face that the trial of this defendant thereunder in the Western District of Wisconsin violates the right of this defendant 3753 under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States to a trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime, if any, alleged in the indictment was committed.

(3) The said indictment fails to describe and to particularize the alleged combination and conspiracy with sufficient definiteness and certainty and so specifically as to enable this defendant to prepare and to make its defense thereto and to plead an acquittal or a conviction thereunder in bar to any other proceedings against it based on the same matters or things, or on any of them, on which the indictment is based.

(5) The said indictment shows on its face that the conspiracy therein alleged did not and could not 3754 restrain interstate trade and commerce in gasoline
within the meaning of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 1.)

(6) The said indictment fails to allege facts showing any violation by the defendant of any law of the United States.

(7) All the substantial competent evidence in the record herein is as consistent with the presumption of the innocence of this defendant as it is consistent with its guilt of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(8) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein of facts which exclude every other hypothesis but that of the guilt of this defendant of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(9) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant combined and conspired together with the other defendants named in the indictment, or with any of them, and with certain other persons referred to in the indictment, or with any of them, as charged in paragraph 18 of the indictment.

(10) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant engaged in an 3755 unlawful combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in gasoline among the several States of the United States in violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, as charged in Paragraph 18 of the indictment.

(11) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period, this defendant engaged and participated in two concerted gasoline buying programs, referred to in Paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the East Texas Buying Program, and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, as alleged in said paragraph.

(12) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant purchased gasoline during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or from any of them, at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices as agreed upon between this defendant and the other defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 22, or any of them.

3756 (13) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or any of them, at any time during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, curtailed their production of gasoline at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque.

(14) All competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that the only plan, arrangement, concert of action, or program for or relative to the sale and purchase of gasoline in the Mid-Continent field in which this defendant participated or engaged during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of the indictment, was a plan, arrangement, or program to reduce the amount of so-called distress gasoline on the market by securing reliable information as to the amounts of such gasoline which the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment had or would have on hand for sale, and by disseminating such information among the defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 22.

3757 (15) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period, this defendant engaged or participated in any combination, arrangement, agreement, understanding, concert of action, or program whereby, or as the result of which, this defendant was or became obligated regularly to purchase any specific amount or any definite share, percentage or allotment of the surplus gasoline available or that would become available for purchase from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or, whereby, or as the result of which, this defendant was or became obligated to pay any specific price or any price designated or fixed by any person or persons other than its own officers for such surplus gasoline as it might purchase from said independent refiners, or from any of them.

(16) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that any defendant major oil company performed or did any act within the Western District of Wisconsin pursuant to the combination and conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment herein.

(17) There is a fatal, material and prejudicial variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence adduced by and on behalf of the Government 3758 in support thereof, in that the indictment alleges in a single count that the defendants engaged in one general conspiracy to artificially raise and fix the prices of gasoline, and that they used as the means for accomplishing the purposes of that single conspiracy the two buying programs which are referred to in Paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the East Texas Buying Program and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, some of the defendant major oil companies allegedly purchasing gasoline in the East Texas field, some of them allegedly purchasing gasoline in the Mid-Continent field, and only three of them allegedly purchasing in both fields, whereas the competent evidence in the record herein, on the assumption that it tends to prove any violation or violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, only tends to prove that the defendants named in Paragraphs 20 and 21 of the indictment engaged in a buying program in the East Texas field and that the defendants named in Paragraphs 22 and 23 of the indictment engaged in another and entirely separate, distinct and different buying program in the Mid-Continent field.

(18) There is a fatal, material and prejudicial variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence adduced by and on behalf of the Government in support thereof, as follows: The indictment alleges in Paragraph 18 in a single count that the defendants engaged in 3759 one general conspiracy to artificially raise and fix the tank car prices of gasoline in the spot markets described in the indictment, and thereby to intentionally increase and fix the tank car prices of gasoline contracted to be sold, and sold, in interstate commerce in the mid-western area, and, by reason of the prevailing form of jobber contracts described in the indictment, to exact large sums of money from thousands of jobbers with whom they had such contracts in the mid-western area, and in turn to intentionally raise the general level of retail prices prevailing in said mid-western area.

The indictment further alleges that the defendants used as the means for accomplishing the purposes of that alleged conspiracy,

First, the two buying programs which are referred to in Paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the East Texas Buying Program and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, and

Second, the participation of the defendant market journals, the Chicago Journal of Commerce, Platt's Oilgram and the National Petroleum News, which are alleged in Paragraph 24 of the indictment to have been the chief agencies and instrumentalities through which the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the major oil companies affected the 3760 prices paid by jobbers, retail dealers and consumers for gasoline in the mid-western area, in that said market journals, while representing the price quotations published by them to be gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots, knowingly published and circulated as such price quotations the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the defendant major oil companies in said alleged East Texas Buying Program and Mid-Continent Buying Program.

On the contrary, however, the evidence in the record herein entirely fails to support said allegations with reference to the alleged participation in said alleged conspiracy of said market journals, but instead affirmatively establishes that said market journals, during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, as to all other times, only published in their price quotations the gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots, as represented by them, with the result that the United States moved to dismiss the indictment against said defendant market journals and against the defendant Warren C. Platt, which said motion, against the opposition of said defendants, was granted by this court.

3761 The result of such complete failure of proof is that the defendant market journals, an alleged "necessary element" in the alleged scheme of the defendants; the alleged "connecting link between the immediate objective, the raising of the spot market price, and the ultimate objective" of the alleged conspiracy, that is, as alleged, "unjust enrichment for the major oil companies;" the alleged "outstanding means, the absolutely necessary means toward getting the conspiracy through" and the alleged "chief agencies and instrumentalities" through which the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline allegedly affected the prices paid by jobbers, retail dealers and consumers for gasoline in the mid-western area, and especially within the Western District of Wisconsin, have been proved by the evidence and have been found by order of this court not to have participated in or to have aided and abetted the other and now the only remaining defendants in carrying out the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, and that the conspiracy, if any, charged in the indictment has not been and cannot be proved.

(19) The evidence in this case does not establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants or that any of them can be held to have violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act by participating and engaging in any buying 3762 program or programs as alleged in the indictment for the following reasons:

The evidence introduced on behalf of the defendants establishes or tends to establish that the defendant Arnott was appointed Chief Stabilizer of the Petroleum Industry by a letter dated July 20, 1934, from the Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes, as Administrator of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry. The defendant Arnott carried on stabilization activities under the authority or the supposed authority of that letter until the termination of all code activities on May 27, 1935.

When the defendant Arnott on January 4, 1935, appointed the Tank Car Stabilization Committee and instructed that Committee to take steps to relieve the condition of the independent refiners, he reasonably believed that he was authorized so to do by said letter of July 20, 1934, and he reasonably believed that in so doing he had the approval of the Petroleum Administrator and was acting to carry out his plans and policies. The defendant Arnott so told the defendants who were members of said Tank Car Stabilization Committee and said defendants reasonably believed and acted on those statements, and not otherwise, in carrying on the activities of that committee.

In all his connections with the buying of surplus gasoline in the Mid-Continent and in the East Texas fields, 3763 the defendant Arnott believed that he was acting under the authority of the letter of July 20, 1934, that he had the approval of the Petroleum Administrator and of his assistants and that he was acting in conformity with and for the purpose of effectuating the plans and policies of the Petroleum Administration. The defendant Arnott so advised each individual defendant who had any connection with such buying activities and each of said defendants reasonably believed said statements and for that reason, and not otherwise, participated in the so-called East Texas and Mid-Continent buying programs to the extent each is shown by the evidence in this case to have participated.

The Petroleum Administrator, through the Petroleum Administrative Board and through members of that Board, and otherwise, was advised of the activities of the defendant Arnott and of the so-called East Texas and Mid-Continent buying programs and at least tacitly approved and encouraged the defendants in carrying on these so-called buying programs as a part of stabilization and as a means of assisting in the accomplishment of the ends and the objectives of the Petroleum Administration. If the Petroleum Administrator either directly or through the Petroleum Administrative Board or through the Planning and Coordination Committee of the Petroleum Industry had requested that said buying activities be terminated, 3764 the same would have been terminated. No such request, however, ever was made nor was any criticism of those activities ever offered.

The Government of the United States consists of many departments and bureaus and agencies. The Department of Justice and the Department of the Interior are equal and coordinate branches of the Government of the United States. Neither this court nor this jury, therefore, may find that what these defendants did under the authorization and at the request and with the knowledge and approval of the Government of the United States as represented during the period of the National Industrial Recovery Act and of the Petroleum Code by the Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes, as the Petroleum Administrator exercising the powers delegated to the President of the United States by said Act, whether such authorization was expressed or shown directly or through the Petroleum Administrative Board as the Administrative Agency of the Petroleum Code, constituted a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

MOTION OF SKELLY OIL COMPANY TO DISMISS THE INDICTMENT AND FOR A DIRECTED VERDICT.

(Filed November 15, 1937.)

Comes now the defendant, Skelly Oil Company, at the close of all the evidence adduced herein by and on behalf of both the Government and the defendants, and moves the Court to dismiss the indictment and the proceedings thereunder and to direct the jury to find a verdict of "not guilty" as to said defendant company, and in support thereof specifies the following reasons and grounds:

(1) The said indictment fails to allege that the defendants entered into the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin, or that the defendants, or any of them, performed or did any act pursuant to the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin.

(2) The said indictment discloses on its face that the trial of this defendant thereunder in the Western District of Wisconsin violates the right of this defendant under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United 3766 States to a trial by an impartial jury of the State and District wherein the crime, if any, alleged in the indictment was committed.

(5) The said indictment shows on its face that the conspiracy therein alleged did not and could not restrain interstate trade and commerce in gasoline within the meaning of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890,
3767 known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (15 U. S. C. A. § 1.)

(6) The said indictment fails to allege facts showing any violation by the defendant of any law of the United States.

(7) All the substantial competent evidence in the record herein is as consistent with the presumption of the innocence of this defendant as it is consistent with its guilt of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(8) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein of facts which exclude every other hypothesis but that of the guilt of this defendant of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(9) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant combined and conspired together with the other defendants named in the indictment, or with any of them, and with certain other persons referred to in the indictment, or with any of them, as charged in Paragraph 18 of the indictment.

(10) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in gasoline among the several States of the United States in violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, as charged in Paragraph 18 of the indictment.

3768 (11) There is a fatal, material and prejudicial variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence adduced by and on behalf of the Government in support thereof, in that the indictment alleges in a single count that the defendants engaged in one general conspiracy to artificially raise and fix the prices of gasoline, and that they used as the means for accomplishing the purposes of that single conspiracy the two buying programs which are referred to in Paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the East Texas Buying Program and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, some of the defendant major oil companies allegedly purchasing gasoline in the East Texas field, some of them allegedly purchasing gasoline in the Mid-Continent field, and only three of them allegedly purchasing in both fields, whereas the competent evidence in the record herein, on the assumption that it tends to prove any violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, only tends to prove that the defendants named in Paragraphs 20 and 21 of the indictment engaged in a buying program in the East Texas field and that the defendants named in paragraphs 22 and 23 of the indictment engaged in another and entirely separate, distinct and different buying program in the Mid-Continent field.

(12) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period, this defendant engaged and participated in 3769 two concerted gasoline buying programs, referred to in Paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the East Texas Buying Program, and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, as alleged in said indictment.

(13) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period, this defendant purchased gasoline from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or from any of them, under the supervision and direction of the defendants Arnott and Carnes, and of one Neil Buckley, as alleged in Paragraph 21 of the indictment.

(14) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that one Neil Buckley, acting in a liaison capacity between the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association, which is referred to in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, and the defendant major oil companies, instigated and directed any purchase of gasoline made by this defendant during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of the indictment, from any independent refiner named in said Paragraph 20.

(15) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant from time to time, or at any time during the period beginning in the month of 3770 February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, arranged with the other defendant major oil companies named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or with any of them, to purchase any part or any amount of the gasoline sold by the independent refiners named in said Paragraph 20, whether sold through the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association, or otherwise.

(16) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant at any time during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, purchased any gasoline from any independent refiner named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, whether sold through the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association, or otherwise, in accordance with or pursuant to any arrangement between this defendant and the other defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 20, or any of them.

(17) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period, this defendant engaged or participated in any combination, arrangement, agreement, understanding, concert of action or program for or relative to the purchase by the defendant major oil companies named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment of large quantities of gasoline from 3771 independent refiners in the East Texas field, as alleged in Paragraphs 19 to 21, inclusive, of the indictment.

(18) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant purchased any gasoline during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, from any independent refiner named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment as the result of or in accordance with any arrangement, agreement or understanding between this defendant and the other defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 20, or any of them.

(19) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant purchased any gasoline during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or from any of them, at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices as agreed upon between this defendant and the other defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 20, or any of them.

(20) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or any of them, at any 3772 time during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, curtailed their production of gasoline at the insistence of the defendant Arnott or of one Neil Buckley.

(21) The competent evidence in the record herein affirmatively establishes that at no time during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, was there an East Texas buying program, as alleged in Paragraphs 19 to 21, inclusive, of the indictment.

(22) All the competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that the only plan, arrangement, concert of action, or program relative to spot transactions in gasoline in the East Texas field during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, consisted of the organization of the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association by certain of the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, and of the operation and use of that association by said independent refiners to sell the gasoline which they produced and for which they did not have regular established outlets or channels of distribution through service stations or jobbers.

(23) All the competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that the only plan, arrangement, 3773 concert of action, or program in effect at any time during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, for or relative to the sale and purchase of gasoline in the East Texas field, was a selling program organized, maintained, and operated solely by the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment on their own initiative and in their own interests.

(24) All the competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that this defendant did not participate in any East Texas program for or relative to the sale and purchase of East Texas gasoline during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, except insofar as this defendant, acting individually and not in pursuance of or in accordance with any combination, conspiracy, arrangement, agreement, program or concert of action, purchased gasoline in the regular course of its business on spot transactions from independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or from some of them.

(25) All the competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that every purchase of gasoline made by this defendant during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, from any independent re-3774 finer named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, was made by this defendant in the free exercise of its own independent discretion as to the party with whom it would deal, as to the amount which it would purchase, and as to the price that it would pay.

(26) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant purchased gasoline during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or from any of them, at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices as agreed upon between this defendant and the other defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 22, or any of them.

(27) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that the independent refiners named in Paragraph 20 of the indictment, or any of them, at any time during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment curtailed their production of gasoline at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque.

(28) All competent evidence in the record herein tends to establish that the only plan, arrangement, concert of 3775 action, or program for or relative to the sale and purchase of gasoline in the Mid-Continent field in which this defendant participated or engaged during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of the indictment, was a plan, arrangement, or program to reduce the amount of so-called distress gasoline on the market by securing reliable information as to the amounts of such gasoline which the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment had or would have on hand for sale, and by disseminating such information among the defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 22.

(29) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period, this defendant engaged or participated in any combination, arrangement, agreement, understanding, concert of action, or program whereby, or as the result of which, this defendant was or became obligated regularly to purchase any specific amount or any definite share, percentage or allotment of the surplus gasoline available or that would become available for purchase from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or, whereby, or as the result of which, this defendant was or became obligated to pay any specific price or any 3776 price designated or fixed by any person or persons other than its own officers for such surplus gasoline as it might purchase from said independent refiners, or from any of them.

(30) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that any defendant major oil company performed or did any act within the Western District of Wisconsin pursuant to the combination and conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment herein.

(31) There is a fatal, material and prejudicial variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence adduced by and on behalf of the Government in support thereof, as follows:

The indictment alleges in Paragraph 18 in a single count that the defendants engaged in one general conspiracy to artificially raise and fix the tank car prices of gasoline in the spot markets described in the indictment, and thereby to intentionally increase and fix the tank car prices of gasoline contracted to be sold, and sold, in interstate commerce in the mid-western area, and, by reason of the prevailing form of jobber contracts described in the indictment, to exact large sums of money from thousands of jobbers with whom they had such contracts in the mid-western area, and in turn to intentionally raise the general level of retail prices prevailing in said mid-western area.

3777 The indictment further alleges that the defendants used as the means for accomplishing the purposes of that alleged conspiracy,

First, the two buying programs which are referred to in paragraph nineteen of the indictment as (a) the East Texas Buying Program and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, and

Second, the participation of the defendant market journals, the Chicago Journal of Commerce, Platt's Oilgram and the National Petroleum News, which are alleged in paragraph 24 of the indictment to have been the chief agencies and instrumentalities through which the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the major oil companies affected the prices for gasoline paid by jobbers, retail dealers and consumers for gasoline in the mid-western area, in that said market journals, while representing the price quotations published by them to be gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots, knowingly published and circulated as such price quotations the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the defendant major oil companies in said alleged East Texas Buying Program and Mid-Continent Buying Program.

On the contrary, however, the evidence in the record herein entirely fails to support said allegations with reference to the alleged participation in said alleged conspiracy of said market journals, but instead affirmatively establishes that said market journals, during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, as at all other times, only published in their price quotations the gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots, as represented by them, with the result that the United States moved to dismiss the indictment against 3778 said defendant market journals and against the defendant Warren C. Platt, which said motion, against the opposition of said defendants, was granted by this Court.

The result of such complete failure of proof is that an alleged "necessary element" in the alleged scheme of the defendants; the alleged "connecting link between the immediate objective, the raising of the spot market price, and the ultimate objective" of the alleged conspiracy, that is, as alleged, "unjust enrichment for the major oil companies;" the alleged "outstanding means, the absolutely necessary means toward getting the conspiracy through" and the alleged "chief agencies and instrumentalities" through which the alleged wrongful and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline allegedly affected the prices paid by jobbers, retail dealers and consumers for gasoline in the mid-western area, and especially within the Western 3779 District of Wisconsin, have been proved and by order of this court have been found not to have participated in or to have aided and abetted the other and now the only remaining defendants in carrying out the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment, and that the conspiracy, if any, charged in the indictment has not been and cannot be proved.

(32) It is satisfactorily shown by the evidence that the buying of gasoline which was conducted by the defendant major companies was at least orally sanctioned by the Government, by and through the President and/or agents duly appointed by him under the so-called Recovery Act of 1933, or, in any event, that the defendants honestly believed it was so sanctioned and desired by the President, so that there cannot be and is not present in this case any criminal intent whether or not the theory of counsel for the Government that the plan was a price fixing one is sufficiently supported by evidence otherwise to make an issue of fact thereon one for the jury, or whether or not upon any other theory the evidence is sufficient otherwise to raise an issue of fact for the jury.

(33) It satisfactorily appears from the evidence that the defendant major companies who participated in the purchase of gasoline from independent refiners and those officers and agents of said companies who acted on behalf of said companies in so doing, were engaged in an 3780 effort in good faith to carry out the purposes and policies of the Government with respect to the petroleum industry as defined and set forth in the Petroleum Code and particularly to stabilize the wholesale markets for gasoline in the Mid-Western area and to attain a proper parity between the tank car price of gasoline sold on the spot market and the established price of crude oil, so that without regard to the particular terms or details of the plan whereby the defendant major companies purchased gasoline from independent refiners, their activities in that connection could in no event constitute a violation of the criminal provisions of the Sherman Act; or, in any event, it cannot be said that their acts and conduct, even when viewed favorably to the prosecution, constituted any such violation; and with respect to what the defendant major companies may have done, as shown by the evidence, subsequent to May 27, 1935, after the expiration of the Petroleum Code, it satisfactorily appears from the evidence that it was the desire of the President, or, in any event, that it was in good faith believed by the active agents of said companies that it was the desire of the President, that stabilization movements which had been conducted by members of the petroleum industry prior to said date should be carried on with a view to maintaining positions of stability which had been previously attained; or, in view of the Administrative desires in that respect, it cannot 3781 be said that the acts and conduct of the defendant major companies following said date relating to purchases of gasoline from independent refiners, do constitute a violation of the Sherman Act, as alleged in the indictment. The evidence tends so strongly to show that the defendants who consciously participated in any such buying, either before or after May 27, 1935, did so in an honest belief that they were doing things which the President of the United States and others connected with the Executive Department of the Government desired be done, that it cannot be said that the evidence shows any violation of the Sherman Act.

MOTION FOR A DIRECTED VERDICT.

(Filed January 17, 1938)

Now come the defendants, The Globe Oil & Refining Company (Oklahoma), The Globe Oil & Refining Company (Kansas), The Globe Oil & Refining Company (Illinois), corporations, at the close of all the evidence, and move the Court to give the jury the following instructions:

> "The Court instructs the jury to find the defendants,
>
> The Globe Oil & Refining Company (Oklahoma),
> The Globe Oil & Refining Company (Kansas),
> The Globe Oil & Refining Company (Illinois), not guilty."

Without limiting in any way the general effect of this motion, these defendants specify as particular reasons, among others, why such motion should be granted the following:

(1) All the substantial competent evidence adduced is just as consistent with a reasonable hypothesis of in-3783 nocence as with any hypothesis of guilt with respect to the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(2) No substantial competent evidence has been adduced which excludes every reasonable hypothesis except that of the guilt of these defendants with respect to the offense charged, if any, in the indictment.

(3) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that these defendants combined and conspired together with the other defendants named in the indictment, or with any of them, and with certain other persons referred to in the indictment, or with any of them, as charged in Paragraph 18 of the indictment.

(4) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that these defendants engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in gasoline among the several States of the United States in violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, as charged in Paragraph 18 of the indictment.

(5) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period, these defendants engaged and participtaed in two concerted gasoline buying programs, referred to in Paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the East Texas 3784 Buying Program, and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, as alleged in said paragraph.

(6) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that these defendants purchased gasoline during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or from any of them, at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices, and from time to time at progressively increased prices as agreed upon between these defendants and the other defendant major oil companies named in said Paragraph 22, or any of them.

(7) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or any of them, at any time during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, curtailed their production of gasoline at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque, as alleged in Paragraph 23 of the indictment herein.

(8) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period, these defendants engaged or participated in any combination, arrangement, agreement, understanding, 3785 concert of action, or program whereby, or as the result of which, these defendants were or became obligated to or did regularly purchase any specific amount or any definite share, percentage or allotment of the surplus gasoline available or that would become available for purchase from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment, or, whereby, or as the result of which, these defendants were or became obligated to or did pay any specific price or any price designated or fixed by any person or persons other than its own officers for such surplus gasoline as it might purchase from said independent refiners, or from any of them.

(9) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that any defendant performed or did any act within the Western District of Wisconsin pursuant to the combination and conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment herein.

(10) There is a fatal, material and prejudicial variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence adduced by and on behalf of the Government in support thereof, in that the indictment alleges in a single count that the defendants engaged in one general conspiracy artificially to raise and fix the prices of gasoline, and that they used as the means for accomplishing the purposes of that single conspiracy the two buying programs which are referred to in Paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the 3786 East Texas Buying Program and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, some of the defendant companies allegedly purchasing gasoline in the East Texas field, some of them allegedly purchasing gasoline in the Mid-Continent field, and only three of them allegedly purchasing in both fields; whereas the competent evidence in the record herein, on the assumption that it tends to prove any violation or violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (which is denied), only tends to prove (at most) that the defendants named in Paragraphs 20 and 21 of the indictment engaged in a buying program in the East Texas field and that the defendants named in Paragraphs 22 and 23 of the indictment engaged in another and entirely separate, distinct and different buying program in the Mid-Continent field.

(11) There is a fatal, material and prejudicial variance between the allegations of the indictment and the evidence adduced by and on behalf of the Government in support thereof, as follows:

The indictment alleges in paragraph 18 in a single count that the defendants engaged in one general conspiracy artificially to raise and fix the tank car prices of gasoline in the spot markets described in the indictment, and thereby intentionally to increase and fix the tank car prices of gasoline contracted to be sold, and sold, in interstate commerce in the Mid-western area, and, by reason of the prevailing form of jobber contracts described in the indict-3787 ment, to exact large sums of money from thousands of jobbers with whom they had such contracts in the Mid-western area, and in turn intentionally to raise the general level of retail prices prevailing in said Mid-western area.

The indictment further alleges that the defendants used as the means for accomplishing the purposes of that alleged conspiracy,

First, the two buying programs which are referred to in paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the East Texas Buying Program and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, and

Second, the participation of the defendant market journals, the Chicago Journal of Commerce, Platt's Oilgram and the National Petroleum News, which are alleged in paragraph 24 of the indictment to have been the chief agencies and instrumentalities through which the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the major oil companies affected the prices paid by jobbers, retail dealers and consumers for gasoline in the mid-western area, in that said market journals, while representing the price quotations published by them to be gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots, knowingly published and circulated as such price quotations the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the defendant major oil companies in said alleged East Texas Buying Program and Mid-Continent Buying Program.

3788 On the contrary, however, the evidence in the record herein entirely fails to support said allegations with reference to the alleged participation in said alleged conspiracy of said market journals, but instead affirmatively establishes that said market journals, during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935 and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, as at all other times, only published in their price quotations the gasoline prices prevailing in spot sales to jobbers in tank car lots, as represented by them, with the result that the United States moved to dismiss the indictment against said defendant market journals and against the defendant Warren C. Platt, which said motion, against the opposition of said defendants, was granted by this court.

The result of such complete failure of proof is that the alleged "necessary element" in the alleged scheme of the defendants; the alleged "connecting link between the immediate objective, the raising of the spot market price, and the ultimate objective" of the alleged conspiracy, that is, as alleged, "unjust enrichment for the major oil companies"; the alleged "outstanding means, the absolutely necessary means toward getting the conspiracy through" and the alleged "chief agencies and instrumentalities" through which the alleged wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline allegedly affected the price paid by jobbers, retail dealers and consumers for gasoline 3789 in the Mid-western area, and especially within the Western District of Wisconsin have not been shown; that by order of this court said market journals and Warren C. Platt have been found not to have participated in or to have aided and abetted the other and now the only remaining defendants in carrying out the conspiracy, if any, alleged in the indictment; and that the conspiracy, if any, charged in the indictment has not been and cannot be proved.

(12) The evidence in this case does not establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants or that any of them can be held to have violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act by participating and engaging in any buying program or programs as alleged in the indictment for the following reasons:

> The evidence introduced on behalf of the defendants establishes or tends to establish that the defendant Arnott was appointed Chief Stabilizer of the Petroleum Industry by a letter dated July 20, 1934 from the Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes, as Administrator of the Code of Fair Competition for the petroleum industry. The defendant Arnott carried on stabilization activities under the authority or the supposed authority of that letter until the termination of all code activities on May 27, 1935.
>
> 3790 When the defendant Arnott on January 4, 1935, appointed the Tank Car Stabilization Committee and instructed that Committee to take steps to relieve the condition of the independent refiners, he reasonably believed that he was authorized so to do by said letter of July 20, 1934, and he reasonably believed that in so doing he had the approval of the Petroleum Administrator and was acting to carry out his plans and policies. The defendant Arnott so told the defendants who were members of said Tank Car Stabilization Committee and said defendants reasonably believed and acted on those statements, and not otherwise, in carrying on the activities of that Committee.
> In all his connections with the buying of surplus gasoline in the Mid-Continent and in the East Texas fields the defendant Arnott believed that he was acting under the authority of the letter of July 20, 1934, and that he had the approval of the Petroleum Administrator and of his assistants and that he was acting in conformity with and for the purpose of effectuating the plans and policies of the Petroleum Administration. The defendant Arnott so advised each individual defendant who had any connection 3791 with such buying activities and each of said defendants reasonably believed said statements and for that reason, and not otherwise, participated in the so-called East Texas and Mid-Continent buying programs to the extent each is shown by the evidence in this case to have participated.

The Petroleum Administrator, through the Petroleum Administrative Board and through members of that Board, and otherwise, was advised of the activities of the defendant Arnott and of the so-called East Texas and Mid-Continent buying programs and at least tacitly approved and encouraged the defendants in carrying on these so-called buying programs as a part of stabilization and as a means of assisting in the accomplishment of the ends and the objectives of the Petroleum Administration. If the Petroleum Administrator either directly or through the Petroleum Administrative Board or through the Planning and Coordination Committee of the Petroleum Industry had requested that said buying activities be terminated, the same would have been terminated. No such request, however, ever was made nor was any criticism of those activities ever offered.

3792 The government of the United States consists of many departments and bureaus and agencies. The Department of Justice and the Department of the Interior are equal and coordinate branches of the government of the United States. Neither this court nor this jury, therefore, may find that what these defendants did under the authorization and at the request and with the knowledge and approval of the government of the United States as represented during the period of the National Industrial Recovery Act and of the Petroleum Code by the Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes, as the Petroleum Administrator exercising the powers delegated to the President of the United States by said Act, whether such authorization was expressed or shown directly or through the Petroleum Administrative Board as the Administrative Agency of the Petroleum Code, constituted a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

(13) The United States of America has failed to adduce any competent sufficient evidence that these defendants have done any act or thing constituting in whole or in part any violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

3793 Dated this 17th day of January, 1938.

Ralph Horween,
Attorney for:
The Globe Oil & Refining Company (Oklahoma)
The Globe Oil & Refining Company (Kansas)
The Globe Oil & Refining Company (Illinois)

3794 On January 17 and 18, 1938, Mr. John Henry Lewin, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, made the first closing argument to the jury on behalf of the plaintiff, the United States. Counsel for the defendants-appellants have inserted in this Bill of Exceptions those portions of said closing address set forth in the defendants-appellants' Assignments of Errors numbers 37, 39 and 40, and requested counsel for the plaintiff-appellee to specify those other portions of such address which they believe modify or explain such statements in said Assignments. In response, counsel for the plaintiff-appellee thereupon requested that the entire closing addresses to the jury by Mr. Lewin and Mr. Chaffetz be inserted in this Bill of Exceptions. Such closing addresses are hereinafter set forth.

The closing address of Mr. Lewin is as follows:

3795 (Whereupon the jury returned to the jury box, and the following proceedings were had in the presence and hearing of the jury:)

The Court: Proceed with the argument.

OPENING ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Lewin: May it please the Court; gentlemen of the jury.

As we have drawn near the end of this long trial I think we have all been impressed, I know government counsel have been impressed with and have appreciated the seriousness and the interest and the attention that you gentlemen have given to this long trial, and I hope you have been similarly impressed with the importance—because it is important—the seriousness, because it is serious; the sincerity, because we have been sincere; and the fairness, because we have been fair to both sides, to the defendants and to the United States and its people, of the Government's case.

You have listened so patiently as pieces of evidence came in, and I am sure that you have understood the significance of that evidence and seen its proper place in this really simple case. So you may ask, then why should you be asked to hear long-winded arguments among counsel?

3796 I suppose the excuse for it is that we who have toiled with the case, fed up with it, will possibly be able, looking over our notes, to remember more details, and can be of help to you, because that is the only purpose in the argument, to help you in recalling to you some of the salient points that have been made, because it would be impossible to suppose that you gentlemen, with all your interest and attention, could possibly remember the tons of evidence, evidence after evidence, oral, documentary, item by item, brick by brick, from the government's side and from the defendants' side on cross-examination, from the documents offered here by the defendants themselves, hundreds of them that have been referred to—it would be inconceivable if you gentlemen could remember all those facts.

And so it may fill a place if I take time, and I will have to take time, and I am sure you are going to continue to be just as patient with me as I take time in a halting sort of way to call attention to the different pieces of evidence that build up the defendants' case, and I assure you expose completely the lack of any legal defense whatever in this case for the defendants.

Many of you gentlemen are older than I am, and you probably know better than I do the American system and tradition of which we are all proud.

One of the fundamental principles of our country
3797 that has made it what it is, is our determination to have a free chance in business for everybody, for the small man, for the jobber and for the dealer, as well as for the large man, the eighty thousand dollar a year man, the oil baron; and you gentlemen will remember and know that this tradition has set its face sternly for years against any monopoly in this country or any combinations of great organized power.

3798 We have realized that a single corporation can be a very potent competitor.

Just stack a little jobber in a town like Madison against the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, and you will know what real competition is, and why this country has set its face firmly against pitting that small man, not only against a great corporation like that, but against corporations like that in combination.

And so our philosophy has said, and we have enacted it into law, that the only kind of monopolies we will tolerate in this country; the only kind of combinations we will tolerate in this country—and they are very few—are where those combinations and monopolies are regulated by law; where the Government has some part in them, to supervise them, to watch them, to limit them, and to see that they are exercised and enjoyed not only by one group of owners, but by the public and all the other classes that participate in them. And I allude to monopolies like the railroads. It is only such monopolies and combinations of that character that this country has tolerated.

But I say that you can be proud of that system all you please, and it will be nothing but an idle hope, so long as you haven't law enforcing officers who are disagreeable enough, who are zealous and courageous enough to prosecute the violations of the law without fear or 3799 favor, not only against the small man but against the big man as well; not only against the weak man, but against the powerful; not only against the uneducated man, but against the man that has had all the advantages in the world; not only against the man whose personality disgusts us, but against men with suave, appealing, attractive, dominating personalities. And it will be an idle hope until you have juries equally courageous, equally fair-minded and equally just, with an equal love of the law of our country and of its traditions—without fear or favor, to return a verdict of guilty where the facts and the evidence warrant it under the law.

We hear a lot, of course, you gentlemen have, about the need for law—the old saying, "there orter be a law." You can have all the law you please, but if the law enforcing officers are taken into camp, soft-soaped, misled, too weak to prosecute, too lazy to investigate the facts—then you can have all the law you please, and you have no results except a distaste and a disregard for the law.

So bear that in mind, if you have been tempted to think the Government attorneys in some cases a little overzealous. If you have thought that I have been a little 3800 hot-headed, or a little disagreeable at times, I hope you will bear in mind that we have had a real job to perform. It is our duty to be fair; it is our duty to be fair to the defendants, it is important to them. But don't forget that it is just as much our duty to be fair to the United States, to its citizens, to society, to the jobbers and to the consumers and to the dealers who have been affected by a blasting, withering, powerful combination of the most powerful corporations, and their sleek, suave officers who, because of their advantages, because fortune has smiled on them, ought to know better. And the Government counsel is proud to say—and I think you gentlemen would have no respect for us if we hadn't been zealous in fighting this case against enormous odds. And the odds have been enormous. And we have worked hard.

A hundred lawyers employed—the very cream of the American Bar, the very best legal talent that these people can obtain—every one of them working night and day with suggestions as to how the red herring can be drawn across the clear cut issue of this case.

I remember, after a long, hard day in Washington in the Department of Justice, I have sometimes gone up the street to a gymnasium. And there is an old negro 3801 rubber in there, who rubs you down after you exercise. And I got very fond of him; he is quite a philosopher, a great talker, as you know he would be, and I am going to tell you this story of what he had said, because I thought it was very interesting. It illustrates the popular attitude towards law enforcement.

In some way "justice" was mentioned. The old fellow was patting away there on me, and he says: "Justice. That word mek me laugh. Justice! They ain't no justice—don' gi' me no justice. I don't want no justice. They ain't no justice in this country fo' the small man. Big man do something, violate the law—little man violate the law—big man get off every time—that's justice."

He didn't know I was from the Department. He says: "Why, they got a building down there, big, stone building down in Washington, called 'Department of Justice'—mek me laugh. They got up there, carved in stone, they got a figure in stone, with scales, weighing out justice. Pretty fine justice, that is. Don't give me no justice."

And then I interrupted him, and told him that I was from the Department of Justice, and took a little issue with him. And I told him, and he agreed with me, 3802 that the law is just as strong as the people that enforce it—and no stronger. And the system is just as strong as the people that work in that system, and no stronger. And I said to him that, "I hope, as long as I am connected with the Department, that your criticism of the Department of Justice isn't a good one; that there shall be no fear or favor with regard to the particular Department of Justice I know about."

So, in this case, don't let's justify for one moment that kind of popular attitude towards law enforcement—taking it for granted that these more powerful people are above the law and can't be reached and can't be brought to book.

And I am going to read you a quotation for a moment, delivered from a speech of Chief Justice Ryan of this state—one of Wisconsin's greatest jurists, and one of the greatest judges this country ever had; a veritable genius, I am told. And this isn't law, but this is a part of his address, given away back in 1873—I suppose, before any of you gentlemen were born. And I want you to note the prophecies that are in these words. 1873—about twenty years, seventeen years before the Sherman Act was passed. And he said this, right over here in this law 3803 school of Wisconsin, at a graduation day:

> "There is looming up a new and dark power. I cannot dwell upon the signs and shocking omens of its advent. The accumulation of individual wealth seems to be greater than it ever has been since the downfall of the Roman Empire. The enterprises of the country are aggregating vast corporate combinations of unexampled capital, coldly marching, not for economic conquests only, but for political power. For the first time, really, in our body politic, money is taking the field as an organized power. The question will arise"— and here is the prophecy:

> "—The question will arise, and arise in your day, though perhaps not fully in mine, which shall rule, wealth or man? Which shall lead, money or intellect? Who shall fill public stations, educated and patriotic free men, or the futile serfs of corporate capital?"

Now, that wasn't an inflaming address. That illustrates the American tradition, and its fear—its fear of corporate power in combination.

And so I say, gentlemen, that that philosophy and that system and that policy was enacted into law in 3804 1890, the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, which is the Act under which this case is brought. And it is in simple language. And it has been on our statute books and a part of the basic law of the United States ever since. It has withstood all attacks, thoroughly constitutional. So long as the monopoly is not regulated, there shall be no combination of dominant forces restraining trade and commerce. And these are the words:

> "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade among the several states or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal."

And it continues that every person who shall join such combination or participate in it shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

Now, gentlemen, I may as well say, so that there will be no mistake about it—you gentlemen will take your law in this case, to apply to the evidence, where I take mine: Right from his Honor, Judge Stone, on that bench. And at the close of the arguments, I understand, he will instruct you as to the legal principles of law under the Sherman Act that are to be applied in this case. And I am sure you gentlemen are not going to put any weight on anything that I say that may seem inconsistent with that. I hope it won't be inconsistent with that—3805 I don't think it will be. But the law comes, not from me, but from his Honor; and you gentlemen are the sole judges of the weight of that evidence which his Honor has found legally sufficient to be submitted to you against the defendants that are still in this case—sixteen corporations and thirty-six individuals.

And on the question of punishment, provided you return a verdict of guilty, you need not be concerned. That will not be a matter for you, or a matter for me. There, again, the law imposes that responsibility on his Honor, the Judge, alone. And he can consider all the facts and circumstances that surround any particular defendant. And his shoulders are broad enough to accept the responsibility, and his talents, and his good heart are enough to meet that responsibility and to execute it. So you don't have to be disturbed in the slightest degree. If you find, as I think you must find on this evidence, that these defendants have violated this Sherman Act beyond a reasonable doubt, and that every one of their so-called defenses that have taken all of this time, are red herrings, shams, without legal foundation—because I say that it is the law, and I think his Honor will instruct you, first, that it isn't necessary for you to find any formal contract. Conspiracies and combinations 3806 are rarely made like that. What the statute means, as I think his Honor will tell you, is a combination; that is, concerted action.

And if you find that these corporations and individuals had the power—and, gentlemen, the evidence is overwhelming that they had the power—to affect directly those prices; if they had the power, the dominant position in the industry so that they could do it; and if you further find that they combined—and that means by joining in some sort of concerted action, and I tell you that this record is packed with it—for the purpose of affecting those prices; then I think his Honor will instruct you that they are guilty, that you can find a verdict of guilty, notwithstanding a great many other considerations that have been interjected into this case.

If you find the power, and if you find the combination to exercise that power on the price level, then it makes no difference whether they actually carried out their full purpose or not.

Of course, in order for this Court to have jurisdiction here in Wisconsin, there must be what the law terms overt acts; that is, there must be something done by some of the conspirators—not all, but some of the conspirators in this District, that furthered or carried out to some extent 3807 their illegal purpose. And I say that the evidence is overwhelming on that.

You gentlemen heard those jobbers testify how the gasoline that they had to buy under their contracts was sold to them on this very rigged price, right here in this District. And in the words of the indictment, "the defendants exacted large sums of money," on these rigged prices, from the jobbers and consumers of gasoline right in this District, right here and now, in Madison. We gave you a Madison jobber, Al Breuch.

3808 And the question whether the defendants needed their gasoline that they bought,—that is an absurd claim. Nobody contends that these big corporations could not use that little drop in the bucket. And nobody contends that some of them, at some time, didn't need some of that gasoline they bought.

But it makes no difference, under the law, if they had the power to affect these prices, and if they combined to affect these prices, it makes no difference what their needs were.

Anyone, whether you are big or little, if we act independently, can buy what gasoline we please, as much as we need. We can buy gasoline we don't need, if we want to, from anybody we please. What the law says is that you can't do it in combination with others where the combination exercises a dominant power over the control of trade and commerce. I will have something to say later about the question of need, on the evidence. But I want to say now, if you find—and I think you must find, the power, the combination, and the purposes, the question of need is out of the case It will make no difference if somebody thought it was reasonable. It will make no difference that somebody thought it was beneficial to any particular class.

You are going to hear a lot of that. It is a defense 3809 and if this case was not so serious it would make me laugh about this altruism,—this charity,—this change of heart, toward the independent refiner.

I say, it makes no difference, under the law, whether it was beneficial, or they thought it was beneficial or not to any class. It was highly beneficial to themselves,—more beneficial to themselves than to any other class; temporarily beneficial, I suppose, so long as they chose to keep it up, to those independent refiners, or so long as the law didn't interfere; temporarily beneficial to those independent refiners. But if it was broken up, or if they chose to abandon the independent refiners, as they could do, any time they pleased, it would leave them in worse condition than they were when they started,—relying on artificial market, an attractive market, and that could vanish overnight,—all of their eggs in one basket, in regard to their surplus gasoline.

Instead of seeking additional markets in the natural way, among the jobbers and the dealers and the consumers and the independent men.

3810 It makes no difference, if you find that combination and that power, and that exercise of the power, purpose to fix prices, that at some time or other, under different circumstances, and in a different way, the Government of the United States tried to reach an increase in price. And yet they would try to tell you, and I will have more to say about that, that our objectives were the same as the Administration's were. It is an unworthy attempted defense, as I shall show you in the documents clearly exposed, because the Government of the United States—our Government, our representative Government, in which we all have a voice, can in other circumstances, and at other times, and by different means, not under the philosophy that the end justifies any means, fair or foul, but in an orderly way, could give its attention to increasing any prices.

Are they to be permitted to say if the Government can entertain such objectives, then we can, together, privately, for or own aggrandizement and benefit. Oh no! If that is so, since the Government can tax, then Arnott can tax. Why not? If the Government can declare war then these oil barons can declare war in Asia when some of their boats are sunk.

3811 I say, it makes no difference what the objectives of the Government were if these people privately had the power, if they combined for the purpose of exercising that power on prices, it makes no difference at all. And it makes no difference whether the prices before the conspiracy were reasonable or unreasonable. Whether they were low,—and low is a relative term,—or whether they were high, or whether they were got through with their rigging, or whether that price line was high or low. It makes no difference. Under the law they can't affect that price one iota. That is supposed to be a free price; a competitive price; a fluctuating price. Small jobbers bargain around to keep themselves self-respecting citizens; to try to get a little share of the economic good of this country; can enjoy, not an iron clamp fastened on with all the cruelty in the world, month after month.

For the Standard Oil Company, the Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, and the Shell, and the Sinclair, and the Tide Water, and the Phillips, and the Skelly, and the Barnsdall, and the Mid-Continent, and all the rest of them, acting not alone but together.

And gentlemen, it makes no difference if you find that power, and if you find that combination and 3812 purpose to exercise it, that there was any knowledge, or if you will, that there was any acquiescence or good will toward their scheme on the part of minor Government employee officials; there was one way, and one way only, that the Sherman Anti-Trust Act could be suspended, and that was to submit it to Government regulation,—to get Government approval, in the way in which the law required. And the refinery amendment is before you in evidence. I will discuss that at some detail later.

The approval of the President, or his duly authorized agent, the Secretary of the Interior, and they, and they only, had reposed in them authority to make law of that character, not Frey, or Fahy, or any of the rest of these pygmies. That is all we are in this gigantic Government. And the Congress of the United States delegates legislative power,—power to suspend law and statutes. It does not delegate them to the minor men in the departments. If it does, gentlemen, then we are ruled, not by government of law, but by a government of men,—not only of men, but of mice.

I don't care what their salaries were or how their activities were explained in their salary sheets. I say that P. A. B.—Petroleum Administrative Board—had this power, and this power only. And I will read 3813 you later from the order appointing them,—to advise with the Secretary of the Interior and to exercise such administrative function as he might delegate to them from time to time. And that means they can run the office, and boss the help, the clerks and the stenographers and the statisticians, and perform all the other detail spade work that younger and subordinate men must perform for cabinet officers.

And I think that the evidence shows that they had very scanty knowledge. They certainly didn't tell those men in Washington—Arnott tells you that he went there to tell them about it. You gentlemen will know pretty well that he didn't tell them what they denied here.

So I say, it makes no difference about the knowledge or acquiescence, if there is any, or subordinate government officials.

If they had the power and combined to exercise it for the purpose of affecting the price, then there isn't any official, except the President and the Secretary of the Interior, under the law, acting on the full facts, acting formally,—because he would be making law, that could approve or suspend the Anti-Trust Act; even from the period from March 1st to May 27th,—even for that 3814 period alone. And there was no one that had the power to suspend the Anti-Trust law after the Code went out, in the early part of this conspiracy; and yet, you gentlemen will remember that they didn't stop; they carried it on even more effectively.

Gentlemen, it will make no difference if you find those facts, that it was done along with, or grew out of, if you please, some innocent and beneficial activities that they were authorized to do. It makes it all the more culpable, if a man is trusted and given certain authority, and that authority is limited, as I shall show you it is clearly limited,—it makes him all the more culpable if he is faithless to his trust and betrays it and goes to the outside.

3815 No man is completely black. No man, I suppose, is completely white. And violations of the law are hardly ever either black or white. They are usually grey.

And so I say you will put the proper weight on these letters of congratulation and things that Mr. Arnott received from the P.A.B. and from the Secretary of the Interior at the close of the Code for his legitimate services.

He had worked hard. He had worked in his own interests and in the interests of his company. But he had worked hard with regard to some public meetings and with regard to retail prices, as he was authorized to do. It was proper that he should be congratulated for that service.

But that gave no white-wash, gentlemen, to this buying pool, unauthorized, with its blasting blight fastened down on every town and hamlet in these ten states and more.

Gentlemen, it will make no difference if you find the power and combination and purpose to affect those prices that they acted under any name, that they called themselves "the tank car stabilization committee" and that Arnott called himself "chief stabilizer of the 3816 United States" when there is no such office.

You know that a rose by any other name would smell as sweet or as bad. There is nothing in a name.

And so I say that all those defenses, those and others are going to be urged with all the plausibility in the world, far more plausible and far more persuasive than I can ever hope to be, by far more talented men, by far more experienced men.

And I say their half-baked attempt at defenses without any foundation at all, and I think we are going to be exposed through feeble argument, not only on the law, because they are immaterial, but on the facts themselves.

They didn't need this gasoline in any sense in which they would have to buy it. The activity wasn't reasonable. The prices were raised and fixed arbitrarily. There wasn't any Government approval during any time, not even during the first few months. They weren't authorized stabilization activities that were within the scope of his authority, but as counsel for the defense said in his opening address, this work grew out of it, inevitably grew out of that letter of July 20 that I will have something to say about.

Well, if it grew out of it, they are the ones that 3817 made it grow out of it, and if it grew out of it, it wasn't in there in the first place, and it was an extension, a violation that leaked over the limitations that it imposed on him, and they took advantage of a situation to take the law into their own hands.

And so I say, gentlemen, and I say this in all sincerity, that this case is just that simple, just that simple, in spite of all these weeks and days of exposing the facts—and it has been an awful lot of work as you gentlemen know, to first find those facts, and to get them together, and to understand them, and desperately hard work to expose them here.

And despite all these documents that have been put in the evidence, all these different theories that have been advanced, the case is just that simple, just as plain as day.

There can't be any doubt about the power, and I am not going to dwell very long on it. Just think of the power of the Standard of Indiana alone, the great octopus sprawling over that territory with its powerful tentacles in every town and hamlet—

Mr. Kirkland: On behalf of the Standard of Indiana I move to strike out that reference out of the record.

3818 The Court: It may be stricken. I think we had better confine ourselves to the facts.

Mr. Lewin: It sells a billion gallons of gasoline a year, gentlemen. That is in the record, a billion gallons of gasoline a year. I can't conceive a billion gallons of anything, or a billion anything. I can't conceive a million. But its yearly sales are multiplied by a thousand times a million.

It furnishes sore competition when it acts alone, but add to it Soconoy-Vacuum, the combination of the Standard of New York and Socony Company, selling millions of gallons in this territory, one of the largest corporations of the world. Add to it the Shell Petroleum Corporation, Sinclair, Tide Water, Cities Service, Continental, Phillips, Pure, Skelly, Mid-Continent, Barnsdall, three Globe Companies, and Wadhams.

And if they are not enough, then, gentlemen, add to that power in combination all the principal independent refiners that manufactured gasoline in the Mid-Continent field and East Texas and sell on the spot market—those named in the indictment and more that were disclosed by the evidence—and if that is not enough on the question of power, you can add those big major companies that 3819 do business in this territory who are no longer defendants—or, who never were defendants in this case.

And I say that because of the power that those companies could exercise against this combination wasn't exercised—there is not a scintilla of evidence in this case that Gulf or Texas, no longer before you gentlemen, did anything whatever to break down the effects of this conspiracy.

And the only other major companies—and I think I am right—that are left out of this indictment that do business in this territory are the Sun Company, which does some business over here in the eastern part of that district (indicating on chart), and the National Company which is a semi-major.

And when I tell you gentlemen that the defendants still in this case sold over seventy-three percent of all the gasoline consumed in this territory in 1935 and over seventy-two percent of all the gasoline consumed in this territory in 1936, and if you add in Tide Water, which is out of the case, because it dissolved, and there is no company there to prosecute—after it had participated and enjoyed the conspiracy and the fruits of it—and if you add Deep Rock, you have seventy-six percent of all the gasoline sold 3820 in 1935 and seventy-five percent of all sold in 1936; and then add to that, if you please, the gallonage of the independent refiners that were in this conspiracy just as much as—and you will find that you have got almost a complete monopoly.

And then what do the defendants do? They have the nerve to try through experts, so-called expert testimony, against these great facts, to have theoretical testimony, academic testimony, that in this man's opinion these companies in combination didn't have the power to affect that tank car price.

And who was this so-called expert—a fine expert he was—Mr. Swensrud, a high official of another Standard Oil Company, the Standard Oil Company of Ohio, that sells its gasoline on similar contracts, as its sister company, and bases them on the spot market—Swensrud, a director of the Fleetwing Corporation, that sold gasoline in this territory to jobbers in 1935 and 1936, at the rigged tank car prices, under a contract, and enjoyed the fruits of this conspiracy—and that man is put on the stand to theorize for you about the need, about—not about the need—about the power or lack of power of these companies to affect that price.

3821 And I don't believe you gentlemen are going to give much weight to that.

What is their theory? Just let us stop a moment to inquire about it. His theory was that outside of this territory (indicating on chart), around this territory, there is other refining capacity.

He alludes to this gulf coast (indicating on chart), and he says here along Kentucky, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and over here in Wyoming and Montana, and he says if the prices are raised artificially here (indicating) it will attract the gasoline from this refining capacity out there (indicating) gentlemen.

The answers to that are just withering. In the first place, let the facts speak. The prices were raised, and were raised nice and high, as Mr. Marcell's letter testifies, so that when they were only raised there (indicating) at the end of March, I think it was, he was ready for a nice—quite a considerable profit if it went higher, and it went higher than he supposed, and it gave him his considerable profit.

So let the facts speak against the theory. They were raised to high, artificial, arbitrary levels. Did this gasoline come in then? It didn't come in in June. It didn't come in in July or August or September, October, Novem-3822 ber, December—into 1936, and it didn't come in. Not enough of it came in to break it down. That price held, and that even rose in January to even higher levels.

I prefer those facts, the best test of power is what they did with it, what were the results of their activities. And I can suggest some results to you on this record why that gasoline didn't come in. In the first place, there were enormous markets out here (indicating). The jobbers, their dealers, and consumers and automobilists over all this territory that look to this capacity out here (indicating) to be supplied.

Are these people (indicating) going to leave this good market (indicating), taking their capacity and their supply, normally, and run against an adverse freight rate to get into this territory (indicating) to break down the other major companies' schemes?

They wouldn't do that normally. And there was another reason, a particular reason, that is right in this record why they wouldn't do it at this time.

In the allocators' meetings—thank Heaven for the documents in this case, because they really do shed a light on what happened—in the allocators' meeting in March, Mr. Arnott spoke as follows—and he was introducing to 3823 those allocators Mr. Buckley from East Texas and Mr. O. D. Robinson from the Gulf coast, down here (indicating), the largest refining section in the world—and these gentlemen were introduced to that allocators' meeting to tell them about surplus gasoline and the need for its being bought up, not only in East Texas, which was Buckley's territory, but in O. D. Robinson's territory, the Gulf coast, where there were fourteen cargoes of surplus gasoline that hadn't a market at the prices these people wanted it—bear that in mind when you come to consider this need: Fourteen cargoes of gasoline that they called surplus banked up there at the Gulf (indicating), that could have been availed on by any major company that had had any need. It was a shorter shipment—it was a shorter shipment from the Gulf coast loaded on cargoes around here (indicating) than it was here from East Texas and bringing it around (indicating). It was more available.

Yet O. D. Robinson was introduced there to describe another pool, may it please the jury, another pool, not only the two that are alleged in this indictment, but a third, a Gulf coast pool, whereby the major companies selling on the East Texas coast, over here, (indicating) to protect their price there and raise their price there, are going 3824 to divvy up this surplus here just as they did in the Mid-Continent and in East Texas.

So that Arnott takes the law in his own hands and brags to them that there is a national picture, a national picture of the entire United States, east of the Rockies—talk about delusions of grandeur—and they were at work on it—they were at work on it. They were on work not only in the Mid-Continent field and in East Texas, as our case discloses, but as our record shows, they were at work on the surplus here (indicating), raising and protecting these prices through the entire United States, east of the Rockies.

And then what becomes of Mr. Swensrud's theory that all this refining capacity would leave this attractive, artificial market that was being built up, over here (indicating) by this Gulf pool, and sworn in here to defeat these other pools engineered and run by the same gang.

Said Mr. Arnott at this meeting: "So we have East Texas here that can tell you what refineries there feel as to their attitude and their willingness in that respect. And we also have the gulf refiners who likewise will tell you for themselves what their attitude and feeling is in that respect."

3825 Not only East Texas, but the Gulf coast. He continues: "So, gentlemen, I am presenting to you a national picture—that is, east of the Rockies—whereby this whole stabilization effort of markets, the holding up of normal sales market structure, the question of the realization of refineries—"

What does "the realization of refineries" mean? It means tank car price, nothing else.

And don't forget that when you go to weigh their protestations that they weren't so interested in price, their purpose wasn't to affect price, they had some other charitable purpose to help the independent refineries, or to buy their own needs, or what not.

And he continued: "—the working together of those two great groups in order that we may balance this whole picture and in order that we may interest a great many buyers in this so-called surplus or homeless gasoline, can be done along organized lines—''

Not haphazard buying, one company as a purchaser from another company as a seller, but ''on organized lines''. And bear that in mind when you come to a consideration of whether or not there was concerted action.

> ''—and in a way that the refiners from these > 3826 three groups themselves have laid before us beforehand.''

And then he alludes to another group, the McDowell group, working in the Mid-Continent.

And so he has three, and under him, as chief stabilizer, he is covering the entire United States east of the Rockies, working in a price-fixing case in an organized way to affect the ''realization of his refineries.'' 3827 And bear in mind, gentlemen, that in the entire United States these defendants had on January the 1st, '35, over thirty-five per cent of total straight run distillation capacity; on January 1st, '36, over thirty-four per cent of total straight run distillation capacity; on January the 1st, '35, over forty per cent of total cracking capacity; on January the 1st, '36, over forty-one per cent of the total cracking capacity in the entire United States—these defendants before you gentlemen alone. And let them answer that question, as to whether or not they had the power. And don't let them answer it with the chicanery, which is what Swensrud's testimony was.

And on this question of power, let me allude to some of the other documents. And I am going to have to read a lot of them, I suppose, and I am only going to pick out those paragraphs ,that hit this case. You have all heard the full letters written, or read. This is from an official of the Shell Company to its President, in April of '35:

> ''No change has been observed in the Gulf position during the preceding week.''

He wasn't talking about the Gulf Company; he was talking about the Gulf refining district, right down there on the Gulf (indicating).

3828 ''although the Group 3 price''— that is, the Oklahoma price,

> ''increased 3/16¢ on April 16. Such surplus as exists in the Gulf appears to be largely in the hands of Warren and Halon-Buchanan, whose recent activities in this market have been bearish. Their efforts to control the price at reduced levels by small sales have been, in the greater part, ineffective and the market continues to strengthen.

"Prices remained unchanged over the preceding week, although the present market is very strong. We can learn of no additional sales made under the buying program and it appears that small refiners have no desire to sell at current prices, feeling that by holding they will be able to secure better prices in the near future. Contact with Platt's representative."— and here is the price man, that is quoting the rigged price in the Platt's Oilgram—

"—Contact with Platt's representative"—

here is Shell, contacting Platt's representative—

"—in Tulsa reveals that small sales in the Gulf at current prices are militating against a rise in this market and that while this representative feels that 3829 a disparity exists in comparison with Group 3 prices, they do not feel prepared to advance in the Gulf as long as sales are being made. Since we have been able to secure no information concerning such sales, he was advised accordingly and stated that he would investigate further.

In discussing with New York the disparity in Group 3 and Gulf gasoline prices, we were informed of conversations Messrs. van Eck and van der Woude have had with the majors"— in New York, in April of '35,

"—to the effect that further increases in the Gulf market should be sponsored by a rise in the crude prices."

Not only the gasoline, but the crude oil.

"—It is difficult to reconcile this feeling with Shell's position, as it would appear that with the excess of crude purchases over our own production it would be more desirable to keep the gasoline price structure at the peak of the market, allowing crude prices to follow."

Now, that memorandum deals with the Gulf Coast pool.

3830 The Court: We will take a recess at this time.

(Thereupon, at 11:20 o'clock a. m., a recess was taken.)

3831 (Following the recess, the Court resumed its session at 11:35 o'clock A. M., and the following proceedings were had:)

Mr. Lewin: You remember at recess I was pointing out to you, gentlemen, the major companies under the leadership of Mr. Arnott had a pool in the Gulf Coast, and I was reading your documents that established that beyond peradventure of a doubt, and I was alluding to it because I wanted you gentlemen to bear it in mind if you are tempted to give any weight at all to that wild theory put up here against the facts in this case, that these major companies of the size I have indicated and the extent I have indicated did not have the power when they acted in combination, not only with themselves but with the independent refiners.

And here is another document, and I give you this excerpt from another report, this time from the defendant Lakin, a vice-president of the Shell Petroleum Corporation to the president of the company, the defendant Fraser.

These matters were so important, gentlemen, to these companies that you find periodic reports made by the vice-presidents to the presidents of the company.

This again is in April of 1935:

> "Gulf domestic cargo prices are out of line with the East Texas market. An effort is being made to boost this price. The sale of a cargo at five and one-quarter cents made last week was responsible for > 3832 holding the market at that level. We are endeavoring to ascertain the name of the seller and buyer. We were given to understand that the seller later realized his price did not reflect the true market value."

And Neil Buckley, the liaison man as Mr. Arnott called him before the allocators' meeting, between the East Texas refiners and the major companies supporting that pool, writes to Brandli, his superior officer, a high official in the Cities Service Export Oil Company on May 15, 1935, a confidential letter, so confidential that it did not expect to testify in this case; and here it is; and first he tells him about East Texas, and congratulates himself and the major company pool on the results that have been achieved in East Texas, took credit then for the price rise, and then as you will see even steps out of East Texas and gives him a little report on the Gulf Coast pool.

> "For your confidential information, it is reported that approximately four hundred thousand barrels of gasoline have been purchased in East Texas by major refinery purchases during the period in which the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association has been in operation. The accumulation of this quantity of material which otherwise would have been distress gasoline"— 3833 Oh, that name "distress gasoline" amuses me too.

They have all testified that distress gasoline was just as good gasoline as any other kind of gasoline, just as legal, made out of the same crude and made in the same way, just as advantageous, just as desirable for the independent jobber to buy. But it was gasoline that was more than they could sell at the price they wanted to maintain. That is all it was.

Of course when you have a large supply you can expect the price to be low; just simple economics.

When I use the word "distress" in this case I apply to the victims of this conspiracy.

There wasn't anything distressed about this gasoline. If it had been permitted to flow in the ordinary competitive channels it would have taken its place gallon for gallon, gallon by gallon, with the other gasoline, just as good for use in your car, but added to the supply of the other gasoline would have made the price cheaper, would have made it fluctuate, would have made it competitive, which is what gasoline ought to be.

To continue with Buckley's note, his confidential note. He says that

> "This accumulation which otherwise would have been distress gasoline is in a considerable measure responsible for the difference between the price of > 3834 three and one-eighth cents early in February and the low price of four and one-half cents f. o. b. refinery which today prevails."

May 17th; I ask you gentlemen—(stepping before a chart) it is a little hard to show these charts when I want to, but just think of that price rise for a minute. Let us take his own words;

> "is in a considerable measure"— and you know Buckley, if he was anything he was plenty smart and he was very certain in this enterprise; he wasn't kidding himself and he wasn't kidding his employers. He was writing a confidential letter, and he says that

> "this accumulation" by the majors in East Texas "is in a considerable measure responsible for the difference between the price of three and one-eighth early in February and the low price of four and one-half cents f. o. b. refinery which today prevails."

Here in May; there is May (indicating on chart). So when you come to consider any protestations of theirs that they were not interested in the price rise, that they were helping independent refiners and a few other misnomers like that, just bear in mind here is one of the leading co-conspirators, the liaison man, the chief agency through which that East Texas pool worked, claiming to his 3835 own boss in a confidential letter, credit. Consider that when you are told that the price rise was due solely to the Connally Act and solely to allocations of the refinery runs under the code, and solely to the increased jobber demand.

Now he comes to this remark about the Gulf Coast pool:

> "We have been advised unofficially that approximately five hundred and fifty thousand barrels of gasoline have been purchased in cargo lots from independent refiners on the Gulf Coast during the period from late March to the middle of May. These figures have not been given to us in exact detail, but we believe they are substantially correct."

So that the Gulf Coast pool was working simultaneously, just as efficiently as the East Texas and the Mid-Continent pool in the same period of time; because the testimony is that there were fourteen cargoes of surplus accumulation there, and fourteen cargoes is around a million gallons of gasoline—or barrels of gasoline; and here you have five hundred and fifty thousand barrels bought or purchased from the independent refiners on the Gulf Coast, according to Buckley, in May of 1935.

So much then for the question of power. Can anybody doubt—and it is one of the major considerations—3836 did they have the power? And I say with all sincerety and earnestness that the answer cannot be but one thing on this record. Of course they had the power, that is testified to by the fact that they exercised it and told the results, and they congratulated themselves on those very same results.

And then how about the other fact which I said if you found, or answered the entire case,—and I say to you, gentlemen, that the combination is confessed.

You saw how difficult it was—it is a long time ago, and I don't know whether you remember it well or not, but I remember it.

> "The toad beneath the harrow knows > Exactly where each tooth point goes."

And you gentlemen will remember how difficult it was to prove the simple facts out of the mouth of Buckley and Jacobi and Evans and Bradshaw and Steiger, because they were examined on chief by the government and because they were co-conspirators themselves—and Cline.

Oh, it was really toil to get a simple story, resisted at every point, memories that were excellent as to what they wanted to testify to, and memories that were hopelessly gone as regarded the true facts, and memories that stubbornly refused to be refreshed we refreshed again and again until you gentlemen must have been sick of it.

Then what happened after all that time and all 3837 that testimony that had to be dragged from them?

3838 Notwithstanding all of this documentary proof, then may it please the jury, Arnott and McDowell go on the stand and confess those very same facts, and put it in their own language, and it has to be exposed by cross-examination.

Talk about helping independent refiners? Then, on cross-examination, they reveal they are helping them by raising the price. It helped them thousands and millions of dollars more. And they tell you freely about the combination. They tell you about the meetings. They tell you who was there. Tell you what was discussed; what their plan was; what their scheme was; about their dancing partners; how much there was to take when they get started, so that it would benefit them most; wait until the Connally Act, because before the Connally Act they could not affect the price; how they are to divide up all the surplus; and if any other surplus crops up during the month they are to have a mechanical sub-committee that is to have a meeting and assign that to some other major company buyer so that it will all be taken,—not a gallon left, if they can help it, to be free competitive gasoline. That was surplus, and they called it distress. Combination! Not only once, oh, that was enough, and in a great many conspiracy cases that is enough; one meeting; 3839 one exchange of information; one putting of the heads together; one indication of what we will do and the other tacitly following; that would be enough.

But here, brazenly, meeting after meeting; not combination once, but combination in extenso; month after month, through Code and out of Code; through the summer of 1935, into the fall of 1935, into the winter of 1936; still meeting, month after month; committees at work; committees of major company refiners. Authorized to hold due public meetings on retail questions; and calling meetings of major companies in the Waldorf Hotel in New York City, in Washington, and in the Blackstone Hotel in Chicago.

Was that a due public hearing where all parties affected could be heard that were concerned? That meeting where it was suggested that Frey—you saw him—subordinate official of the Department of the Interior,—"better not come in" because the discussion might not be so frank. Was that a public hearing? Were these meetings in the Waldorf Hotel in New York,—those major companies—where Arnott had an exercise of his power of inclu-3840 sion and exclusion, told even Buckley and Robinson to withdraw while they considered the questions behind closed doors; were they public meetings? No, gentlemen.

To the same extent as power is established, combination, over and over again, is established, not only in meetings, but in conversations—telephone conversations, letters, documents, reports, month after month, carrying on this constructive work, as they would like to have you believe. Constructive for whom, may I ask? Temporarily constructive to the independent refiners. Constructive to the extent of millions for the majors. Unconstructive and devastating for the victims, for whom they had no regard in their arrogant cruelty. It is very easy, gentlemen, I suppose, to get into that frame of mind, to be cruel before you know it. Why they didn't know it, I can't imagine.

They dealt with jobbers. They even tell you that they looked after their jobbers. They represent their jobbers. And, gentlemen, they don't call—they can't call a single jobber in this case, to testify for them. They can make slurs at the jobbers, as they did in the opening statement. I will come to that and read it to you. Oh, 3841 yes, with the wave of the hand they can condemn them as hot oilers, unworthy of protection. And who did they mean that slur for? I am going to read it. Did they mean it for Bill O'Brien of Superior, or Al Brench, of Madison, and Wingrove, and Teige, and Crowley, and those other honest men that took that stand; representing fairly and accurately a group of people four thousand strong? And every one of them was asked whether he was a hot oiler,—whether he dealt in hot oil—and you heard him answer.

So, I say to you gentlemen, that there is not a shadow of a doubt on this record, and you will be amazed, as I was amazed,—and I have just lived with this case—when I went over the record again to prepare these remarks, at the letter on letter, report on report, not only in March or April, or May, but right through the period; not by only one company or only one official, but by dozens of them, all substantiating this combination fully and completely.

And I ask you, gentlemen, in all fairness, which are you, as a reasonable man, going to believe, these telltale documents, written contemporaneously—written with no idea that they would take the witness stand, im-3842 possible of alteration; agreed and stipulated here to be authentic; written from one official in a big company to his superior officer to guide that superior officer in the policies of his company; not kidding,—men often kid themselves, but not about things like this; not concealing from his right hand what his left hand was doing: but open, frank statements of a financial profit, scheme and plan carried out and successful. Documents that can't be influenced, that can't be made to tell their story over and over again to lawyers, except in one way and one way only; documents that are not reluctant, that need not have their memories refreshed,—right there in black and white.

3843 And which, gentlemen, I say in all fairness, are you as reasonable men going to believe and put weight on—the testimony of those documents, or the oral, self-serving, after-the-fact, theoretical, cock-and-bull stories that it would tax the credulity of a child to believe, that you men have been inflicted with by witness after witness on that stand?

Gentlemen, I haven't any doubt of it. Your mental processes are going to carry you to the same conviction that anybody else would be carried to. You might suspect one document; you might suspect ten; you might suspect one company, or one official. But if you throw these documents out, you have got to suspect hundreds, hundreds of authentic documents.

Oh, gentlemen, you can give the greatest weight in the world to those documents; and this case can be argued fully and completely without a comment from me—and maybe you gentlemen would be glad of it. It might be a little tiresome, but if I just read document after document, the entire story would before you lie revealed in all its extent and power and cruelty and hideousness and result. Not documents written against them, but documents written by them—documents in which they took pride—documents written in the course of business—docu-3844 ments that have turned out to be against self-interest. That is how strong the evidence is in this case; it is overwhelming.

And I ask you, what kind of story you would have had exposed to you—when you have seen the demeanor of these witnesses on the stand? You gentlemen are accustomed to business and to dealing with men, far more than I am. And what kind of story would have been foisted on you in this desperate attempt to get themselves off, to evade the consequences of what they did in order to put millions of dollars in their pockets—and I am speaking with sincerity when I say millions of dollars—if it hadn't been for those selfsame documents, and for the power that your country has and my country has to subpoena those documents and bring them here to tell their story?

And I say to you gentlemen that, just as there is no doubt about the power—this isn't just my opinion; this is the record that is talking—and just as there is no doubt about the combinations, there is no doubt at all about the purpose. And, remember, I started out by saying that if you find the power, if you find the combination and if you find the purpose to affect the prices one iota, that is a violation of the Sherman Act. Because Congress, our representative body, has determined that there is a greater public interest, a greater benefit for our country and 3845 its citizens in the long run if the Sherman Act is enforced and if free competition prevails, than there is in permitting private capital in combination to determine for itself, willy-nilly, who shall be benefited and who shall not be benefited, and when and where and how.

The real benefit to look for is to keep this commerce clean and untrammeled and uninterfered with. And if it is to be interfered with, let it be interfered with by the state, so there will be some responsibility, some officials that can be brought to account—not tortured where they will by the private avarice and temporary expediency of private men, that are not responsible to anybody except themselves, and to courts and juries when they are exposed.

And, just as there is no doubt about the power or about the combination, so there is no doubt about the purpose to affect prices. And, oh, how they have struggled to avoid that conclusion.

They have told you about helping the independent refiners. They have told you about buying their needs—that they had always bought. They told you about doing something constructive—about assisting stabilization, a word that they can torture into anything they please. But, oh, how reluctant they have been to tell you about 3846 their real objective, which was price.

Gentlemen, a great deal, I feel sure, is going to be made by the good lawyers that follow me for the defense, of the fact that all of these major purchases weren't at the high prices published by those journals. And I tell you that that makes no difference, either.

When people are in combination to fix prices, it doesn't make a particle of difference who led the price up, which one charged the higher price.

And so, here, when you have got the major companies in combination with the independent refiners, it doesn't make a particle of difference—it just makes it all the more distasteful—to see that the independent refiners, those co-conspirators are the ones that charged the higher prices, in the main—charged them, to whom? To the jobbers and the dealers and the brokers that were buying from them. So that the major companies bought at the low the majority of their purchases in these pools, bought them at the low of the journal, or chiseled below that and bought them an eighth or a quarter of a cent under the low. And the explanation is perfectly plain.

If you are an independent refiner and in this conspiracy, and you have got Standard and Socony and Shell and Sinclair and Tide Water and the rest of them 3847 insuring you, underwriting you, guaranteeing you, standing there ready to take all your surplus at a good price, at progressively increased prices—you are not going to be likely to sell the rest of your gasoline to the jobbers and the brokers and the consumers at lower prices. The major company business is far more attractive, while it lasts. They are sure of their money. They are sure that the major companies are going to be long-suffering, as these documents show they were, as to quality. And these documents show that major after major took gasoline that it didn't want. The Skelly documents show it, and The Pure Oil documents show it, as I shall read you. And they knew that it was good, regular business, with a responsible purchaser; and they are going to get this progressively higher price, at the low or a little bit below the low of those journals. Then, are they going to sell the rest of their gasoline to the independent jobbers and brokers at a lower figure? They may for a while, but the majority of it is going to move at that higher figure.

And so I tell you, gentlemen, that the major company purchases of all or practically all of the surplus gasoline, that otherwise would have moved at lower prices, was the predominant, direct force that held those prices up there on that cruel level month after month.

3848 And it makes not one iota of difference—it is a mere attempt at confusion—to bring in here day after day a smart accountant who, aided by fifteen others, working night and day, put little dots and dashes along these charts, hung up flag after flag here—and now, just weighing the two sides in this case, I think it is a good illustration for you:

For you to weigh that "Know-all," the Miller who testified for the defense, and who knew everything and was willing to testify to it whether asked or not, with all his confused dots and dashes and charts and flags—weigh him against that little G-man, another Miller, who took the stand for the Government, and frankly, and without painting it at all, told you just what the facts were as he found them, and didn't attempt to be an expert on the entire case. And remember that in the last few days of this trial, how he had been able, by making spot checks of some of their charts, to expose them for what they were—and I am alluding now to those Danciger figures, where you had dots and dashes, supposedly sales to jobbers and consumers by Danciger above the low, in those four months, of third grade gasoline—that were really sales of a better grade, a grade which habitually and normally was sold by 3849 Danciger at a higher price because of a guaranteed higher octane.

And I say, gentlemen, that if in a little spot check that can be made of that exhibit, and can reveal that every one of his dots and dashes was erroneous in those months, then you can put what weight you please to the rest of those charts.

And I don't care what the charts show—it is overwhelmingly established here that what they show was, month after month, an artificial, rigged price, obtaining throughout this entire area. And there is evidence in the case, documentary evidence that the independent refiners were jumping this price up just as fast as they could jump it.

The Court: We will recess now until two o'clock.

(Thereupon, at 12:15 o'clock p. m., a recess was taken until two o'clock p. m., of the same day, Monday, January 17, 1938.)

3850 Mr. Lewin: Gentlemen, I certainly have no disposition to take up any more valuable time than is necessary, but bear in mind that we have been over this story four months, have thousands of pages of record; that the government's case closed before Thanksgiving Day, and that since that time you gentlemen have been hearing mostly the evidence of the defendants. I think that is probably justification for taking some time to allude to these details.

When we recessed, having discussed the power and having discussed the combination, I was addressing myself with you to the purpose which is so clearly revealed in all this evidence of price, to affect the price level, and when I say affect the price level, and when I have said affect the price level, I do not mean any incidental effect to the price level. I mean a direct level; I mean directly raising, an intention to directly raise and maintain that price 3851 level, that tank car price level.

In the opening statement of the defense delivered to you months ago it was stated that the buying activities of the defendants may have contributed to this restoration of gasoline prices at the refinery.

Well, gentlemen, the evidence shows it is stronger than that. It isn't any "may" or any "might". It is "did." Did! Because they had the power to and because they had the purpose to.

And counsel for the defendants in his opening statement asked the question—I am paraphrasing—"how much it affected that price is hard to say."

It is the position of the government, gentlemen, on this record, that it affected it materially, directly and materially. And when I say that I do not mean of course that this was the only force in the field affecting prices.

The Connally Act that you gentlemen have heard so much about, that was passed on Washington's birthday, 1935, and became effective March 1st, 1935, by the establishment of a tender board in East Texas, was effective in shutting off hot oil, illegal oil, illegal gasoline made from illegal oil coming out of East Texas, and keeping it out of the channels of interstate commerce, and to the ex-3852 tent that it reduced that supply of hot oil of course it had its effect, a legal effect, a proper effect on price; and I would not be blind enough to say that there were not other forces.

We were coming out of a depression; there was greater seasonal demand, although the documents are full of evidence that all through the spring of 1935 there was poor jobber demand because of bad weather conditions. Jacobi's letters written from week to week give time and again that same information, that the jobbers were not buying.

But nevertheless of course there was an increase in seasonal demand, and there was a better feeling, there was an improvement. It was not an emergency time like 1933 when the banks closed. It was a time of brighter outlook, and I would not stand here and say for one minute, gentlemen, that the refinery allocations that were put into effect in 1934 as the result of the refinery amendment to the code—legally put into effect proper agencies under governmental regulation and revision, which cut down some of the supply of gasoline at the refineries—I would not say that those allocations of refineries did not have its effect also on the raise in the tank car price.

This so-called distress gasoline was not hot oil, it was not illegal, it was not manufactured beyond the legal allocations under the code of the independent refiners. It was proper gasoline, it was proper gasoline to be sold and not to be cornered; and I say to you, gentlemen, and I think you will agree, that those forces I have alluded to, the better general conditions, increased demand, cutting down of the supply by taking out the illegal supply, holding down refinery runs, although they always exceeded the estimates—I think you will agree that that was not what caused the shift of that price graph.

It had its bullish tendency, and its proper bullish tenddency, but that is not what clamped that price on the people of the Standard of Indiana territory without deviation except for the slightest gain in the fall of 1935, all through the summer months of 1935 and the fall and into the winter, when there was an increase right in the dead of winter, when demand is at its very lowest.

It takes a far more flexible agency at work, gentlemen, than that, not only to boost the price to where they wanted it, but to hold it there, like it was clamped with iron; so that the jobbers tell you from the witness stand that they did not even have to look in the Journals; they knew beforehand what the Journals carried day after day, 3854 the prices that they were paying under their contracts fixed for them.

The Connally Act cutting off hot oil, the legal allocations of the refineries under the code during those first few months increased a summer demand, and better general conditions, are not the causes of that price graph which these defendants themselves point to as the cause.

It would have to be a very strange coincidence, gentlemen, if increased consumer demand could be so regulated that it would not only shoot that price up there where it went step by step, to June, and let it there and held it there—it would have to be a very fine adjustment of consumer demand to do that; and when the record tells you that for years before the price had fluctuated up and down because competitive forces were operating.

No, the reason it could be held there was because it was manipulated, and manipulated by these defendants with their pools, and those pools were flexible enough and well planned enough and well supervised and guarded by them enough, that they could buy just so much and just at the right price.

You heard in the evidence about judicious placement of orders. Well, gentlemen, that means placing their orders where they would do the most good, and if an inde-3855 pendent refiner happened to have some of this surplus gasoline which the brokers might have bought, Jacobi and McDowell were on the alert with Bourque; Cline and Buckley were on the alert in East Texas, to find out how much it was and to see that it was taken at around the market price.

Now, I have read to you gentlemen that letter of Buckley's, that confidential letter in which he claims credit for the buying pools for this raise in prices, for the difference, as he says, between three and one-eighth in February and the low price of four and one-half f. o. b. refinery which prevailed May 17th, 1935.

Here is a communication from the vice president of Shell to the president of Shell, March 13, 1935:

> "The activities of the Federal and State Tender Boards in East Texas, coupled with the 'buying movement' "—

He did not talk about a selling movement or anything of that kind in East Texas. He talked about a buying movement "organized by major interests".

He would have you believe organized by the independent refiners innocently, on the side. (Continuing reading)

> "which is not getting under way, is responsible for the improvement in Group 3 and East Texas prices; several hundred cars of distress gasoline which were over-hanging the Kansas-Oklahoma market have > 3856 been disposed of through the buying movement and > to jobbers who filled their storage in anticipation of rising prices. With improved seasonal demand in view and a continuation of the buying movement, it is anticipated that prices will strengthen by approximately one-half cent over the next thirty to forty-five days."

Warner, vice president of Tide Water, writes to Collins, president of Tide Water April 6th, 1935, referring to the prices jobbers have had to pay under their contracts, and says:

> "Published quotations advanced again this week on all grades of motor gasoline. Prices have advanced on an average one-eighth of a cent to one-fourth of a cent for the last six or seven weeks. Many observers are of the opinion that a gradual increase has a better chance to build a more firm and lasting structure than a rapid advance would have. This gradual advance in prices and increase in seasonal consumption has given hope of a satfactory market for the next few months."
>
> "Major companies have continued quite active buyers on the spot market this week, seeking to eliminate any possible chance of distress gasoline being offered. The improvement in the market > 3857 the last few weeks is considered directly due to the cooperative efforts of major companies participating in the movement."

3858 You gentlemen heard all these before, but I wonder if they struck you as they strike me now.

Warner, vice president of Tide Water, to Collins again, writing April 20:

> "The present general advance of prices has been unlike several other market advances, as no artificial stimulants have been employed. Prices have been boosted by actual purchases through the support of major company cooperation in eliminating surplus gasoline stocks at various small refineries. For this reason, most observers feel the market will continue firm for the next few months if major companies will continue to give active support in absorbing a small percentage of the gasoline production on the open market. Published quotations were again advanced one-eighth of a cent this week on all grades of Motor Gasoline."

The same gentleman writing to Collins, September 14, 1935, long after the Code, way down here in the fall of 1935:

> "While the market tone is described as somewhat softer due to various influencing factors, nevertheless, refiners, through their combined efforts—"

"Combined"? What does that mean? Combination.

> "—combined efforts, have prevented any downward trend in the published gasoline quotation list."

3859 Same gentleman to Collins October 5, 1935, a month later:

> "The most outstanding feature in support of the present market is inter-refinery buying. Major companies have continued active purchasers in East Texas and reports from that district show that only small lots of gasoline have been available for shipment the past few days. Most refiners by Wednesday were reported sold up for the remainder of the week."

Same gentleman to the same gentleman, Warner to Collins, October 12, 1935:

> "This inter-refinery buying is considered by reliable observers to be one of the chief supporting factors of published prices."

Not only is the tank car market going up and being supported up there by the tank car market published by those journals—why? Because these major companies almost to a man have signed up their jobbers on a uniform contract whereby the jobber pays for every gallon of gasoline he gets under his contract the average of those published prices. And he can't shop around and get a better contract, as those jobbers, one by one, on that stand swore to.

Hog-tied! Tied to the uniform contract from 3860 which there is no escape to those journal prices.

Could they leave the major companies and go into the independent field? And if they had to buy distress gasoline, they find this little bit that is there bid up by the major companies in combination.

Here is another company, Shell: Lakin to Fraser, vice-president to president, December 14, 1935—we are in the winter now, months after the Code:

> "While the demand for gasoline is slow—"

Of course, it is, in the dead of winter—

> "—the market is fairly firm, primarily as a result of strong inter-refinery buying—"

And I am going later, I hope, to tell you about that new impetus that these conspirators gave to their plan as the winter approached, redoubled their efforts to hold that line against the jobbers and the consumers with all the zeal of the Dutch Boys holding the dike.

Warner to Collins of Tide Water, December 14, 1935:

> "Large quantities of gasoline have been moving out of East Texas for export or coastwise movement this week. Whenever support from Gulf Coast buyers is lacking—"

The Gulf Coast buyers are the majors in the East Texas market—

3861 "—in the East Texas market, as it was about two weeks ago, gasoline from that district moves northward in competition to the natural marketing territory of Oklahoma, North Texas, and Kansas refiners. This invariably disturbs supply and demand to the extent that prices are generally lowered. These periodical disturbances, however, have been less frequent the last six or eight months."

This was written in December. You know where the "last six or eight months" would take him? Right back to the beginning of this scene.

> "—because of the regularity with which major company buyers have absorbed all the material in the East Texas area. Information from East Texas today is especially—"
>
> "Jobber spot demand for gasoline has been dull throughout the week. Inter-refinery purchases apparently have furnished the necessary outlet for the current quantity offered in excess of jobber requirements."

So we find to our horror, not only were they operating the Mid-Continent pool and the East Texas pool, not only bidding up the prices, but diverting the supply.

Gulf Coast buyers! Big major companies passing 3862 by the Gulf Coast and buying from the independent refiners in East Texas and taking it to the Gulf Coast to divert it from this territory where it would compete with their gasoline in the Standard of Indiana territory.

Warner to Collins, January 4, 1936. And we are in a new year.

> "The tank car gasoline market entered the new year this week in the same steadiness that has been exhibited during the final months of 1935. Refiners are quite pleased over the gradual improvement dur> ing this period and many observers are apparently optimistic over the prospects for this year."

I bet they were!

> "The more conservative are hopeful of seeing continued improvement, but are more cautious in making predictions. They contend the gasoline market would quickly revert to weakness in case major refiners should see fit to discontinue their buying program in East Texas."

Talk about power! If the major companies should see fit! They hold the happiness and the well-being and the chance for success of their competitors, the little men, right in their own vest pockets, and could do what they pleased.

March 28, 1936, which is Exhibit 295:

> "Inter-refinery buying of gasoline for the last several months has been a most important factor in > 3863 bringing the market around to a firm position for the opening of spring gasoline demand."

September 20, 1935, Jacobi to Maguire—Maguire the president or vice president—I think he is president of Wadhams Company:

> "Gasoline purchases by some of the larger refiners have strengthened the tank car gasoline market."

Jacobi claiming credit for it.

Jacobi again to Maguire, April 26, 1935:

> "Tank car prices for gasoline and kerosene are up one-eighth cents since last week. Another three-tenths of a cent advance in Standard Oil of Indiana service station prices is expected next week."

Of course, it is "expected", because the retail price, gentlemen, by the uncontradicted evidence in this case, the price to the consumer, the price that the consumer pays, even if he buys out of the very service station owned and operated by the major companies themselves, whether normal or subnormal, is hung right on that tank car market, right on that spot market published in those quotations, and varies with it. If that price goes up, the retail price goes up. They don't move up quite so fast.

> 3864 "It is pointed out that refiners are getting about $100 per tank car for gasoline than they were obtaining sixty days ago."

Is that self-congratulation on his own effort?

> "Dust storms and poor weather generally in the central west, has been holding jobber buying down to a minimum."

Jacobi, who knows the facts and is reporting the facts, doesn't attribute this rise to jobber demand. He tells you that "dust storms and poor weather generally in the central west, has been holding jobber buying down to a minimum" and nevertheless is being taken by the pool.

Jacobi writes again, March 22, 1935:

> "63/70 gasoline has advanced to four and three-quarter cents group 3 and I expect further price advances on both grades next week."

We have come to a pretty pass when this employee of Wadhams and Socony interest, can predict like Isaiah.

Jacobi to Maguire, March 15, 1935:

> "The writer has been busy this week on tank car stabilization work, and thus far results are gratifying. Our committee decided on a price of three and three-quarters cents for third grade—"
>
> Decided on!
>
> 3865 "—and four and three-quarters cents for Q—"
>
> That is regular—
>
> "—for next week. Purchasing companies, including our own units, are paying these prices today. Since this stabilization work started, an advance in price of about three-eighths cents per gallon on both grades has resulted."
> "Jobber demand has decreased somewhat the past week, and some good weather would now be very welcome, from the viewpoint of our work here."

Jobber demand is going down. Major demand, artificially created for this purpose, is going up—his committee decided on it. Who was his committee? McDowell, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation vice-president; Tuttle, one of the managers of the Empire Company, one of the Cities Services' own subsidiaries; Jacobi of Wadhams and Socony-Vacuum interests; those three men, acting with Ashton as their mentor, decided these facts. And what was Mr. McDowell's pitiful explanation of that written letter?

Of that meeting of March 14th, he said he called the meeting because he heard from Jacobi that he had found some additional gasoline. Those three men discussed who would be the logical buyers, which one of the major com-3866 panies, not only of their three major companies, but of this whole group of major companies.

And he was made to testify that they also discussed market prices and felt the market was stronger.

And Mr. McDowell says he couldn't obtain for third grade gasoline—couldn't obtain third grade gasoline at three and five-eighths, and thought he would have to pay three and three-quarters.

Now, isn't that ridiculous? Here is surplus gasoline crying, as they say, for a home, bound to be sold under the market. "Surplus"; what does it mean? "Over and above."

McDowell found he couldn't get it for three and five-eighths; he had to pay three and three-quarters; which jibes exactly with Jacobi's letter.

Then he swears there (indicating), there was no discussion as to what each would pay. He simply announced what he would pay, three and three-quarters.

Gentlemen, which will you take?

As I said before we adjourned for lunch, it doesn't make a bit of difference who pays the higher prices, the jobbers or the consumers, it goes back to the conspiracy and all these major companies that profit by it.

This major company pool is self-confessed to be 3867 the predominating factor in directly affecting those prices as charged in this indictment. And, of course, those independent refiners helped the matter along, too. They were in the deal.

The defendants themselves, introduced some exhibits, 1025 and 1026, showing that during March—from March 1, 1935, to April 30, 1936, the defendant companies purchased 6,920 cars of regular and third grade in the Mid-Continent field, 75.2 percent of which was purchased at or above the low of the Chicago Journal of Commerce, and 72.4 percent was purchased at or above the low of Platt's Oilgram.

Not only were they taking away surplus that otherwise would be sold lower, but by making the majority of it, they were buying it at less than that market.

Mr. Donovan speaking for them in his opening statement, told us that, too. I quote: "Defendants paid at or above the low of the market price, as reflected in the publications."

On March 8, 1935, an official of Shell named Ruether writes to the vice president, Lakin, a defendant here:

> "I have been in touch with Mr. Winget of Cush-> 3868 ing Refining and Gasoline Company, who tells me he > feels that prices should move faster—"

There is Mr. Winget of the independent refiners—it may well be that those independent refiners lead the prices.

> "—that prices discussed should be reached by the 11th, and is quoting today, three and five-eighths and four and five-eighths on low and middle octane respectively."

3869 But, gentlemen, when this scheme was hatched, you remember that they called in a committee of these independent refiners to see if they would cooperate with them. And they had at that March 5th meeting, in Kansas City, this same Mr. Winget, of the Cushing Company; and they had Mr. Simmons of the Rock Island Company; and they had some others there,—independent refiners.

And did they call one of those key men to this stand to show that they were benefiting the independent refiners,—doing it for their benefit? They called Dave Gray, of the Waggoner Company to testify here that the Waggoner Company didn't have any distress gasoline at all. You remember him, don't you? You remember the letters he was confronted with, over his own signature, and the letters that were written to him, which showed he was selling it to the group of major companies and in contact with Bourque in regard to it?

And they called a couple from East Texas,—called Marion Travis. Why didn't they call Winget and Roy Jones and Henry May, and these key independent refiners, instead of putting on the stand subordinate office clerks, who, when they were taken on cross-examination knew nothing?

3870 I know why they didn't call them. Because just as Dave Gray was subjected to cross-examination, shown up for what he was, with his own document, just so those same gentlemen would have been cross-examined and been made to state how much they made. How poor they were when this conspiracy really got full tilt and the price went up to that level. And they would have been asked something about the temporary—because that is all it was,—temporary benefit that they were receiving. Because, as one of these letters says, when the major companies, so long as they don't cease to buy,—or words to that effect,—these results are going to continue.

But I have just touched on the documents, gentlemen. I wish I could take the time to talk on the testimony. Jacobi testified on that stand that at St. Louis they discussed the price. I am quoting now.

> "They certainly discussed price and expressed the opinion that they hoped the price would advance."

And he was asked,

> "What was the necessity of buying or finding markets for the distress gasoline?"

He answered,

> "It was evident that they couldn't find it themselves".

3871 "Question: Why were the major companies at that meeting interested in assisting these refiners in finding a market; was that discussed?

"Answer: Yes, sir, it must have been discussed,

"Question: All right, what was the discussion as to that.

"Answer: The major companies were interested, naturally, in trying not only to help the small refiners but help themselves.

"Question: How would they help themselves?

"Answer: By the removal of the distress gasoline.

"Question: Through the raising of the price?

"Answer: Naturally, the price would respond.

"Question: And that would be the way in which they would help themselves, is that right?

"Answer: Yes, sir.

"Question: It is gasoline that they would have to shunt around to get a purchaser for?

"Answer: Yes.

"Question: When they sold it they would sell it on the spot market?

"Answer: Yes.

"Question: And if your plan didn't take it up, they would sell it at lower prices than you, each of 3872 you, wanted to maintain by the plan. Is that right?

"Answer: They would have to sell it at any price they could get for it.

"Question: And those prices, you were afraid, would be lower than the prices you wanted to maintain by the plan?

"Answer: Lower than the market, yes, sir.

"Question: Lower than the price you wanted to maintain as the price?

"Answer: Well, I can only answer that 'Yes'.

"Question: If it were permitted to be sold at this lower price, it would be in turn make a lower market, wouldn't it?

"Answer: Yes.

"Question: And therefore the purpose of your plan was to prevent that and make a higher market; isn't that right?

"Answer: Yes, we hoped a higher market would result."

And concerning the price recommendations in the program, and you remember that he made the price recommendations, six or seven, or eight or nine, he didn't know which,—as many as that, price recommendations, between June and March, when the price was going up. And he said he felt that the trade journals would hear of 3873 these prices. And the gist of the whole thing was that I felt that prices would go lower if that situation existed.

> "Question: And did they mention the possible effect on these trade journals of higher prices, if you paid them?
> "Answer: I believe so, yes."

In regard to the March 14th meeting, and I told you what McDowell said about it, he said this: "We all felt that if the trade journals found that the preponderance of sales by small refiners to major companies were a preponderance that those prices that the trade journals discovered would be very important to them, as indicating a trend, at least. Because, I understand now"—

Now he understands,—

> "That all the trade journals do is report jobber prices. We felt that in paying a fair price for this gasoline."

—and you all heard Jacobi. He testified with a great deal of pride, a slick, shrewd light in his eyes, what a hard buyer he was down there. And then, you remember, his Honor took him up on that. I can remember it as though it were yesterday and disclosed that after this buying movement were started, which raised this tank car price, Jacobi 3784 gets religion. Instead of being the hard buyer that he prided himself as being, now he is a benefactor,—a charitable benefactor to the independent refiners.

> "We felt that in paying a fair price for this gasoline that the small refiners would move this gasoline at a fair price, that would affect—they would be able to ask a higher price with their regular trade."

These dots and dashes that were on that chart that Mr. Miller put in evidence; their regular trade—dots and dashes at the higher price.

These men felt if they paid the low of the journal, or around that, that these independent refiners would be able to charge a higher price to their regular trade.

That is what they did.

> "And would obtain a higher price, and the trade journals, in contacting those small refiners, from whom I understand they obtain most of their information, would hear of those higher prices, as sold to jobbers, and so report them."

What could be clearer as to purpose than that?

3875 His one eye on the trade journals, and he testified, as that price went up, step by step, as the result of his price recommendations, he and his colleagues in combination were watching the trade journals to see that those prices went up, step by step, to ~~the same degree~~.

> "Question: When your committee had this meeting in March, you knew at that time that if the prices of gasoline in that field were raised that they would be reflected in the quotations in the Journal?
>
> "Answer: Yes, sir, we felt they would for the reasons that I mentioned.
>
> "Question: Now, will you answer my question as to the discussion between you and Mr. McDowell and Mr. Tuttle?
>
> "Answer: We felt that the prices paid by the major companies would certainly have an effect upon the trade journals, as they were reported to the trade journals in many cases."

And so, gentlemen, I am not talking about a purpose to indirectly affect, or incidentally affect, or casually affect these prices. I am talking about a full-fledged, straight-arm purpose, directed to affect these prices, and reap 3876 the benefit, as I will show you, the benefit they would reap.

Price recommendations. Those three men, Tuttle and Jacobi and McDowell divided the major companies among them. Jacobi took a group; McDowell took a group; Tuttle took a group. And those three men met there at his office, once a week, and sometimes oftener, in Tulsa; in constant contact; and they discussed the market, because McDowell said that they didn't get together without discussing the market. And by market he meant the price.

And then, gentlemen, six or seven recommendations of price; and he was asked on cross-examination if it might be eight or nine. He said it might be eight, might be nine, he wasn't sure, during that period. And I want you to count with me on that graph, what I term the stairs by which they climb to satisfy their avarice and their greed. These were the stairs that they waltzed the dancing partners up to this high dance plateau here where they could all have a good time. That is the way they talked. Here is the ladder of roses, and here is the garden of love, right in front of them.

Count the steps; one, two, three, four, five, six, seven. If he made seven recommendations, there are his seven stairs; seven increases that he was watching for.

3877 And then you will recall that he made no further recommendations after here (indicating). He made one here in the first week in June, after the Code had expired. And then they were high enough. Buckley expressed some concern about raising the prices too high. In one of his letters you will recall, he was afraid, or expressed a fear if they raised the price too high it might cause the independent refiners to make too much; so the major companies would have to take not only that surplus, six or seven hundred cars a month, but more. So they had gotten where they wanted. Right here. (Indicating) And there was no further price recommendations. They simply held the line,—maintained the price, until they got here, in January. And then there was a crude oil advance.

I want to say something about that, because that crude oil advance was caused by this very thing. They had it in their minds all the time, as early as April. Buckley is writing about a possible crude advance. He said the agitation that was existing back here in February for a crude cut, that is, a cut in the price of crude, that propaganda was changing; didn't hear any more of that now that they had gotten the tank car price of gasoline up where they wanted it. Down here on the floor. You hear the 3878 same thing from Jacobi, only he thinks that the crude advance won't come until spring.

But it went beyond their fondest hopes. The majors were in the saddle to such an extent, had such a firm grip on the situation, so they could afford to have a price rise. When? A most unheard of thing,—a price rise in the price of crude oil in the dead of winter, when the demand for gasoline products is at its very lowest.

And then you get the vicious circle. Up goes the price rise for crude oil, in January. And they raise the gasoline price on top of that, one-half a cent, by a price recommendation from this committee; right here in the dead of winter. So that they built another plateau,—another dance floor for the dancing partners, a little higher up. A balcony now. And they are ready to do what they will with any petroleum products. They are ready now for another crude advance whenever they choose to bring one about.

And yet the defense would have you believe that the causations are not the other way, that the price of crude caused the rise in the price of gasoline.

3879 The evidence is perfectly clear that these conspirators hoped for and intended and expected that when they got that price of gasoline up there (indicating), good and high, that they could jack that price of crude up and hold it there—and I have got documents that support that very statement.

Oh, gentlemen, don't be misled, I beg you, because all the details, material and immaterial, all the details of a long indictment haven't been fully and completely established in the very words in which the indictment is written. You gentlemen can distinguish, and I know you will distinguish between material allegations and immaterial allegations. And you know that many of those minor allegations were inserted in that indictment in good faith, to explain the charges and the substance of the indictment. And you gentlemen know that when his Honor submits this case to you, it means that there is sufficient evidence upon which you can, if you want, and are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt, to find that the substantial allegations of this indictment—the power, the combination, the intent to raise prices, and the raising of prices, are established.

And yet I feel perfectly sure, just as though I am hearing it now, that these gentlemen that follow me will try to make a lot of considerations, such as these:
3880 There is an allegation in that indictment that these major companies purchased fifty per cent of the production of the independent refiners in those two fields. And that is a mistake, because they produce a great deal more than they sell on the spot market. They have contracts, and they have regular trade, and there wasn't that high a percentage of their total production that was purchased by the major companies—and I say it doesn't make an iota of difference.

I think the proof shows—I think the opening statement says, and I suppose the proof shows, that from fifteen to nineteen per cent was purchased by the major companies, of the total production of these independent refiners in the Mid-Continent; and about twenty-five per cent, twenty-four or twenty-five per cent of the total production of the East Texas refiners.

The thing that is important, gentlemen, is that these major companies intended to and did buy up all of it, all of the surplus, all of the so-called distress, all of that which could influence the price, whether it was fifty per cent or twenty-five percent or fifteen per cent. And enough was purchased, 600 cars a month in each of the fields, six or seven hundred cars a month in each of the fields—a drop in the bucket—to hold that price line.

3881 And McDowell testified, as I alluded to a moment ago, that it was the function of that sub-committee to watch, to see when any distress gasoline made its appearance, and call a meeting quickly and find a buyer for it. So that the intent was to cover the entire distress gasoline.

Buckley to Brandli, March 7th, 1936:

> "Today, the market trend in East Texas is upward. Twelve refiners will ship federally tendered gasoline in tank cars during the coming week. Two of these plants have shut down, and will be shipping from inventory.
>
> "Stocks of straight run gasoline available for shipment as of Saturday night total slightly more than 60,000 barrels, of which Burford holds approximately 30,000 barrels."

He has a full and complete statement of how much there is.

> "Total unsold manufacture for the coming week is estimated as 55,000 barrels, for which orders are at present in sight for approximately 40,000 barrels."

Lakin to Fraser, May 9, 1935:

3882 and he spoke about the East Texas situation—

> "—and such surplus material as accumulates"—
>
> "such",

that means all of it—

> "—is promptly lifted by major interests for shipment to the East Coast."

Warner to Collins, June 22nd, 1935:

> "The major companies have continued taking the greater portion of the East Texas gasoline output, and have also been active in relieving the small refiners in other districts of any surplus gasoline that might through necessity be forced on the open market as distress material."

Lakin to Fraser, October 2nd, '35:

> "The small amount of surplus material available in Mid-Continent and Texas areas is promptly removed by inter-refinery buying."

Warner to Collins, October the 12th, 1935:

> "These additional orders, plus the regular weekly purchases from the East Texas group"— and bear that in mind, when you come to consider whether or not they had a real scheme here—

3883 "regular weekly purchases from the East Texas group, will entirely absorb all the material available through the end of the coming week."

Lakin to Fraser, of Shell:

> "A little surplus has developed in the Mid-Continent and East Texas markets, but this will be removed during the succeeding week through interrefinery buying."

Mr. Thomas: What date is that?

Mr. Lewin: November 20, '35.

Lakin to Fraser, December the 6th, '35, away down there:

> "The price reduction in low octane East Texas material which occurred last week was reflected in the Group 3 market"— that is, the Tulsa market—

> "—which experienced a similar decline during the week under review."

That is this little dip, down in here (indicating on chart).

> "—The possibility of any further reduction is extremely remote, as latest figures indicate that Mid-Continent refiners are cutting their runs" —

3884 curtailing production,

> "—to conform to seasonal decline in consumption"

Approaching the winter, you see—demand falling off; you can expect lower prices—but the independent refiners are curtailing their runs. And he continues:

> "—and, further, a heavy buying movement in East Texas is getting 'under way'."

A heavy one—they have already had a heavy one, and here is a heavier one, down in the fall of '35, after the Code has been dead and gone for months—

> "—which will no doubt relieve that area of any distress material."

Warner to Collins, January 4th, '36, in the next year:

> "Reports on the East Texas situation today show that refinery district to be in fair shape, as interrefinery buying has continued to absorb most of the gasoline production of that area."

Warner to Collins, January the 25th, 1935—in the worst part of the winter; when everybody is worried about overproduction and over-stocks, and bad demand and terrible weather:

3885 "The steady demand created by major companies' active purchasing has kept this field"— that is, East Texas—

> "from being a disturbing factor in the Mid-Continent gasoline market."

Lakin to Fraser, March the 21st, 1936—away down at the end of that chart (indicating):

> "A material improvement has occurred in East > Texas. Surplus stocks in that field have been taken off the market by inter-refinery purchases."

Lakin to Fraser, August 9th, 1935:

> "The gasoline market continues strong, with shipments held at current high levels. Surplus gasoline in Mid-Continent area is, so far as we can learn, confined to a single refinery, Waggoner of Electra, Texas, but this surplus is being readily absorbed."

Taking it all. And Waggoner of Electra, Texas, is Dave Gray's company—Standard of Indiana's dancing partner, the company from whom Standard of Indiana, with sales of a billion gallons of gasoline a year, was taking a paltry 75 cars a month—under, I suppose, some claim of need.

3886 December 13, 1935, Jacobi to Maguire:

> "The East Texas field is well supplied with orders for interstate movement. Third grade gasoline is priced once again at four and three-quarters, Group 3, trade papers,"—

That is, the Chicago Journal of Commerce and Platt's Oilgram—

> "—having posted this price in the past few days."

And so on. I am not going to stop to read the rest of them—document after document, that show they took it all.

And if they took it all, what difference does it make that the grand jury in the indictment alleges that they took fifty per cent and it turns out to be twenty-five per cent in one field, and less in the other, of their total production?

And there are other red herrings that have been saved for you gentlemen, I am sure, shortly to be urged here.

I am sure much will be made of the fact that the Government voluntarily dismissed, at the close of its case certain of the defendant companies—some of them who had participated in the conspiracy and had enjoyed its fruits, but had dissolved, so that there was no company there to try, 3887 except its officers, who made them do it.

Much will be made of the fact that his Honor dismissed The Gulf Company and The Texas Company at the close of the Government's case, back there before Thanksgiving.

But I think his Honor will instruct you that it isn't necessary for the Government to prove that every one that was indicted is guilty. It is a heavy burden that rests on the Government, as you gentlemen know. And it is not necessary to prove that every one named in the indictment was guilty; nor is it necessary for us to prove, or to indict and prove that everybody connected with the conspiracy was guilty.

There may well have been other conspirators—there were some to the grand jurors unknown. And when the Court dismissed those companies, he didn't have the benefit of Mr. Arnott's testimony—and you will remember it, how he stressed the participation of Mr. Hartmann, the Vice-President of The Gulf Company, and showed him to be a more active participator than almost any other of his colleagues. And I say, whether those companies were innocent or guilty—and they are out of this case—they did nothing, so far as this record shows, not one thing to break down the effect of this conspiracy that was carried on 3888 by these other majors, not one thing. They bought surplus gasoline in East Texas, and they bought it at the low of the market, and they bought it through the East Texas Refiners' Association.

And, oh, what a peculiar association that was, gentlemen, that East Texas Refiners' Association, that they would have you believe was a pure creature of those independent refiners, trying to find purchasers for their gasoline.

And in the opening statement, the claim was actually made—in the opening statement of counsel for the defense:

> "With regard to East Texas, no understanding was entered into of any kind or of any nature."

Now, gentlemen, stack that statement against the testimony in this case—against Arnott's testimony, if you will—against his letters and his communications; his letters with Marcell, that he had been busying himself he had been before the Allocators' meeting, working with Buckley, planning with Carnes and Buckley, holding meetings of major companies over and over again in New York and Chicago, to deal with East Texas; helping Buckley all the way down through the year, long after the Code, or after any 3889 time that he could ever claim to be Stabilizer of anything; working with Buckley down in the fall of '35; sending a telegram to Frueauff of Cities Service in January of '36, that the East Texas situation needs some looking after.

Just stack all that overwhelming evidence against that statement in the opening statement of counsel, made to you gentlemen, that as to East Texas—

> "With regard to East Texas, no understanding was entered into of any kind or of any nature."

And consider this other statement in the opening statement about East Texas, if you will—right out of the opening statement of counsel:

> "The Association's activities—" that is, the East Texas Refiners' Association—

> "—were all directed to an effort to find those who > were willing to buy gasoline, whether major purchasing companies, independent purchasing companies, brokers or jobbers."

Now gentlemen, I ask you. You heard Buckley, and you heard Cline. And the testimony is that their efforts to get any other buyers but major company buyers were negligible. Cline couldn't even tell us whether they sold as much as fifty cars throughout the entire period to brokers 3890 and jobbers and independent refiners. It was a major company, and a major company almost unanimously association. And that evidence overwhelms that kind of statement, that this association was formed to get buyers among the jobbers and the independent refiners. There just isn't anything to it.

And there is another curious thing about the East Texas Refiners' Association. It sold only at the low of the journals. Now, isn't that a curious association? And it only sold surplus gasoline, gasoline that the people couldn't sell otherwise. And it sold it to a regular list of major companies who were buying, brought in there by Buckley, who travels all over the Eastern half of the United States time and again as the liaison man—in Mr. Arnott's own words, the liaison man, the link between them and the supporters of the East Texas pool.

Oh, I say, don't be misled by the fact that The Gulf and The Texas were dismissed out at the close of the Government's case. And don't be misled by the fact that the Tide Water Company had gone out of business after it had enjoyed the fruits of the conspiracy; and that the Cities Service Export Oil Company, as corporations are able to do, merged with somebody else or dissolved or what not, or went through some other corporate shenanigan, so that they are no longer here to pay the 3891 penalty for what they did.

And here is another thing that is going to be stressed—and I hope you gentlemen will treat it, too, with just the same kind of contempt:

Much is going to be made of the fact that the Government didn't adduce, in its opinion, sufficient evidence to hold those trade journals, and voluntarily dismissed them at the close of the Government's case.

They are not here any more. But that doesn't militate one degree against the fact, as alleged in the indictment, that those trade journals were the chief instrumentality—they may have been innocent; at least, we couldn't prove their guilt—but they published that spot market, that rigged, artificial market, day after day. And if they hadn't published it, then the jobbers wouldn't have had to pay those prices under those contracts.

Those journal men knew that the jobbers were signed up on those contracts that fixed the price as the average of what they published on the spot market. And they knew the enormous responsibility that rested on their shoulders by reason of that fact. And they knew, because they were in contact with these conspirators—3892 Steiger testified he was in contact with Jacobi, he was in contact with Buckley, he was in contact with Fitzgerald, he was in contact with Bradshaw, getting information as to prices from those people—they knew that the inter-refinery buying was going on.

And Jacobi and these other people that went on the stand substantiated that there was a close tie-up of information between those two, and these documents substantiate it. I am going to read you some of the emphasis that is placed upon the price—not only the price, but the price that is carried in the journals. And Fanshier of the Chicago Journal of Commerce was in touch with them, McDowell told you that.

So, I say to you, don't be misled by any claim that any important link in the Government's chain of proof is gone.

The Government alleged and it has proved that these major companies operated on a set stage. They had uniform contracts with these jobbers. They fixed their retail prices on the basis of these tank car markets. The tank car market controlled and affected and measured the price at which all this gasoline, practically, was sold in this area, billions of gallons. So that the little spot market, a mere drop in the bucket compared to these billions of gallons sold under contract, and by the major com-3893 panies through their own service stations, controlled the price at which this great amount was sold, measured it—so that the tail wagged the dog.

Not only the spot market, but the published price on that spot market—Steiger determinations, and Fanshier's determinations—and you saw Steiger, working every day, all day on the telephone, calling here, there and everywhere; and taking the sellers' prices, without adequate check; taking the best foot foremost that the sellers would give him, of course, who were interested in a bullish market; and checking, may it please this jury, with only one jobber, the little Purity Oil Company down near Tulsa. Do you suppose he was getting any low prices?

And I say it is just too clear for argument that not only were those spot markets rigg[illegible], but the published prices were rigged. The publications, whether innocent or not, carried those quotations day after day; and they were automatically translated into the prices those jobbers had to pay under those contracts that were based on them; and thereby large sums of money were exacted from the jobbers and the independent dealers throughout the Standard of Indiana territory, and retail prices as well were maintained, so that the consumers suffered as well.

3894 Jacobi was asked:

"Right on that point, what kind of steps did your committee or representatives of the companies buying gasoline take to convey that message to the representatives of the journals?"

"Answer: Well, the journals called me every few days; that is, the Oilgram does, in Tulsa; and I tell them what I am paying for oil products; and I told them, I am sure, in this case, what I paid for gasoline."

And then Steiger supports him—oh, there is a lot to it. I can't take your time. Steiger said:

"We got information along that line from Mr. Jacobi of the Wadhams Company.

"Question: That is, Walter Paul Jacobi?

"Answer: Yes, sir.

"Question: Did he tell you about the purchases in the Mid-Continent field?

"Answer: He told us of the volume of purchases, and sometimes gave us the price at which it was purchased."

Why does he want to know the price, if it is not going to influence him? If he is publishing only prices to jobbers, why does he want to know the price that the pool is paying?

3895 "Question: How about Mr. Neil Buckley?"

This is asked of Steiger:

"Answer: He would tell us, give us information as to both his company buying and also quite often he would indicate to us that there had been interrefinery major company buying down there, and some times gave us the volume.

"Question: And then the price paid?

"Answer: Some times he did give us the prices, yes, sir."

And so on, and so on.

The same way with Bradshaw. The same thing is true of Steiger's contacts with Evans of the Barnsdall Company; with Bradshaw, I have mentioned; with Fitzgerald of Mid-Continent; with Bacon of Shell; with Cottingham of Continental; with Chamberlin, with Tracey and with Bourque—and Fanshier, in touch with McDowell and Bourque and Jacobi, all supported by the testimony in this record.

Gentlemen, let me read you some startling testimony of the history of the set stage in which this conspiracy was able to operate—and this is testimony that comes, not from a Government witness, but one of the principal witnesses called by the defense. You will recall it when 3896 I start to read it, I think. This is the testimony of John Shatford, and he is standing before the map, and he is pointing out to you what happened to the independent refiners in the old days:

> "The refineries along the Atlantic Seaboard, began to grow very rapidly. And they used this saving in transportation, not to put in their pockets in the form of profits, but to expand their markets. That is, because they were able to refine cheaply as a result of cheaper transportation costs, therefore they were able to compete with gasoline moving up here (indicating) in tank cars; they were able to compete farther west.
>
> "And so this Atlantic Seaboard market began to cross the Appalachian Mountains, and it encroached in western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio; drove the smaller refiner practically out of northern Ohio. So that all of this market, as a result of that single factor, practically all of that market through here (indicating in Ohio, and so forth) was lost to the independent refiner.
>
> "Now, he was shipping his product from his field refineries in Kansas and Oklahoma and in Texas, up into this market in tank cars.
> "Well, what was the result? As the demand > 3897 through the automobile increased and these markets became more concentrated, these refineries at the market (indicating) were built larger and larger, and more and more of what we call back hauling took place.
>
> "That is, instead of having a market that was just a narrow circle around Chicago, which we will say, for example, this market began to expand; and as it expanded, of course, it drove these refiners back, drove them back up on themselves in a sense, drove them back against their own refineries.
> "Then there came, a little bit later, the Kentucky fields; and in the Kentucky fields, the Kentucky refineries were located there, and they began to ship up into Ohio and a little bit into western Indiana, and certainly into Kentucky, and some into West Virginia (indicating); and so that market was finally lost to the Mid-Continent refiner, who could no longer ship up into that territory advantageously.

"And then came oil in Michigan, and these Michigan refineries (indicating) took Michigan away from them.

"And so this thing had gone on from year to year, so that this Mid-Continent refiner down here 3898 (indicating)," that is, down in the Mid-Continent field,

"—who used to command the Mid-Western market, and almost the Eastern markets, had finally been driven back into a small area in Iowa, Missouri, southern Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska, North and South Dakota (indicating)—although even some of that territory isn't as advantageous as it was a few years ago—and for this reason:

"As if all of these things weren't enough, we have had a new development in the industry, and that is the gasoline pipe line. All of these pipe lines we have talked about were crude oil pipe lines, carrying raw material up where they could refine it cheaper at the market. But now we have had a bunch of companies get together down in the southwest and build pipe lines clear up into Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, clear up into Minnesota, that carry finished gasoline clear to the market—

"Now, my point in all of this has been to describe the gradual shrinkage that has taken place in the market of the small refiner; which fundamentally, more than any of this other business, has caused his situation to become a very difficult one 3899 from the standpoint of getting rid of his product.

"Well, during the period that I described in which the major company had not caught up with the demand for gasoline that grew from the extended use of automobiles, he had to buy gasoline. And so he bought from the small refiners, who were located in the southwestern states.

"But a change took place in that situation as a result of the development, or the technical advancement, we will say, of the refining industry.

> "The major companies began to increase their refining facilities, so they soon reached a point at which they could manufacture themselves all of the gasoline that they needed for their own customers. And then, in addition to that, they had enough gasoline so that they had some to spare. And the consequence was that they were compelled by competitive circumstances to cease buying from the small refiner.
> "And, to make a bad matter worse,"

Gentlemen, I ask you, doesn't this sound like the conquest of the American Indian?

> "—To make a bad matter worse, they not only ceased to buy from him, but, because they had more product than they could conveniently dispose of, they 3900 began to compete with the small refiner for the small refiner's own customers. In effect, it might be said that that competition was the result primarily of the development of the facilities of an industry. I think, as a generality, that is true.
> "The consequence was that the small refiner not only wasn't able to sell the major companies that he used to, but he wasn't able in all cases to hold his own customers."

Now, gentlemen, that is the background picture of the years just preceding the Code, testified to here by Shatford, a witness for the defense. That is the kind of treatment, year after year, that was accorded to the independent refiners by these major companies. And I say it sounds like the conquest of the American Indian: Use them when they wanted them, use them when they needed them; take their markets away from them when they could, and finally gobble up their own customers. And I say it will come with very bad grace from people with that history to talk now, in this late day, when it suits them to pad their pockets with more money as a result of that price rise—to talk now of helping these same independent refiners that they so cruelly drove back upon themselves, as this witness 3901 says. Your Honor, might we have a short recess?

The Court: We will take a recess at this time.

(Thereupon, at 3:25 o'clock p. m., a recess was taken.)

3902 (Following the recess the Court resumed its session at 3:45 o'clock P. M., and the following proceedings were had:)

Mr. Lewin: In the defendants' opening, as I said, some unwarranted remarks, in my opinion, were levelled at the jobbers, and I am going to give those remarks so that there is no danger of any misunderstanding. This is what Colonel Donovan told you at the start:

> "The government, in its opening, would have you believe that the defendants wanted to drive the jobbers out of the business. That is not the issue in this case and it just isn't true.
>
> "There are disagreements in the industry as in every industry between individuals. In this industry, however, there were certain jobbers trafficking in hot oil gasoline. By hot oil gasoline, as I will tell you more fully, is meant gasoline produced from oil run in violation of state conservation laws. They profited in the demoralization of the industry, like the bootlegger or the smuggler, they avoided the payment of state and federal taxes.
>
> "This kind of jobber by this sort of practice was able to buy this illicit product at a price much less than the law-abiding jobber could do it, of course. This kind of jobber fought the efforts of state and 3903 federal governments to stop the traffic in hot oil. They wanted to keep their bootleg business. Many of this kind of jobber are members of an association which has openly and brazenly lobbied against this present national administration's successful effort to conserve the oil resources of the nation by stopping this illegal traffic."
> "Gentlemen," this is what he says to you: "gentlemen, we"—that is, the defense—"will show that the murmurings and grumblings came from those jobbers, among others; that only a small minority who have been able to use the law department, who have been able to punish these defendants by the Department of the Interior."

And I say, gentlemen, this is shocking slur. He could not have meant that slur for anybody except the poor victims of this conspiracy. And he says these hot-oilers, these smugglers and bootleggers are the ones that made the complaint in this case, and they have been able to use—he uses the word "use"—the Department of Justice.

I have yet to see any force that can use the Department of Justice. And I say that not one iota, not one scintilla of that ugly slur, intended to inflame you gentlemen against the people that have been wronged here, not one word of it has been substantiated.

3904 You saw the jobbers. We put them on there, jobber after jobber, and only stopped because we thought we were wearing everybody out with the same sad story. And you saw the fine, upstanding type of American citizen that they were. They were not hot-oilers and smugglers and bootleggers that were using the Department of Justice to persecute anybody. The Department of Justice is not embarked in any such scheme as that.

So it is a double slur, not only on the victims, but a slur on the honest, fearless Department of Justice that is doing its conscientious duty in a disagreeable case.

Oh, the cruelty, the cruelty that lurks behind this combination is just unheard of.

I tell you, I just read to you from Shatford's own testimony, a defense witness, the cruelty that can be exerted against the independent refiner, and was for years, beating them back, and taking their maintenance from them, and all the rest of it, even when there was no evidence of combination.

And then I read you the slur against the jobbers, because they won't stand any longer for the treatment they have been receiving, four thousand jobbers, responsible citizens living in these small towns, the back bone of the nation, supporting the local churches and the local enterprises, making our local communities what they are—3905 people of that caliber, fastened at both ends, the contract on which they buy, with the tank car market rigged against them.

And as illustrative of that cruelty let me read you a letter from Jacobi, written to his superior, the president of the Wadhams Company, March 29, 1935, shortly—and laughing with fiendish glee—Exhibit 684:

> "A price of four and one-eighth group 3 for this grade is expected next week."
>
> "As long as the bulk of the East Texas gasoline continues its movement south," that is, to the Gulf—

> "it is expected prices for tank car gasoline will continue to strengthen gradually in this area.
>
> "Demand from jobbers continues at a slow rate for several reasons. Jobbers north and west have had very unfavorable weather recently."

And, as I say, that continued all down there through the spring of 1935 while this was going on.

> "Further, I do not believe they feel that present market prices will hold."

And here comes the laugh:

> "It is quite possible they may be fooled this year in this respect."

3906 And of course they were fooled, and disagreeably fooled; and here is this man that is doing this to profit for his own company, aud he told you that on cross-examination when I took him over. He had in mind what the majors could make out of this increase. And remember too McDowell testified on that stand that he already realized how much the major companies, how much his company and the other companies sold, and how this would benefit them, but he said "we did not discuss it, did not talk about it".

No, that was not the kind of thing they wanted to talk about. They would much rather talk pious protestations of charity like help the independent refiner.

No, the temptation was too great for them, gentlemen. Here was this little spot market. Five percent, or around five percent of all that is sold in this great big area (indicating on chart Exhibit 674) in the Standard of Indiana territory, this little five percent being sold on the spot market, not by major companies—they did not sell any substantial amounts on the spot market, but the independent refiners, and the price at which they sold in supposedly competitive, arm's length, free, open transactions—the price that is written into all these contracts, these uniform contracts that are spread all over this territory.

So that the major companies here see clearly that 3907 if they can rig that spot market and raise it they will in turn automatically raise the price at which they sell eighty or ninety percent in this territory. And there was a great temptation. They had to pay something to do it; they had to bid the market up; they had to pay more for that gasoline on the spot market than they otherwise would have had to pay. They could have bought it according to Jacobi at lower prices. That would not work the scheme. No; they had to pay more for it than it was worth.

Did they hesitate long to pay more for five percent, if they could do it legally and properly—would anybody hesitate for very long to pay advancing prices for five percent when at the same time he could sell by reason of that action ninety-five percent at this same high price?

It was just like a pump handle. And they did not hesitate. On an average increase, the price went up from the time the conspiracy started about a cent and a half, roughly, went up here (indicating on chart), and then it kept on a fairly uniform plateau—roughly two percent increase in the tank car price.

Now, if you want to get any idea, just a general idea—it is only rough—of just how much these major companies in the combination would profit and put in their own pocket by a two cents increase in the retail price, just do a 3908 little arithmetic that I had some of these witnesses do for you.

Could I have that retail price chart for just a moment? (A chart was placed on the easel.)

If they got the total two cents, and you can see that too on the tank car price by reason of the fluctuations in the retail price—they may not have gotten the full two cent increase. They must have gotten a very substantial portion of it, making all the allowances you want in their favor. But let's take two cents as a rough figure and multiply their gallonage by two cents, and see what it was worth to them to go into the spot market and, as they say, share their burdens.

If you multiply Standard of Indiana, a billion gallons a year by two cents, if they had the full two cents over a year, what would you get? Twenty millions? Twenty million dollars. Not a bad stake to be shooting for.

McDowell of the Mid-Continent Petroleum Company is the only one who testified on this, and he was asked about what his company might make on a two-cent raise over a year, and I think it was eight millions—maybe only two—I don't know; but it was a big lot of money, millions of dollars.

And there is a sort of representative rough figure from the biggest company in the scheme, and one of the 3909 smallest. And the other companies shared proportionately with regard to their gallonage.

Oh, this was not a trifling thing. These were great stakes, great stakes that they were working for.

Now, you may say, and properly so, after you hear my argument a little while longer—and I want to be perfectly fair—I said there were other forces at work raising prices, and I think there were.

I spoke about the Connally Act, I spoke about the allocations, increased consumer demand and better conditions, so that you cannot ascribe the whole two cent raise to this scheme.

I think, and they think, as their documents show over and over again, they think you can ascribe most of it to this scheme. But I don't care how much you take of it, I don't care how you figure it, any way you figure it, if this scheme contributed only a cent rise, if that is all it contributed, a cent rise for a year—a cent means ten million dollars to the Standard of Indiana, and proportionately the same amounts to the rest of these conspirators.

I asked for this chart because I wanted to call your attention to it. I hope you won't forget it.

This chart represents first the tank car market as taken from the Oil Price Hand Book. This is for 3910 the regular gasoline, this line (indicating). This one below is for the third grade. It shows this rise, not in the beautiful steps I alluded to on the defendants' chart. It shows the rise in steps from March until June on both grades. Then it shows the total, and then it shows the prices here (indicating), and then the price level all the way down.

It shows a slight break in here (indicating) in May, when the grand jury that first investigated this case was called to Madison.

And up here (indicating) paralleling it roughly is a chart of the retail prices, and the spread between those two lines is roughly about five and one-half cents. That is the jobber's spread. He pays this (indicating) and he sells at this (indicating).

And that retail price as you see goes up as the tank car price goes. It lags a little bit because Standard of Indiana, which is the one that sets the price in the normal service station throughout this territory, waits until this tank car price has risen, to see whether it will hold, and it waits a certain number of days, seven days I think, before it jacks up the retail price to correspond, and during that period while it is waiting, gentlemen, the spread the jobber gets is not five and one-half cents; it is 3911 even less, because his tank car price has gone up, and he is still waiting for the retail price at which he sells.

So on a rising market like that, in view of that lag in the fixing of the retail price, he gets less, substantially less than five and one-half cents, and he does not get any guaranty of help on a sub-normal market except where they give possibly some local protection on a particular contract and there is a split margin protection only. He is guaranteed a five and a half cent spread here (indicating on the chart), and if that narrows they don't give him the full extent to which it narrows, but only half of it. So that throughout this period this jobber got along on less than five and a half cents.

And Mr. Marcell's letter to Mr. Arnott—Marcell, the manager of the great big White Eagle division of the Socony-Vacuum Company—he wrote Mr. Arnott and said the marketing end would not make any money at five and one-half cents. That was all they were getting, and this jobber is getting less.

But, gentlemen, this is one of the considerations that I ought to mention with regard to power. These companies, almost all of them I think with the exception of Globe, are integrated refineries.

Now, what does that mean? It means they have 3912 crude, pipe lines, transportation facilities, refineries, transportation facilities again, marketing right straight from the ground to the consumer. And if they have the right, or if they can get away with combining together, there is nothing to prevent them from switching that combine into any one of these fields of the business.

If they want to they can beat the price of crude to any companies against the independent crude producer, and make him pay the piper.

If they want to they can put in transportation in the pipelines in combination, if they are permitted to.

You see what they can do if they combine with regard to the retail sales, the tank car market. And if they want to combine and can get away from it, they can switch their power against the jobbers so that the jobbers, the dealers, the consumers, the independent refiners and the crude producers, and the people engaged in transportation, with all be at their mercy, wherever they care to switch that power.

And this retail price (indicating on chart) is hung partly on this (indicating), so that even though gasoline does not pass through the hands of jobbers—lots of it is sold by the major companies direct through their own stations—the retail price is determined by the market leader in 3913 this area at five and a half cents, and if the tank car price goes up the retail price goes up as well to the same extent.

Then somebody suggested, Well, how about the subnormal prices? And the subnormal prices, gentlemen, are those prices that prevail where there is a cut price war going on in a particular locality. And, gentlemen, these cut prices, subnormal prices, vary and change with these tank car prices just as well, because they are hitched onto these retail car prices which change with this (indicating on chart). So as the tank car price goes up the level of the retail, both normal and subnormal, go up as well.

And all these people knew that. And the price to the dealer, not only the jobber, but the little man that is under the jobber, the dealer, his price in those days was about three and a half cents below, to work on. His price was hung in here (indicating), three and a half cents to him and two cents to the jobber; and the price to the dealer, gentlemen, is hitched onto the tank car price, and the tank car price is made in these spot car markets, and that controls the price, not only which the jobber pays under these contracts, but the retail price, the price the consumer pays and the price the dealer pays, whether he is in a normal market or whether he is in a cut-price market.

3914 So you can see pretty well that when they raised that tank car price above what it would be if they hadn't operated in combination that they stood to get a net of that much increase or about (indicating). So you can take any figure you want on an average increase of 1.7 cents.

It wasn't up on this tableland (indicating) for these first few months. It was just coming up. So you can multiply for the whole here from this price where they finally got it—you have got to take into consideration while it was going up, they weren't getting the full two-cent advance or cent and a half advance there (indicating).

So if you make a computation, you get a sort of average increase of one and seven-tenths cents for the entire period from March 15 to June 16.

And if that is due, as they claim it to be due in these documents, to this combination, and if you multiply that by the gallonage of gasoline sold during that time, it was in the billions, and the defendants in this case realized together around seventy millions of dollars upon that computation from March 15 to June 16. Not a bad profit!

Oh, gentlemen, I have emphasized so many things 3915 that appear to me to be shocking in this case, but I have got to reserve some emphasis for you on the most shocking defense in this whole case, and that is this so-called half-baked attempt to put the blame upon the Government of the United States.

And I think it will be answered by a simple instruction from the Court that there was no Government approval within the meaning of the law that had suspended the Sherman Act during the entire time, even while the Code was in existence, and certainly not after the Code went out; through that entire time, the Sherman Act was unsuspended, and there was only one way to suspend it, as I have said, by submitting this plan—and it could have been submitted—they may say it wasn't concrete enough, wasn't formal enough, to submit it for approval—oh, yes, it could have been submitted and approval could have been asked, and any consideration could have been given by the highest authorities in Washington—not any casual talk, any curb-stone chatter, but a full consideration could have been given by those who were responsible for the enforcement of the Sherman Act, and by the higher officials of the Department of the Interior.

And, as I said earlier in this address, the way it was pointed out to them, a perfectly plain way, and 3916 that was the refinery amendment. It said that the P. and C. Committee could authorize arrangements—arrangements? Get that word. I looked it up, the word, and it means "a plan taken in advance." That is what "arrangements" means in Funk and Wagnall's dictionary.

The P. and C. Committee could have organized a plan, a plan taken in advance for removal of distress gasoline from independent refiners with the approval of the President. Certainly, if that is written into the law, it doesn't mean that you could have arrangements—plans taken in advance—in this case not sponsored by the P. and C. Committee, but by Arnott and his colleagues without the approval of the President or any governmental regulation or sanction.

And, gentlemen, it is in evidence here that in 1934 there were pools, arrangements for the purchase of distress gasoline from independent refiners that had the approval of the Government. There were four of them. And they didn't work. They were terminated because the legality, even, when approved, was doubtful. And they were terminated in the fall of 1934. And these people knew it, and knew it well. And they hadn't been operated by Mr. Arnott on the authority of any stabilization letter.
3917 They had been operated by separate agencies with full knowledge, regulation and approval, of the Secretary of the Interior, who was delegated to approve these, too, by the President himself.

And Mr. Arnott, who had already been holding meetings of major company refiners—it wasn't a new thing for him—gets a letter from the Secretary of the Interior—and I might as well discuss it because I know they are going to discuss it, and they think a lot of weight is to be placed upon it, and I think and I think you will think that the letter is just as plain and unambiguous as anything can be.

The Secretary tells him in June, 1934, that:

"It has been brought to my attention that the > market for gasoline and other petroleum products has recently been disturbed by numerous price wars in many different localities and states."

Now, they are little retail price wars in separate localities and states, having to do with retail price.

> "This has resulted in causing petroleum products to be sold below cost in some areas in order to meet unrestrained competition, and has in turn depressed the wholesale market for such products, thereby leading to the building up of surplus and to the economic and physical waste consequent thereon."

3918 And the Secretary says these retail price wars are causing these other difficulties; not these difficulties of surplus causing the retail price wars, but they are just the other way.

> "Such conditions have a strong tendency toward, and in many instances have resulted in, the payment of wages below the minimum established by the code and in the working of employes for a period beyond the maximum hours provided for by it. Furthermore, price wars necessarily injure small independent marketers—"

He is not talking of the tank car market; he is talking about the retail market.

> "—small independent marketers, who are unable to dispose of their products profitably when prices sink to ruinous levels. It would appear, therefore, that we are faced with conditions which would, if uncontrolled, tend to frustrate the purposes of the National Industrial Recovery Act by increasing unemployment, reducing standards of labor, and preventing the rehabilitation of industry, which the Act was intended to achieve.
>
> "Under Article VII, Section 3, of the Code, it is the duty of the Planning and Coordination Committee—"

3919 That is the industry committee—

> "—to cooperate with the Administration as a planning and fair practice agency for the industry."

As a planning committee to make plans and suggest them to the Administrator.

That is the preamble. He says there are retail price wars that have caused a lot of hardship if unrestrained, and they will cause these other ills if they go on, and it is the duty of the Planning and Coordination Committee to plan with him.

And then he says:

> "I am, therefore,—"

This is what he says to Arnott:

> "I am, therefore, requesting you as Chairman of the Marketing Committee of the Planning and Coordination Committee—"

That is this industry committee. They had had various divisions, marketing division and refinery division and so on. And Mr. Arnott was on the marketing division and had to do with the retail situation.

> "—to take action which we deem necessary—"

Not what Mr. Arnott deems necessary, but which "we deem necessary"—that is the Government—

> "—to restore markets—"

3920 Speaking of the retail markets.

> "—to their normal conditions in areas where wasteful competition has caused them to become depressed. The number and extent—"

Shows that he wasn't talking about the Mid-Continent field or the East Texas field or the tank car market of the general level of prices—

> "The number and extent of these situations would make it impractical for the Petroleum Administrative Board acting alone to deal with each specific situation."

The Petroleum Administrative Board was this government agency in this department that had the duty and only the duty of advising with him and to exercise administrative functions—no power to approve anything.

> "Therefore, I am requesting and authorizing you, as Chairman of the Marketing Committee, to designate committees for each locality when and as price wars develop, with authority to confer and negotiate and to hold due public hearings with a view to ascertaining the elements of conflict that are present, and in a cooperative manner to stabilize the price level to conform to that normally prevailing in contiguous areas—"

3921 That means areas next to them—

> "—where marketing conditions are similar.
>
> "Any activities of your committee must, of course, be consistent with the requirements of clause 2 of subsection a of Section III of the Act—"

And that was a limitation even on the President. These activities couldn't oppress small enterprise. And he warned him in this letter.

> "—and if in any section it should appear that > this section is not being complied with, the matter should be referred to the Petroleum Administrative Board.

>
> "I trust I can count on your cooperation.
> "Sincerely yours."

There is a simple, plain letter. It just authorizes Mr. Arnott to appoint committees in localities where local retail price wars were raging, and to look into the elements of conflict that are present, to hold due public hearings, and then as a warning, he put the limitations on that letter.

Not a word in there to authorize him to go beyond that, and he doesn't propose to go beyond it not through the entire year of 1934 after he got that letter. Buying pools and things of that character—the tank car market—were being run under a separate agency with the approval 3922 of the Secretary of the Interior and not by Mr. Arnott. He knew it and everybody knew that that letter didn't authorize him to run any buying pools or stabilize any general level of prices.

He says, "to stabilize the price level—" that is the retail price levels—"to conform to that normally prevailing in contiguous areas—" So that, if we are talking of Squeendunk and there is a price war, he can schedule a public hearing so that the price will be on a parity with Podunk, a sister town.

It is too clear for argument that that letter didn't authorize him to go in and take the law in his own hands and run any such enormous plan as this without the approval of anybody.

And after that letter is received, it is perfectly plain on its face—Mr. Maguire, one of the defendants in this case, one of the Code chairmen under Mr. Arnott, sends it out to the state chairmen of the petroleum committees of the Code, and he points out in that letter, which is in evidence, July 24, 1934, written four days after that letter was received, and he points out its limitations.

He says this:

> "Great care must be exercised by these committees to comply strictly with the Administrator's instruc- 3923 tions and limitations as set forth in this letter. A report in quadruplicate should be sent to this office covering all of the facts developed by the committee comprising all reasonable data ascertainable and indicating the recommendations—"

That is all, "recommendations."

> "—or disposition predicated on the work undertaken."

And then he points to the limitations that are in the letter, that is, it applies to that section of the Code, that is referred to in the letter, so that there can be no doubt about its meaning to anybody.

3924 As I say, as the testimony shows, all through the rest of 1934, buying pools were never thought of as coming within the meaning of anything like that. They deal with retail situations, run separately and distinctly, under a definite authority, and terminated definitely and completely by the Secretary of the Interior.

And then what happens? In the opening statement,—and this is what I think is so shocking,—are at least ten statements made in the opening statement of the defense, making the claim of Government approval, of instigation, of request, of guidance, inspiration, inducement and encouragement by the Government. In that opening statement he talks about the President's ambition of partnership between Government and industry. Well, the President didn't have in mind, I am sure, any such partnership as this, where the laws are violated without let or hindrance. There was no partnership between Government and industry to run this pool in 1935, and all through 1935 and 1936, or any part of 1935.

And what makes this defense, or attempted defense so shocking, is that the Government, the President and the Administration, had toiled almost unceasingly with these people to help them in their problems through the 3925 depression. It helped them with their crude problems,—crude oil; helped them with the refinery allocations; had helped them with orderly buying pools, that were approved,—supervised. Help them with scientific research and information; working night and day with them. That was the Government's contribution to the partnership between industry and Government.

These people were not satisfied with that, gentlemen. They were so greedy, so lustful for power and money return, so impatient of orderly processes,—and I will read you some impatient, petulant language of Arnott himself about the Government; so impatient with the orderly processes; so impatient with the good that would come from the Connally Act; over the refinery allocations or the increased consumer demand. He was not satisfied with that, or with all the Government had done for them, but turned upon the Government and bit the hand that fed it.

And the fact that Arnott was trusted with that letter,—that retail stabilization letter, makes these activities all the more culpable. The fact that he was trusted makes this not only a violation of the Sherman Law but a betrayal of his trust.

3926 Oh, gentlemen, Arnott, who is being paid eighty or sixty thousand dollars a year, when he did very little work for his own company except rig the prices; not working in his own office, in his own company, but all over the country; working on price rigging. His demon was a lust for power. His whole arrogant demeanor on that witness stand; his top-lofty bearing discloses how lustful he is for power. Chief Stabilizer he is going to be.

Now, I say, gentlemen, that when he arrogates to himself powers of sovereignty, over and above the state or above the country, that he has taken without any shadow of authority; when he has gone beyond the trust that is imposed in him and takes on himself unwarranted powers of sovereignty and statecraft, and makes great decisions,—momentous decisions, such as these, on his own hook, I say that there is one quotation in literature that applies to him, and they are the words of Shakespeare that Hamlet used for his usurping uncle, who in turn arrogated to himself powers of sovereignty, and sold the diadem of the crown for his own self, for his own private power and self.

3927 And Hamlet called him, as Arnott might be called, "The Cut-Purse"—the pickpocket—the cut-purse of an empire; one who, from the shelf, the precious diadem stole, and put it in his pocket.

And then you will remember the telegram in the early part of 1935, from O'Shaughnessy, one of the defendants,—the President of the big Globe Companies, three in number, to Mr. Fahy of the Petroleum Administrative Board in Washington. He claims to be speaking for the independent refiners, and he wants something done. And Mr. Fahy, a conscientious government official, replies: February 11th, 1935;

> "I am sure you know that tank car stabilization in relation to the price of crude is one about which we have no disagreement. How to bring about a correction is the stumbling block."

Officials of the Government hesitate, because they wanted to be within the law. They considered the means, as well as the end. Not like this gang, for whom the end justifies any means whatever, Sherman Act or no Sherman Act. No, this public official says, "How to bring about a correction is the stumbling block." That is the thing to be considered. And then he says, "I may say, however, I see nothing in the recent Supreme Court decision"—that was 3928 the one invalidating 9-C, that had to do with hot oil,— a power that was delegated to the President which the Supreme Court said even he could not exercise, "which in any way endeavors to reach the solution." Endeavors to reach the solution. He adds that he is hoping for a report from a committee, and a recommendation, and he says he will consider Mr. O'Shaughnessy's suggestions; glad to have them; like to have any other suggestions that he might make.

And yet that innocent letter—that restrained letter—that clear disclosure of his own public responsibility, is paraphrased by counsel for the defense, in his opening statement here, in this way. I am quoting:

> "The Chairman of the P. A. B."

—that is Mr. Fahy—

> "as we shall show, not only expressed no surprise but said he saw nothing to prevent it being done."

Now, if you can torture any such claim as that out of that letter then you are a good torturer.

Fahy writes and says that he sees nothing in the decision of the Supreme Court that is going to prevent them all from working for a solution. He said the means is the important thing; that is the stumbling block, and he has 3929 got to give consideration to that and do it right; and receive recommendations and weigh them carefully.

And that is one of the things that they rely on as showing Government approval of this scheme, which disregards all means for the sake of achieving its own end.

In that same opening statement counsel alluded to Mr. Arnott as a fiddler. He said, "Somebody said 'what is this fiddler doing down here?'" It soon became apparent what he was doing. He was fiddling, not with a fiddle, but with the tank car price. And so, that is the origin of this pool.

And Arnott appears in the middle of March, before the Allocators' meeting and this is the impatience that he shows of going through orderly channels, of submitting his plan to the Government, so it can be scrutinized and weighed and its wisdom determined, and be approved if it is legal and sound. Just listen to this language. These are the words of Arnott.

Oh, thank heaven again for these documents. While we are on the subject of documents, did this ever occur to you? I think it must have,—that the only documents we have are documents from the various companies. 3930 Here were these tank car stabilization committees meeting time after time. McDowell's committee meeting month after month, through the Code period, and all through 1935 until 1936. Didn't stop until February of 1936. No minutes. No records. No orderly record of it kept at all. Great momentous decisions being made as to amounts, and to price, and to diverting gasoline, and all the rest of it. Just oral.

But here were minutes of the Allocators' meeting which Mr. Arnott addressed March 13th, 1935, page six of Exhibit 69.

He had gone before the Allocators' meeting because he was disturbed by the amount of surplus gasoline which the majors might have to take to run these pools. He was afraid that they might get their allocations increased,—these independent refiners, and then there would be more distress gasoline than the major companies would divide up and would be willing to divide up and take. A greater burden, as Mr. Sus puts it in his memorandum. And so he goes to the Allocators' meeting to discuss it with them, and that is his concern. And he tells them this:

3931 "I am telling you all this because I think the more you know of the whole plan the better we will get into this matter of allocations to these refineries and the more you will know what is back of it. I am perfectly conscious that we have made other efforts at times to have this question dealt with."

He is referring to the 1934 pools that were approved by the Government.

"It has always been done in group form. That has involved agreements, group agreements. Those of us who have had anything to do whatsoever with the whole national picture, who have come to Washington and have had any experience with the P. A. B. * * *" that is the Petroleum Administrative Board, "and eventually the Department of Justice, know just how long that road is, and for some good reason or for some unknown reason or for no reason at all those agreements seem to have disappeared; those outstanding attempts—and they were really sincere and worthy attempts—have disappeared in a sort of cloud of mystery, and I don't think I, for one, or anybody else can tell you just where they have gone—they are out of our minds, they are completed, they are finished, and we are not interested."

3932 Now, here is a man that is perfectly conscious of the only legal way in which this kind of thing can be done—and he alludes to those former attempts. And here is a man that is so impatient that he points to the long road

—he says how long the road is, to go in an orderly and legal way with the Government, the Department of the Interior, and with the Department of Justice, because that road is long—and thank Heaven it is long, and the Government doesn't go off half-cocked and approve any kind of scheme that anybody wants to bring in there—because that road is long, he is willing to take the short-cut, and take the law into his own hands. That is exactly what that means. And that shows how arrogant and how above the law he was.

And then, gentlemen—it is astonishing to say it, but it is true—in that opening statement of counsel for the defense, this claim was made. I will read it to you:

> "No hint of any wrong-doing came from any officer of the Government; no warning that any governmental agency deemed these defendants' conduct illegal."

Now, there wasn't any burden on anybody to warn them. People are supposed to know the law, and to act within the law. But I ask you, how can that statement of 3933 counsel be made with any sincerity, in the face of this letter that I am going to read to you? And it is written by the Secretary of the Interior himself, to Arnott himself, as early as April the 2nd, 1935—just about a month, a short month after this pool, or these two pools had gotten under way; and just about two weeks after Mr. Arnott had come in to tell the P. A. B. something about it. Now, here it is. I am going to read it slowly and carefully, and I want you to judge whether or not this gentleman didn't have full warning and hint of wrong-doing, in language too plain to be mistaken, when he received this letter of April the 2nd from the Secretary of the Interior. And then I am going to ask you how you can justify any such statement, that I just read you, being made.

And here is the letter:

> "April 2, 1935.
>
> "Mr. C. E. Arnott,
> "My dear Mr. Arnott:
>
> "I have just received a report from the Petroleum Administrative Board with respect to a moratorium on dealer accounts, which is reported to have been arrived at by agreement between the companies supplying the major part of the gasoline sold in the Chicago area."

3934 Now, that is the specific thing that he is addressing the letter to—a moratorium by agreement among the major companies. And what is the moratorium? Well, we are told by Mr. Arnott himself that it is an arrangement whereby, for a certain period of time, a month, or two months, or three months, or whatever it is, all the parties who are party to it will agree not to take each other's dealers; so that, during the period, the poor dealer is tied hand and foot, body and soul, to one supplying company.

Now, that is the kind of thing that the Secretary heard was going on. And so his letter is addressed specifically to that complaint.

And he continues with the letter:

> "Although no evidence has been presented which would definitely establish the basis for the agreement entered into"—

Just think of that—no evidence had been sent in by Mr. Arnott with regard to this moratorium—

> "—it is possible that the companies involved are purporting to act under the authorization of my letter of July 20, 1934, authorizing you to designate committees, with authority to confer, to negotiate and to hold due public hearings in order to remedy > 3935 unfair price situations."

That is that retail letter. He continues:

> "Several parties have complained to the Petroleum Administrative Board that the moratorium oppresses them."

I think it might.

> "I am not attempting, however, in this letter to pass on the wisdom of the moratorium."

That means whether it is wise or whether it is proper, if legal. He doesn't know enough about the facts; it hasn't been reported to him; he can't pass on that.

> "The matter that at present concerns me is the necessity of complying with the requirements of the basic law."

Because the Secretary of the Interior knew that the law is supreme. He is concerned with it as a public official. He knows his powers don't rise higher than the law; and he knows all the more that any powers that he may have delegated in that letter couldn't rise above the law, or any activities that they might be undertaking can't violate the basic law.

And he continues:

> "In authorizing the formulation of the stabilization program, I necessarily conditioned the authority > 3936 granted by providing that the requirements of Clause 2 of subsection A of Section III of the National Industrial Recovery Act should be observed.
>
> "I know you will appreciate that agreements"—

Now, this isn't only confined to a moratorium; this is any agreements—and they don't have to be formal ones—understandings—

> "—that agreements between supplying companies, which might be in conflict with the anti-trust laws of the United States, require specific approval after due consideration, if companies are to receive the protection afforded by Sections 4 and 5 of the National Industrial Recovery act."

That is, the National Industrial Recovery Act provided that people that acted in reliance on and under agreements that were approved under the N. I. R. A. would be protected against the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. And this conscientious high official, writing to Arnott a month after these pools started, is calling his attention to that very specific thing, and telling him that agreements between supplying companies which might be in conflict with the anti-trust laws have got to be specifically approved after due consideration. And that means all agreements, agreements on moratoria, or on tank car prices, or on anything you please.

3937 And then he continues; he doesn't even just give him that warning; he goes even further, and he drives the point home:

> "I understand that the temporary character of some of the situations and the need for immediate action have made formalized"—

That means a written-up, formal agreement—

> "—formalized agreements impracticable, and in a number of instances, they may be unnecessary."

He doesn't even commit himself on that.

> "However—"

Here, he is just writing it so plain that anybody could understand it, and certainly a brilliant, smart, aggressive man like Mr. Arnott and his associates—

> "—when the understandings arrived at as a basis of solution of price wars, affecting the industry over a considerable area, or intended to operate over a definite period of time"—

You remember Jacobi's testimony that they started this thing off for a month, and then they were going to continue it from month to month; and they did have these monthly meetings to kick it along and keep it continuing over a definite, long period of time—

> "—or involve substantial changes in the policy of 3938 the various supplying companies"—

And remember the testimony in this case that these major companies did under these pools what they wouldn't have done otherwise; they bought gasoline that they wouldn't have otherwise bought; they bought it judiciously; they placed their orders where they would do the most good at the moment; they took it whether they had immediate need for it or not—

> "—made only in consideration"—

That is, in reliance upon—

> "—of similar action on the part of other companies—"

And what have you here? One company didn't go out here to buy up this surplus, to help the independent refiners and to rig the price. No. They got in a meeting, and they divided this up; and one man took Champlin as his dancing partner, and another took Eason, and another took Bell Oil & Gas, and another Wilcox, and another Taxman, and so on—each company participating because the others were going to help him share the burden. It would have been useless, foolish for one of these major companies to have attempted to go it alone, because he would have had to compete with the other major companies that wouldn't come in with him. And they could have broken down his efforts. That is what competition is. So, 3939 it was necessary for them to have the whole gang, or almost the whole gang, so that they could divide this surplus up.

And so you have in this very pool an understanding—let's look at these words again—

> "—an understanding affecting the industry over a considerable area"—

And you can't doubt that, can you? Over ten states of the middle west—

> "—intended to operate over a definite period of time—"

And you can't doubt that—

> "—or that involve substantial changes in the policy of the various supplying companies"—

And you can't doubt that —

> "—or made only in consideration of similar action on the part of the other companies,"—

And you can't doubt that. All four elements are present here. Then, what does he say?

> "—it is necessary that the procedure required by the Recovery Act be followed, in order that the arrangement be legal."

He uses the very word of the refinery amendment, "arrangements for the purchase of distress gasoline"—remember it? "Arrangements,—a plan taken in advance."

> "—in order for the arrangement to be legal. If any > 3940 such arrangements have been made, I should like a report as to them."

He doesn't say, "I have already got a report as to them." He didn't have. He says,

> "I want a report, if you have got any such arrangements in the retail picture or in the tank car picture or in the crude picture, or anywhere else. If you have got the kind of arrangement that I have described there, I want a report on it."
>
> "If they require approval to be effective, as my information leads me to believe is the case with respect to the moratorium, I should be glad to give consideration to them under the provisions of the Act."

Give consideration to it, see whether it is wise, see whether it is legal, see whether it has the right limitations in it, before he will approve it.

And then he closes with complimentary language about appreciating

> "—your cooperation with the Administration in carrying on the difficult work of directing the program of stabilization,"— that was the retail price stabilization—

> "—and I know that you will understand that this action is necessary in order to comply"— 3941 this action that he is having, or this action that he is suggesting to him—.

> "—this action is necessary in order to comply with the requirements of law with which I am charged with administrative responsibility.
>
> "Sincerely yours,
> "Harold L. Ickes,
> "Administrator."

Well, if that isn't a warning—if that isn't a note—or a hint of wrongdoing—if that isn't clear A, B, C's pointed out to this gentleman in the very early stages of his activity—then I don't know how in the world you could make him understand anything.

No, no reports forthcoming. He goes full steam ahead. He has got his crowd organized, and they are going full tilt, and congratulating themselves in letter after letter about the results they are getting. He is not concerned with the basic law of the United States. He knows how long that road is, he says. He is going to take this in his own hands, as Chief Stabilizer of the United States. And so he keeps on running his program through April, and into May.

And then he is called in for a conference on May 8th.

And Frey testified.

3942 You remember John Frey. You saw his demeanor on that witness stand. You don't think he was lying in favor of the Government. And when you think of him, just think of him, if you will, as opposed to Arnott on any negotiation about anything. Just contrast those two men: The cold, aggressive, brilliant, superior, dominating, ambitious figure of Arnott, as against the incompetent Frey. And you can put reliance on this part of Frey's testimony: He wasn't going to testify in favor of the Government on that issue. And what does he say about the May 8th meeting?

He testified:

> "There was some discussion with respect to the buying program, and in substance Mr. Arnott was told by Fahy"— that is, the Chairman of the Board—

> "—that he had no authority under the Code or under the letter of July 20th to operate any programs."

He testified that the question of approval of buying programs

> "—arose in a substantial"—

I have "substantial", maybe it is "incidental"—

> "—way on May 8th, toward the end of the meeting. A few questions were asked as to whether the buying was continuing, and whether Arnott was taking the letter of July 20th as authority for his work. Arnott > 3943 said that he was not relying on the letter of July 20th for approval; that the buying was still on an informal basis."

There you are. There are two clear-cut warnings, hints of wrongdoing, which I hurl in the teeth of that opening statement. There is the letter of April the 2nd from the Secretary himself; that is too plain for words. And here is Frey's testimony about May 8th, where Fahy told him, told Arnott what? That he had no authority under the Code, and so forth.

And then comes this other amazing statement from the opening statement—gentlemen, it is just full of the most outrageous, challenging claims that couldn't be substantiated, and never were substantiated. He says this in the opening statement: That after the Schechter decision—and, gentlemen, it came here in May (indicating on chart), right shortly after this started, right up in here, before they had come to this complete rise, in the early months of the conspiracy—this gentleman tells you in his opening statement, and I am quoting:

> "After the Schechter decision the defendants followed that—" and he is speaking about this buying—

> "—at the instance of the officials of the Oil Administration."

3944 Now, there is just not any proof of that whatever. On the contrary—on the contrary, there is a telegram sent by Fahy of the Petroleum Administration Board to Mr. Arnott on May the 28th, 1935, which is a day after the Schechter decision, which says:

> "In view of Supreme Court decision holding codes invalid authority of Administrator of Petroleum Code to you and those with you in stabilization matters is suspended and until further word all such activities must be purely on voluntary basis without any sanction from the Administrator."

Gentlemen, that is addressed not only to his illegal, but to his legal activities. Everything that he might be doing under color or claim of authority is terminated and suspended, even those retail stabilization matters that he was authorized to do.

In the face of that, in the face of that suspension of any authority whatever with regard to retail matters or any other matters, how can the claim be made, as was made in this opening statement, and left unsubstantiated by a scintilla of proof—how can the claim be made that after the Schechter decision the defendants followed that at the instance of the officials of the Oil Administration?

Oh, gentlemen, let me just allude for a moment—3945 and I will be very brief—with regard to the meeting on March 12th, where Arnott claims to have come in and reported to these minor officials of the Department of the Interior; and let's see what transpired there, out of the testimony of Dr. Frey:

> "Fahy asked Arnott with regard to this pool that he was telling him about. He didn't tell him it was a pool. He told him it was voluntary purchases"— one major company just voluntarily buying from other companies on an individual basis; no pool, or concerted effort.

But Frey, or rather Fahy asked Arnott whether their purchases would be in violation of the anti-trust laws. How about that for a warning? How about that for a hint? March the 12th.

> "Mr. Arnott stated that he did not ask our blessing."

Frey can't remember whether they were his exact words, but that was the substance of what he said—and you can just hear it, his supercilious remark: "Oh, no, he was running it himself, on his own responsibility."

He says:

> "Mr. Arnott"—

and I am quoting again from the testimony—

3946 "—said anything that was being done by him was being done on his own responsibility."

And Frey says that remark was made on March the 12th, and it related to this buying.

And Frey says—and I am quoting:

> "Mr. Arnott did not ask our authority for the buying program, and he was doing it on his own responsibility. That is a characterization, and not an exact statement"— but it was the witness' best recollection of what Arnott said. And who will you believe with regard to what was said at both those meetings, March 12th and May 8th, with regard to the buying programs—Arnott or Frey?

Gentlemen, you remember the nice, attractive, old gentleman named Collett, who took that stand. He was Chairman of the P. and C. Committee during this time. And I remember, I took him on cross examination. He said he was present on May 8th, and he was present later, when Mr. Arnott and Mr. Fahy were talking. And I asked him on cross examination, to find out just what was told the P. and C. Committee, and just what was told the P. A. B., the Petroleum Administrative Board, about these activities. And his testimony shows what the P. and C. Committee were told.

3947 They weren't told about Jacobi's meetings several times a week; that Jacobi, Tuttle and McDowell were a committee; that they made eight or nine price recommendations; the names of the companies that were buying; how much they were buying; how many of them were buying; how high the prices were going to be raised. He didn't tell them about the meetings of the Tank Car Stabilization Committee, to be held once a month; that they continued on, with or without a code; or Buckley's cooperation with Arnott in finding buyers for the East Texas program. No, no, no, he said, that wasn't told. Well, it was a very small shell of a thing that was told. And why wasn't it told?

Because Arnott didn't deem it necessary to tell anybody. He didn't want any approval; he didn't want any praise. He was doing it on his own responsibility; he wasn't doing it under that letter; he was doing it on his own. And, the less the Government knew about it, the better, because he said at the Allocator's meeting, in the Allocators' minutes:

> "We have had some dealings with the P. A. B. and the Department of Justice, and we know how long that road is."

And they weren't told that these companies were 3948 buying all of the distress gasoline, as these letters show; that there was a concerted program; that they had their eye on and were placing their emphasis on the trade journals; and that they were obligated, had definite allocations and shares of this distress gasoline that they were to buy, as these documents clearly show—and I can read them to you. They weren't told that they were making regular purchases, regular and continuous purchases so that the tank car market would be sustained; that they were placing them judiciously, diverting the East Texas gasoline from this area. They weren't told the extent to which they themselves were benefiting by that increase in the price; the extent to which they were hurting the jobbers, who were signed up on these contracts; the extent to which they were sponsoring and urging curtailment of runs, so that there wouldn't be too much for them to absorb. Those things weren't told, even to these minor officials, much less submitted for approval to the only authorities that could approve, the Secretary of the Interior or the President of the United States.

Oh, gentlemen, the defense are going to lay a great deal of store—and how they can, I don't know, in view of that record—on an excerpt from a report, an annual re-3949 port, a printed Government paper from the Secretary of the Interior. And they are going to try to have you misconstrue and misunderstand what the Secretary was saying in that report.

And I have got that excerpt here, and I am going to read it with you, because we don't want to have any difficulty about its meaning. In view of all this history that I have just given you—and you must be weary of it—of what stabilization, legal stabilization was, retail price stabilization, public meetings with regard to Squeedunk and Podunk —and with all that evidence as to what it was not, that it was not rigging tank car prices with buying pools—then you can understand, I am sure, the full meaning of this statement upon which they rely so heavily.

And here it is—it is taken from pages 37 and 38 of the report:

> "The operations of the Tender Board"— that is, the Connally Act, holding down the hot oil—

> "— of the production provisions of the Code and Refinery Amendment, and of the Stabilization Committee of the Planning and Coordination Committee, with the cooperation of the Petroleum Administrative Board"— and in so far as those activities were legal, it had that cooperation. So far as it was dealing with public matters under the strict authority of that letter, it had full cooperation from the Government— 3950

> "—brought the desired parity between the wholesale price of gasoline and crude oil in the spring of 1935. The work of the Stabilization Committee contributed very largely to"—

What? To boosting that price by pools? No, no. Being specific now, as to what he means:

> "The work of the Stabilization Committee contributed very largely to the elimination of excessive marketing abuses, which tended to keep the retail markets in an unsettled and unstable condition. One of the difficult marketing problems of the year revolved around the question of price differentials"— again, he is talking about the retail prices—

> "—as between the different types of marketers."

Like the trackside marketer and the other marketer.

> "—The Stabilization Committee, authorized by the Administrator in July, 1934, was successful in resolving many localized conflicts, and in compromising issues which had brought on drastic price wars."

Now, that is all that means. The Secretary is ascribing this improvement to the Tender Board, to the allocations, and to the stabilization—the legal and properly understood retail stabilization activities— 3951 and not to what these gentlemen would have you suppose were legal stabilization activities, because they weren't, the rigging of this tank car market by buying pools. That is not alluded to directly or indirectly in that statement.

And that, I think, concludes that part of my argument that has to do with any claim—and I say it is a shocking claim—that the Government inspired or induced or approved those things that they condemn them for now. And the claim was made, even, gentlemen, that the Government made them dance—speaking of the dancing partners in that opening statement, who claimed that the Government made them dance. Well, I submit to you the record on Government approval in answer to that.

The Court: I think we will suspend now until 9:30 tomorrow morning.

(Thereupon, at 5:15 o'clock p. m., an adjournment was taken to Tuesday, January 18, 1938, at the hour of 9:30 o'clock a. m.)

3952 Mr. Lewin: May it please the Court, and gentlemen of the jury.

You gentlemen may remember when Mr. Arnott was on the stand he told you about a gentleman down in East Texas, a buyer down in East Texas that Mr. Carnes had. Mr. Carnes is vice-president of the Sinclair Company, and this man Mr. Arnott spoke about was Mr. Tracey. Mr. Tracey was the active buyer down in that field for the Sinclair Company.

Mr. Arnott went out of his way to tell you and to tell us that Mr. Tracey was the man that knew all about these things, he was exceptionally well informed. And that is a fitting introduction, I think, to what Mr. Tracey says about this situation March 15th, 1935.

3953 Now, here is the man that Mr. Arnott says is the expert on what is happening in the field, and Mr. Tracey writes to Mr. Brown of the Root Refining Company, an independent refiner:

"Just after I talked with you I had a talk with Mr. Dinkins"—

Mr. Dinkins is another official of the Sinclair Company—

"and he is of the same opinion that I am, that it seems unsound to pay more than U. S. motor price for material made up of U. S. motor gasoline and kerosene, but in the interest of higher prices we are trying to get the tractor distillate price in the rice belt raised a penny. In event we do over the next two weeks we will discuss better future and better payment for this grade of fuel at that time."

He says it is better to pay U. S. motor price for stuff that is made up of U. S. motor diluted with kerosene, but since he is trying to get the prices up he is going to discuss doing that very foolish thing. And then he continues:

"Don't forget that it has taken some intense active work on the part of all of us to get the U. S. motor and H. C."— that is Sinclair's regular—

3954 "price in tank cars where it is today."

This is the significant sentence on what caused this; this is from the expert:

> "Jobber demand did not do it. You know exactly what I mean.
>
> "Yours very truly,
>
> "William A. Tracey."

I went over yesterday at some length, and I think I exposed, not with argument but by pointing to the evidence, a number of these so-called defenses, and now I come to one that I think is the most—I mentioned the most shocking one yesterday; now I come to the one that I think is the most ludicrous of all, and it is this pious claim that they were in the scheme which netted them millions for charitable purposes, to help the independent refiner. That is the way they like to phrase it over and over again.

What a change of heart, if that is true, from the history of rough treatment that they gave the independent refiner through the years as revealed by that Shatford testimony.

There are a number of other answers to that claim, and I think the most significant one is this:

You remember that in January and February of 1935, before they got this pool started, they were talking about it, this tank car stabilization committee, so-called, was 3955 having its meetings. They considered that the prices were low, and they considered that the independent refiner needed assistance. He had a lot of surplus gasoline; Mr. Bourque was there, and he had an estimate of it in January, of how much it was and where it was, and Ashton's and McDowell's committee met and discussed it, and there it was, perfectly legal to buy, not made of hot oil, and those people claimed they were going to buy only what they needed. They were only to select companies that they bought with before, with whom they had a course of dealing before; and they testified on the stand that it would have helped the independent refiner just as much, if they wanted to help the independent refiner, if that was really what was in their hearts, if they had purchased that gasoline from him in January and February instead of waiting until March.

It was just as good gasoline. They claimed to need it; they knew where it was, it appeared on the chart, and it would have helped the independent refiner just as much, except that it would not have raised the price.

And it is true that there were some uplift buyers—that is what Buckley called them, uplift buyers. You remember he tried to tell you what that meant—men who were buying personally for their own needs, and he said it was some kind of a code expression that was known only to 3956 himself and Mr. Brandli, and when he used this mumbo-jumbo called "uplift buyer", that did not mean what it meant to any other person, but it meant people buying for their own needs, and he almost got away with that fraud.

But under cross-examination and questions from his Honor, it appeared that "uplift buyer" meant exactly what it says, buying above the market, and there were some of those uplift buyers that he mentions in those early letters, and they were going it alone. There are some letters that show you what their claims were. They were not having very much effect. But these people in McDowell's committee, they held off. Here was the gasoline, here was their claimed need, just as legal gasoline; they knew where it was, did not have to have any additional committee work to find it.

It would have helped the independent refiner just as much in January and February—and I think this test of sincerity tests the whole thing—but they held off awaiting word from the chief the method of working out, awaiting word from Arnott, when they spring this trap. Waiting for the Connally Act. Why waiting for the Connally Act? Waiting for the Connally Act because until the Connally Act was passed their scheme, although it would help the independent refiner just as much, would not have helped themselves, it would not have raised the price, be-3957 cause they needed the Connally Act to keep off that flood of hot oil.

If they had started a buying program before the Connally Act they would have been mopping up the ocean.

So they had to wait until the Connally Act, not to help the independent refiner, oh, no! but to help themselves. And as soon as the Connally Act was passed then they could superimpose on that a perfectly legal restriction on output, this artificial scheme for increasing the legal demand, and that was what they were waiting for, and here is the proof of it (indicating chart).

There is their own chart, right there, chart 869, put in evidence not by the government but by the defendants themselves along with the rest of these charts.

You see the dots. I told you about the dots; they represent individual purchases. They do not represent there the tank cars.

You see how the trend of those purchases in the Mid-Continent field continues after the buying pool starts, harmonizes with this trend in the tank car price, most of them running along here in the low which is the general market.

But here is the important dot, right there (indicating on the chart) in January, and it shows that in the month of January notwithstanding the fact that McDowell 3958 and his company well knew the independent refiners needed this aid, he made no purchases, and in February he did not make any purchases at all, and he did not start his heavy purchasing until he got his buying program going after the Connally Act. Why? Because he knew those purchases then would help rig those stairs, and that is the only reason.

When that same question was put to Mr. Arnott he had to come to the same conclusion.

But, gentlemen, I think that claim is unmasked for what it is.

There is a statement right in this open statement that reveals it. Mr. Donovan told you in speaking of the major companies that he represents:

> "There intelligent self-interest told them it was good business to do that",

And there the cat came out of the bag. It was good business for these high-powered businessmen, and they knew it, for their intelligent self-interest. That is not charity or helping the independent refiner.

Arnott testified that one of the reasons they wanted to wait for the beginning of that program until the Connally Act was passed was that he knew he could not get the tank car market price up and could not get the published tank car price up.

3959 So this claim of helping the independent refiner is just another way of saying they wanted to increase the price. And wherever in these documents they use that self-serving term of helping the independent refiner, because they must have felt then, even then, gentlemen, they must have been conscious of the selfishness and cruelty of this scheme; so that sometimes when they write about it and they talk about helping the independent refiner, and whenever they state in here in these letters and documents, the rest of the companies say exactly what that means—it means help with regard to price.

And I ask you, gentlemen, if the independent refiner is the one that they are taking under their wing to help for any particular reason the independent refiner, then why are they buying surplus gasoline from the brokers, and they were doing that, these witnesses testified to it and the documents disclosed it, whenever the brokers had gasoline that would be sold below the price these people wanted to maintain they were buying it up, buying it up in the Mid-Continent field through brokers like Dale W. Moore, buying it up in Chicago from brokers like Vaughn; and buying it up from brokers was not helping the independent refiner.

Gentlemen, there is another thing that unmasks this claim.

I read you yesterday the sardonic cruel sneering 3960 laugh that Jacobi inserted in one of those letters about the poor jobber will be fooled this time.

Well, there is the same kind of evidence in here as to their attitude towards the brokers. Let me read it to you.

Lakin, the high responsible vice-president of the Shell Company to his president Fraser, April 10, 1935, Exhibit 185:

> "No appreciable surplus gasoline exists in the Mid-Continent or North Texas; small quantities of low octane (estimated not to exceed 25 cars) are in the hands of Tulsa brokers who are offering it at one-eighth of a cent below published low quotations in an effort to disrupt the buying groups program. The group's practice of buying directly from refiners, thus depriving brokers of their commission, is one of the factors responsible for brokers refusal to support the buying program."

3961 So, may it please you gentlemen, they not only had a laugh up their sleeve at the jobbers, but they were rigging their buying program so that they would leave the brokers out in the cold on their commissions; and they only bought from them when they had to, as a letter from Jones, a vice-president of the Socony-Vacuum, shows to you. He says, "Our policy is to buy direct from the independent refiners." They bought from these brokers when the brokers had gasoline that otherwise would bring about lower prices, which was the be-all and the end-all of these people's objective.

And I don't believe people that are capable of that kind of attitude toward their fellow-men—their attitude toward the jobbers, and the dealers; their attitude toward the brokers—I suspect very much that that change of heart is mighty temporary that comes about on the first of March, when the Connally Act is passed and they have got a chance to make millions of dollars if they rig this price.

And here is a communication from an official of the Shell Company, January the 4th, 1935, that bears out this same argument. Here is January the 4th, 1935, two months before they launch the program, they are working on it. And he says in this telegram:

3962 "Your TA 35 Rock Island offer of gasoline prefer wait until general program arranged do buying as do not believe individual purchasers will assist quotations."

This man wasn't talking piety then, was he? It would have assisted the independent refiner—but he preferred to wait until they could all get together; not because it was necessary for them all to get together to help the independent refiner and take his distress. They preferred to wait, as they didn't believe individual purchases would assist—not the independent refiner—but the quotations that they are going to enjoy.

An official of Shell to another official of Shell, March the 6th, '36:

> "We believe that the Bell Company"— that is an independent refiner—

> "—is anticipating a rather extended period of buying by the majors of gasoline at inflated East Texas prices and expects to sell the maximum output of three plants for the months to come."

Now, here comes the right note as to their attitude toward that. Continuing:

> "Should the major purchasing companies elect—"

in their own power, gentlemen—

3963 "—elect to withdraw their support, the picture might be changed."

So he has got a laugh up his sleeve for the independent refiner, that they claim they are trying to help, who relies on this program and makes his plans accordingly, because—and they have that laugh up their sleeve because they know that so long as the Government doesn't interfere with them, they can elect as and when they please.

So much for that, gentlemen. There is lots more. I am being perfectly sincere when I tell you that I am just skimming, just leaving out document after document that supports this Government's case just as fully as the ones I have read, because I don't want to inflict you gentlemen with any more than I think is necessary to recall to your minds a fair sample of, I almost might say, the tons of evidence in this case on every one of these points.

Now, I touched once before on the question of the defense of need, and I am not going to dwell very long on it.

I told you gentlemen what I believed the law to be, that if you find the power in this great group of corporations, acting together; and if you find a combination, and if you find a purpose in that combination to affect 3964 prices—and I say, gentlemen, you can't find anything else on this record—then it makes no difference about their needs or their un-needs.

As I said before, under the law a man can buy his own needs, or can buy stuff he doesn't need if he acts individually. That is the right of free-born American citizens. But his needs or his surplus beyond his needs makes no difference whatever when he comes to acting in concert, having a dominant position in the industry and in interstate commerce, to affect the prices.

But, even if it were a defense on the law, which it isn't, the facts overwhelmingly establish that it is unsound as a matter of fact. And when I say this, I don't make any claim that they couldn't use this gasoline, or that at some time or other during this entire long period they didn't need some of these purchases.

One illustration would occur to you right away. There might be cases in which a company might make a freight saving. Instead of shipping from their own large refineries, they might have a customer out here in the country some place, near a small independent refiner; and they might be able to buy that gasoline and ship it to him at a lower freight cost. That would be pretty plausible as a basis for needing some of this gaso-3965 line. It wouldn't cover very much of it, but it might be a basis—freight savings might be a basis for some of it.

But, gentlemen, the astonishing thing is, as these documents reveal and I will show you, these companies didn't get any credit in the pool for those purchases. When they bought to save freight, the buying program committee didn't give them any credit for those purchases against their share or allocation of the burden. They said, "Oh, no. You bought that because you wanted it, because you needed it, because you could save something. You have got to buy more; you have got to buy stuff you don't need and don't want; you have got to help share the burden if you are going to get a benefit."

Now, I will just run over the points that have been made a little bit. Remember what I told you yesterday about the fourteen cargoes of surplus gasoline banked up at the Gulf Coast. You remember Mr. Swensrud's testimony about freight rates and water rates; how you can ship around by water, up the Mississippi and through the Great Lakes and down the St. Lawrence. So there was nothing to prevent this gasoline, if it was needed, coming in here. There was nothing to prevent the big major companies on the East Coast, who were buying in East Texas, 3966 transporting this gasoline to the East Coast, there was nothing to prevent them from buying it on the Gulf. And those fourteen cargoes, I believe, amount to something like six hundred or eight hundred cars a month for a period of six months—just about what they were buying in the East Texas field. They could have been supplied for six months out of the accumulation of gasoline at the Gulf. And just bear that in mind when that claim of need is made.

And bear this in mind too, if you will: Mr. Barkdull, an official of the Standard of Indiana, on that stand, told us that on March 1st, 1935, his company was short 42,000,000 gallons of gasoline of a 45 days supply, which is what they like to keep on hand. And, gentlemen, Standard of Indiana's participation in this scheme was to buy around seventy cars a month from the Waggoner Company. And it is a drop in the bucket, it is a drop in the bucket; so much a drop in the bucket that these officials just frankly admitted on that stand that that purchase of seventy-five cars by the Standard of Indiana couldn't have any relation whatever to satisfying any needs of the company. And he said, Barkdull himself said that there was no estimate prepared in his company that would include that seventy-five car purchase—they weren't banking on it, or that 3967 the purchase fitted into any plan of the company for increasing the storage that they thought they were short. And he testified that the inventory at the end of May, '35, of his company alone was in excess of a half a million gallons—no, no—was in excess of 160,000,000 gallons—160,000,000 gallons. And that sixty cars, only sixty cars were purchased from Waggoner in that month, and that amounted to less than a half a million gallons. You can just tuck those seventy-five or sixty cars a month into a corner, into a trivial corner of the storage tanks of the Standard of Indiana.

And Shatford, too, an expert, on that stand testified that seventy-five cars a month for the Standard of Indiana could signify nothing, could signify nothing as to the needs of that company.

And then bear in mind, on the question of need, that Buckley was at work, exerting every effort all through those months, not only through the months of the Code, but on down through the summer—on the telephone, long distance calls month after month to Hartmann, to Arnott, to Carnes, to Robinson—long distance calls charged to the East Texas Refiners Association. You remember when I turned on him there once when he was on the stand, and asked him why or under what authority he was work-3968 ing down there in the summer of '35? And he gave you this weak answer: He was doing it on his own—doing it on his own, entirely on his own, he said.

Here is this liaison man, referred to by Arnott in the Allocators' minutes, a Cities Service man, being paid by Cities Service Company the entire time; being lent, that is the phrase they used, lent or loaned by the Cities Service Company to this scheme, and paid on down through the summer of '35 and into '36, and devoting most of his time to this scheme, helping the independent refiners, if you like. And he has the nerve to tell you that he was working down there on his own, on his own responsibility, through the summer of '35—still drawing his pay from his company; still having his expenses paid by this Association; still hard at work getting buyers, major company buyers in this pool. And if he had to work hard, gentlemen, to get the major companies to come in there and buy perfectly good East Texas gasoline—nothing wrong with it at all—just weigh that, if you will, against this claim of need. When people need things the way these people would like you to believe they needed these six or seven hundred cars a month, they don't have to have people parking on 3969 their doorsteps, calling them by long distance and all the rest of it, urging them and urging them and urging them to take what they need.

And bear in mind on this subject of need, too, gentlemen, the testimony of Evans—you remember that little Evans of Barnsdall. Through this period when he was buying, when McDowell would call and tell him where to buy each month, the Barnsdall refineries were operating at only sixty per cent of their capacity. If they needed gasoline, it wouldn't have cost them very much, gentlemen, to have stepped up their capacity to cover the trivial amount that was assigned to Barnsdall to buy. Running at only sixty per cent of their capacity—and that is expensive, gentlemen, to run at sixty per cent of your capacity, because it means you have got all that investment there that you are not using—and buying on the side, in order to support the price. And when you consider that, I don't think you will think much of that claim of need here.

And so it goes. And the most outrageous example of it is down in the winter of '35 and '36. And I suppose they will still claim they needed this gasoline they were buying, when a heavier buying movement got under way 3970 in the fall of '35; when the consumption was the lowest, storage mounting, storage stocks a problem to the industry; one of the worst winters we have ever had;

this entire North frozen over, automobiles not running—buying, buying, buying to hold that line—a heavier movement. And Jacobi testified that some of the companies were having difficulty in taking the gasoline in January or February of 1936. Does that look like need?

3971 Buckley, April 18th, 1935, wrote this letter to an independent refiner. Exhibit 40. This independent refiner had sold Buckley in the pool, at a low price, when the pool started, and then the pool raised its price, and this little independent refiner thought it was hard lines that he had to ship at that low price, to start the pool, so he wants to cancel out.

Buckley, who was interested in helping only the independent refiners, writes him this letter that exposes whether or not the Cities Service Company needs to buy this gasoline from him for the market.

This is what he wrote to Robertson, of La Pren. La Pren is one of the little independent refiners in East Texas:

> "For nearly three months have spent practically all my time working in the interests of a group of East Texas refiners, of which you are one."

That is soft soap, isn't it?

> "Through my persuasion". Persuasion—, does that sound like need?
>
> "Through my persuasion Cities Service Export > Oil Company was induced to buy from East Texas > refiners during the latter part of February and > 3972 March more than 600 cars of gasoline, very little of > which, at the time of purchase, we had reason to > believe we would need. The results of such purchasing is plainly apparent."

Results plainly apparent. Of course it is. That price rise. "Every car of that material except the orders we have standing with you has been shipped."

I will ask you to weigh that,—and I put that to Buckley, and you remember he told you he was lying to Robertson, and I leave it to you when he was lying, whether he was lying to Robertson, or lying to you.

June 29th, 1935, Chamberlin, of Pure, a buyer for The Pure Oil Company, to Cline, the manager of the East Texas Association: (Exhibit 327) Indicating clearly that these people had shares and allocations in this pool of gasoline, that they were taking from these independent refiners, that they didn't want. Some of it was off-specification stuff. Didn't want it. Had to reform it in their plants, in order to use it. Here is the letter. Does that sound like need? Here is the letter.

> "In addition to this, both Chief and Grogan—"

3973 two independent refiners in the East Texas field—

> "and an occasional car from Wabash does not meet the specifications of our purchase order. I am not so sure, Bob, but what assessment of some penalty for failure to follow our instructions as to specifications and shipping dates, would be more effective than continuing registration of our complaints. However, before taking this action, would appreciate an expression from you. We don't want to do anything to upset the apple cart or work an undue hardship on you but we are getting 'damned' tired of the negligence and indifference exhibited by these refiners."

One official of Skelly, to another, October 17th, 1935. (Exhibit 124)

> "As you probably know, we don't have much choice as to whose material we are to take, when we purchase outside third grade gasoline in connection with the Buying Program Committee's operations."

They don't have much choice. They are not free as to where they shall buy. They are bound. They are not legally bound, of course, because nobody can enforce an understanding in violation of the Sherman Law. But they feel they are bound. They have no choice.

> "On such purchases, we have refineries assigned to us, and, as you might expect, such refineries are small outfits who just make motor gasoline, and don't make any effort at all to make their product suitable for use in pressure gas appliances. Even if we did have some choice, it wouldn't do us much good because, as far as making an extra fine product suitable for this special use is concerned, they just wouldn't be interested, for they aren't that kind of refiners."

And then he goes on about some more. I don't think it necessary to read it.

Well, what do you think of that? They haven't much choice. They have got to take this stuff even though they don't want it; even though they can't use it in the pressure gas appliances; taking it because it was assigned to them by the Program Committee.

And from the same person to the same person, the same company, November 20th, 1935: (Exhibit 100)

> "Of course, there isn't anything we can do about that now, but, just to show you how we try to keep on top of these things, I am sending you, attached, an exchange of wires between ourselves and the Waggoner people—"

3975 That is Dave Gray's Company.

> "last August 19th, relating to a distillation report received from them covering gasoline shipped to ourselves at Davenport, Iowa, on the 15th. If, in spite of our keeping a close tab on specifications of shipments, whenever we can, as in this case, these outside refiners ship off-specification material, about the only thing we can do is refuse to take any of their stuff when the Buying Program Committee tells us they have to move some, or to turn the refiner down completely when and if he has the nerve to call us up and solicit some business after such an instance."

Another Skelly document, Exhibit 121, September 11th, 1935:

> "However, there was no excuse for their reporting car numbers on the 6th and 7th, and not actually making shipments until a day or two later, so that, unless they can give a satisfactory explanation, we shall just have to check them out, as far as further purchases are concerned. This purchase, incidentally, was one of those that we made at the request of the Buying Program Committee, the shipper being one of those East Texas outfits that are not always to be relied on a hundred per cent."

3976 Buying at the request of this Committee. Buying because these people are assigned to them, not because they wanted to do business with them or because they liked their material.

From the same files of the same company, December 21st, 1935: (Exhibit 126)

> "It should be borne in mind, of course, that such purchases, being made because of freight savings effected, * * *" and he was suggesting that they buy this surplus gasoline from the Russell Refining Company, where they might save a little freight, Russell Refinery being located at Russell, Kansas, a little nearer to where they wanted it.

Here is something that you might argue was a needed purchase. Save freight.

> "It should be borne in mind, of course, that such > purchases, being made because of freight savings effected, are not credited to us by the Buying Program Committee handling inter-refinery purchases."

That means the Buying Program. The overlord gives them no credit against their share of their allocation of the burden if they make freight savings on the purchase.

3977 And then you remember that correspondence, where a suggestion was made in the Socony-Vacuum Company unit, there was correspondence between Jacobi and Roemer, in New York, about an exchange arrangement with the Empire Company, whereby they might make some freight savings, and the suggestion was that they shift their purchases to this exchange with the Empire Company and make these savings, and then the one suggests to the other; oh, well, if we do that, what is going to become of our support to the Buying Program and the independent refiners? And so they decide to let well enough alone and continue to buy gasoline that is costing them more money, where they can't make a freight saving and can't make the exchange from the independent refiner, rather than making this saving by the exchange.

Roemer writes to Jacobi, September 16th, 1935: (Exhibit 88)

> "As you say, serious consideration must be given to the importance of purchasing gasoline in Group 3 * * *."

That is around Oklahoma. Freight group three.

> "if it is necessary to stabilize prices and, therefore, it is very questionable if a great deal of exchanging can be done with Empire's Group 3 plants versus Beaumont."

3978 Does that look like they were buying for their needs? It looks like they were buying to stabilize prices.

Here is another Skelly document. On January 9th, 1936, Vice President Atkins, of the Skelly Company wrote to Emby Kaye. (This is Exhibit 95.)

> "On the present program, we are obligated—"

We are obligated. Is there anything told the P. and C. Committee or the Petroleum Administrative Board, or the Government, in these casual talks, in March and May, about these people being obligated? No, indeed. They contented themselves in saying they were simply buying individually; without concert. Simply what they needed? No. All Arnott's group was doing was pointing out where it was, and yet this record is packed jam full of evidence, not from one company, but from a number of companies, showing that those companies considered that they were bound,—obligated in an agreement.

> "On the present program, we are obligated for about 50 or 60 cars a month of outside material, largely third grade which is rather burdensome at this season of the year when our sales of third grade are the lowest."

3979 Here is January of 1936; right in the winter time; he is obligated to buy on the Program, this third grade, which, for this season of the year, is burdensome. Does that sound like need, gentlemen?

And this same man writes again, on the same day, January 9th: (Exhibit 96)

> "I wish to acknowledge your letter on obligations in the buying program of 10 cars 70 Octane and 55 cars of U. S. Motor. I trust that you will be able to use some of this U. S. Motor in Oklahoma, even at points where you are buying or exchanging gasoline. It may be that we will have to eliminate some exchanges * * *"

Not going to eliminate buying in the program, but eliminate some of their advantageous exchanges.

> "inasmuch as our sales of third grade gasoline at this season of the year are so low that we cannot move anything like this volume of this product to our own stations."

Here is another company, the Phillips Company. Here is the defendant F. L. Koopman; February 8th, 1935. Here is one of the uplift buyers, I spoke about, going it alone. February of 1935. And he writes to the Budget and Operating Committee of his own company. This is what he says.

This is before the pool started operating. Bear this 3980 in mind.

> "In order to hold the market at its present level, it will be necessary to purchase approximately 150 cars, which material will have to be shipped to our Houston terminal to apply on future cargo business. At this time, it is doubtful, considering fractionating and storage loss, whether we can make a profit in reselling.
> "Our estimated sales for the month of February is 1,200,000 gallons less than our purchases, therefore on taking this into consideration, we have very little interest in maintaining the present price structure. A decrease of one-quarter cent in price, balancing sales against purchases, saves the Phillips Petroleum Company approximately $3,000.00.

> "Due to the fact that no. 26 and U. S. Motor are the same price, and that our purchases exceed our sales, and further we stand a chance of losing money should we buy additional gasoline to support the market, we recommend that we let the market take its own course and not purchase gasoline at this time.
>
> "May we have your approval."

3981 And yet you find the Phillips Company up to its neck and its ears, supporting this market when the program gets going.

So much for need. I could overwhelm you. Quotation after quotation from similar lines. The fact of the matter is, gentlemen, that the question can be so obscured—these great big companies that make not only gasoline but all the petroleum products, fuel oil, kerosene, and all that sort of thing, have the most fluctuating output. Sometimes they put out a large amount of gasoline, and then a month later they will put out a small amount of gasoline. Fluctuating capacity.

And that is so flexible as to meet the demands for the various kinds of products, and their capacities at which they run for gasoline may vary with thousands of barrels. So it is nothing to them if they want to take on a few more extra cars, step down their runs, make a little bit of some other product, make room for it in some way, store what they are making, and send what they are buying direct to the consumers, nothing to them at all.

The defense may try to make a point that they bought very little. The amount they bought 600 or 700 cars in one field and six or seven hundred cars in another 3982 was a small amount.

That is what the Government insists that it was a small amount, a trifling amount. It was just enough to affect that price.

So that it wasn't a purchase for need or anything of that kind.

And now on the question of obligation and shares: I am going to run pretty fast through these and let them speak for themselves.

First, Mr. Noel Robinson, speaking at the allocators' meeting—he is vice-president of Tide Water—says this:

> "—so that we would know what the volume of this gasoline would be, and that is the procedure that I think we ought to discuss. It seems to me he has rather clearly outlined the basis for that procedure, which would be to accept as part of the demand the > volume of gasoline both which the companies estimate themselves they will have an outlet for, plus the volume the buyers will agree definitely to take over this period of months. That would become their fixed demand. Their excess would have been agreed upon by the buyers; that would constitute demand; they would then have as a fluctuating demand their own estimates of their own outlets, and it would seem > 3983 to me that we could hew to that line pretty closely and certainly require them, in case they did not meet their own estimated outlet demands, to curtail correspondingly their production,—"

Now, that is Robinson's idea of the plan in the middle of March, 1935.

These companies are to agree definitely and, gentlemen, they were talking about East Texas then. East Texas is where the opening statement tells you that they didn't have any understanding of any nature whatever, and I told you it was my idea of the law and the Sherman Act that it isn't necessary to have any agreement at all.

And then here they had called the number of shares and obligations, the amount they were going to agree definitely to buy stated as late as March. They cannot say this was in the beginning of things; this was some idea that was abandoned. Oh, no. The buying pool started March 1st, and this gentleman is talking about it March 15th.

Frueauff, vice-president of Cities Service Company, to Brandli, March 21, 1935, Exhibit 454:

3984 "We would like in here—"

That is our big Cities Service Company—

> "—just as soon after the first of the month as possible, a statement of gasoline purchased and the name of the company, separated as regards East Texas and Group 3.
>
> "No information regarding exchanges is necessary—"

He is not interested in that, exchanges—

> "—but in order for us to determine the over-all company's—"

That is the big Cities Service Company we have all heard so much about—

> "—the over-all company's participation in a general buying movement—"

Mid-Continent and East Texas as well—

> "—we need to know very early in each month just what we have done, it having considerable bearing > on what we might have to do in the then present month."

What he might have to do! Doesn't talk about need—that is obligation.

F. L. Koch of Phillips to the high officials, Hughes, Gardner, and Frank Phillips, himself, March 23, 1935, Exhibit 509:

3985 "The sales department is agreeable to the purchase of 'Q' gasoline during the summer months only—"

Q gasoline is regular gasoline made so by a little bit of tetraethyl lead.

> "—during the summer months only, for sale under the '66' trade mark—"

Phillips 66 trade mark—.

> "—for shipment into territory which will not affect our pipe line savings, even though there may be a difference in the specifications, for we feel that further advances can be made in the tank car market and resultant increases in the service station price, thereby making our company additional money.
>
> "The purchase of tank car 'Q' gasoline will affect the market while the purchase from the Barnsdall—"

That is a sister major—

> "—will have no effect whatever as they are making this material especially for us. With only 250,000 barrels of gasoline to be purchased we feel that same can easily be made between now and September.
>
> "A further thought in connection with the purchase of gasoline is that we are committed to a program of supporting the tank car market—"

That sounds like obligation, doesn't it? Committed to it.

> "—and it is very much to our interest to establish 3986 a high middle octane price due to the fact that the majority of our sales are based on this bracket in the trade publications."

What clearer statement can you have of purpose and intent and obligation than that? Obligated to the program, and it is important to them to get middle octane price up,

> "due to the fact that the majority of our sales—" are going to the jobbers, and

> "based on this bracket in the trade publications."

Well, it reads like the indictment.

Chamberlain of Pure on May 14, 1935, writes to Snider, an official of Pure Oil Company at Chicago, Exhibit 488:

> "Some of the major refiners continue to withhold their support which is unfair to those who are supporting this movement for the benefit of all. We have never taken our allocation—"

Our allocations! Don't confuse this with the allocations in the refinery allotments. There are so many of these terms that are used in the oil business that are used differently. This "allocation" is the allocation that was allotted to them in the buying pool.

> "We have never taken our allocation of five cars per day any week since the buying program started but this is the result of inability on the part of the > 3987 suppliers to furnish material meeting our requirements.
>
> "I told Mr. Buckley—"

Here is Chamberlain of Pure tells Buckley of Cities Service—

> "—that while we wanted to support the program insofar as posible, we hoped that he would keep us advised if and when others were not doing their part."

"Their part," gentlemen! Is that individual companies buying individually their needs without any concerted action, or have they got allocation, obligation, and parts and shares?

> "He informed me that he would be in possession of a complete resumé of allocations and purchases early this week and we would be given a copy. My understanding is that Shell has never supported the program and possibly some others have failed to do their share."

Share! Watching each other to see if each one takes his part of the burden!

And Snider writes back to Chamberlain, May 16, 1935, Exhibit 487:

> "We trust you will keep in close touch with Mr. Buckley and should it develop that the major companies generally are not adhering to the buying program you will advise us. However, as a matter > 3988 of fact, and for your own information, we have been extremely short of gasoline recently, and have really needed—"

He needs it sometimes, when he needs it, he emphasizes it—

> "—really needed all of the material which we have > bought, and undoubtedly will continue to need it although it might be if a large portion of the companies now purchasing gasoline decide not to purchase it we would also want to discontinue our purchasing."

He doesn't need it so badly but he is going to continue to purchase if the others go back on their obligations and fail to purchase their share, and he wants to watch.

Of course, there is little honor among thieves, gentlemen. They are going to watch each other.

Koopman to Hughes, Phillips, May 31, 1935, Exhibit 516:

> "Most of the gasoline offered by the above named brokers originates in East Texas. * * * He advises that all refiners had agreed to buy their share of this surplus gasoline. As an example he stated The Globe, in Chicago, would take up to forty cars of any material that was in transit and showed up in that area."

That is, McDowell of Mid-Continent advised the Phillips Company that their share—don't pass by that ref-3989 erence to Globe. It is quite interesting in connection with the testimony of Mr. Vaughn about Globe.

> The Globe Companies, he said, "in Chicago, would take up forty cars of any material that was in transit and showed up in that area."

That is up in Chicago. And this is in May of 1935. And here is Globe prepared to do its share up in Chicago. It shows up in the hands of brokers and is going to hurt the market up there, and they are going to be prepared to take up to forty cars. Stack that up against the testimony and the attempt to impeach the testimony of Mr. Vaughn, who was in Globe's office in September and heard Globe talk—Meece of Globe talk to Shell in connection with an effort that Globe was making to follow out this very promise to take up this extra gasoline in the brokers' hands of Vaughn in September.

And, gentlemen, if we had the time, you can substantiate with these documents everything—just put them together just like a picture puzzle. There it is (indicating). Weigh that against the testimony of Meece.

Buckley to Brandli, December 2, 1935, Exhibit 42:

> "Sinclair Monday purchased approximate two hundred cars East Texas aviation—"

3990 That is aviation gasoline, a very high octane.

> "—for movement Gulf—"

That is the Gulf of Mexico.

> "—for movement Gulf over December. Reported > four and three-eighths refinery. This is in addition to regular weekly commitments at going market prices."

Atkins of Skelly to Kaye of Skelly Company, January 9, 1936, Exhibit 95:

> "On the present program, we are obligated for about fifty or sixty cars a month of outside material, largely third crude which is rather burdensome—"

Tuttle to Nagle of Skelly—Tuttle the one on the mechanical committee with McDowell and Jacobi, and afterward an official for Skelly Company—March 18, 1935—there are a number of exchanges like that, Exhibits 102 to 117, inclusive. He says in there to the Skelly Company,

> "Don't forget to report to the Western Petroleum Refiners Association—"

That is where Bourque had his headquarters, the man who consults with these committees and shows them the amount of surplus—

> "—Don't forget to report to the Western Petro-> 3991 leum Refiners Association—"

Does that sound like obligation? That looks like they were keeping an eye on each other to see that each one did his share.

And Skelly Company writes to the Western Petroleum Refiners Association and says, March 19, 1935, Exhibit 118:

> "Confirming our telephone conversation yesterday, you were instructed that, under the inter-refinery buying program now in effect, Skelly Oil Company should be credited—"

Credited!

> "—with buying six cars of U. S. Motor gasoline, 63/70 octane, on March 8th, at four and five-eighths cents per gallon, Group 3, from Sunray Oil Company."

Skelly Company to Bourque reporting on some purchases in the Mid-Continent field by that company.

Well, there are a number of exchanges, here, 112 to 117, and this appears:

> "These purchases are to be credited to Skelly Oil Company under the general inter-refinery buying agreement which is now in effect."

One official of Skelly to another official of Skelly in May, 1935:

> "I realize under the buying program, we can't > 3992 always do what we want to do."

Why can't they do what they want to do? Because they have agreed to do something else.

Another official of Skelly to another official of Skelly, December 20, 1935. This is Exhibit 125.

> "I realize we are probably committed to buy from certain people—"

Again in another communication here, Exhibit 127:

> "—we are committed—"

Skelly.

Another Skelly document, January 9, 1936—think of it, way down in 1936.

> "I was under the impression that we had gasoline lined up on our purchase obligations."

And then he says—he wanted to make some change in it—

> "—if that is all right with the committee."

And another one, January 9, 1936, Exhibit 96. He talks about—

> "I wish to acknowledge your letter on obligations in the buying program—"

And so it goes. Obligations, obligations!

Ruether to Lakin, March 20, 1935, Exhibit 179:

> "Jacobi tells me The Pure Oil Company are not purchasing any gasoline from their partner Taxman > 3993 Refining Company, in the Panhandle District. Taxman has about thirty cars of third grade octane which he is trying to move and may cut his price below three and seven-eighths cents if he does not get prompt relief.
>
> "Jacobi suggests we purchase some of this gasoline in view of our not having to take any of Cushing's production; he is also pressing McElroy—"

That is of Pure—

> "—to do his share of purchasing."

Jacobi of Socony is pressing The Pure Oil Company to do their share.

And here is Shell Company talking about it (indicating).

And here is another communication in the Shell files about the same situation, March 20, 1935, Exhibit 183:

> "Jobbers have been filling their storage in anticipation of rising prices and this, coupled with the activities of the 'buying group', has resulted in the removal of virtually all surplus gasoline from Oklahoma, Kansas, and to a lesser extent, North Texas; in the Panhandle, about thirty-five cars of surplus gasoline in the hands of the Taxman Refining Company has not been cleared, owing to Pure, 3994 who were assigned this purchase from Danciger, not carrying out their part of the program."

3995 Jacobi to Romer on that subject of the turning down of an advantageous exchange with Empire, so that they could continue to buy in the pool:

> "Of course, the gasoline purchased from Omar, etc., has helped the market structure here decidedly in the last sixty days, and has enabled Socony to do its part in the inter-refinery buying."

So, gentlemen, I have come down to only three more short topics.

June 17, 1935, Buckley wrote Brandli—June 17, 1935, let's locate it. It is down here (indicating on chart). I am pointing now to the Schechter decision eliminating the Code, and here is June the 17th, 1935. Bear in mind, all of this and all of '36 come after the Code is completely out. You don't have to be even disturbed with this half-baked argument about the Code.

And he writes, June 17th, 1935:

> "It is our understanding there has been some concern in the East with the elimination of the Code, as to whether tank car prices in the interior would maintain present levels. Through the ability of the industry"— > of the industry—
>

3996

> "—to stabilize itself?"—
>
> to attempt to stabilize itself—
>
> "—in the so termed Mid-Continent area, there was considerable gasoline purchased by the major companies during the first week in June,"— full steam ahead—

> "—causing many observers to feel that the amount of distress gasoline which would overhang the market could not be easily absorbed."

It is going to be even more difficult.

> "—During the second week in June, practically no gasoline was available to the larger refiner purchasers, and a few who could not wait for supplies entered the East Texas market for material."

And, gentlemen, consider that in this period after the Code that McDowell and Jacobi and Ashton and Lakin and Bullock and the rest of them were holding their meetings, month after month. The so-called Tank Car Stabilization Committee didn't lose any dignity at all, in its own estimation; it went steadily on through, right into '36, into February of '36, meeting after meeting.

I think it is a good way to remember this case, to think of the calendar. Think of the telephone calls from 3997 Buckley, the liaison man in East Texas, month after month through '35; working just as hard, calling Arnott, reporting to Arnott, seeing Arnott, meeting with Arnott—meetings, meetings, meetings of great big refining companies—holding the line, the same purpose, the same intent, the same result.

Mr. Arnott tells you with regard to some of those meetings after the Code that he was discussing another code, a proposed Federal Trade Commission Code. Well, he wasn't going to be any more frank with the Federal Trade Commission Code than he was with the N. R. A. Although he was going full steam ahead in the Mid-Continent field and in East Texas contemporaneously with the formation of this new suggested Federal Trade Commission Code, he wasn't inserting one word, not one word in this new proposed code that would legalize or expose or call attention to this pool, which is in full and complete and steady operation.

And as I have read these documents, gentlemen, I called attention to their dates, and you will remember they are of the same tenor and of the same force and of the same number on after the Code as before the Code.

June 1st, 1935, after the Code, Warner to Collins of Tide Water, referring to the effect of the Schechter decision, Exhibit 258:

3998
> "When the information circulated that some of the small refiners were becoming uneasy and increasing their spot offerings,"— what happened then?

> "—the major companies promptly put forth more effort toward clearing the open market of any excess gasoline that might cause a general break in the established price structure."

In June, more effort.

Warner to Collins, June the 8th, '35:

> "The reaction of the Mid-Continent Gasoline market as a result of the invalidated Oil Code has been very encouraging to date."

Even the legitimate allocations and all the rest are out; nevertheless, the market is holding its own. Can they ascribe any great virtue to the allocations under the Code? They ceased May the 27th, 1935. And yet the line held, right where they had pinned it and pegged it.

> "—Present indications point to a continuation of a steady market in the near future. Close cooperation"— here, in June—close cooperation—not even any excuse whatever for meetings as to anything, even as to retail stabilization now—

> "—Close cooperation on the part of both large and 3999 small refiners has kept the spot market well in hand."

Skipping down a little bit:

> "—These views apparently are based on the assumption that refiners in general who have benefited by the cooperative plan will continue—will continue in the buying program"— not a new scheme, not voluntarily—

> "—will continue in the buying program and voluntarily adhere"— to what?

> "—to allocated refinery operations. The movement of spot gasoline has been somewhat below the normal seasonal demand this week, due to weather conditions,"— away down here in June, bad weather conditions—

> "—but the companies participating in the buying program have kept a watchful eye for any gasoline that might resemble distress material, and to date no noticeable weak spots have developed."

October—October, 1935, months after the Code—Buckley to Brandli, Exhibit 32:

> "Mr. Arnott has wired requesting attendance at a meeting in New York on Wednesday, that report may be made to individuals who are interested in the status of the East Texas refinery situation."

4000 He is in the same capacity, both of them are: Arnott giving orders to Buckley, requiring Buckley to come post haste, post haste to New York to another meeting of refiners in the fall of '35, to make a report. Does that sound like adherence?

And I called your attention yesterday, as late as January the 29th, 1936, Arnott wiring to Frueauff of Cities Service—Socony-Vacuum's vice-president to the Cities Service vice-president:

> "East Texas situation needs prompt handling in order to keep in line need your help very much what we need is your order for fifty cars—what we need is your order for fifty cars. Will you give me your help Answer Roosevelt Hotel, New Orleans."

There is where the need is; the need is to protect the price. That is the only need.

As late as January of '36.

March the 21st, '36, a Shell document, Lakin to Fraser:

> "A much firmer undertone has developed in the Group 3 market with the return of normal temperatures. Refiners in this area generally are adhering > 4001 to publication quotations. A material improvement has occurred in East Texas. Surplus stocks in that field have been taken off of the market by inter-refinery purchases."

March of '36, gentlemen.

August the 27th, '35, a couple of months after the Code went out of existence—one official of Skelly to another, Exhibit 122:

> "We are purchasing today from Rock Island ten cars of Power-max and ten cars of octane Aro-max, these purchases being made in connection with the inter-refinery buying program which is still in effect."

Don't have any of these smart gentlemen that follow me tell you in the face of that evidence that this thing didn't continue in exactly the same status as it was before the Code, after the Code.

And I think I exposed, gentlemen—if I didn't, it was my own weakness; it wasn't the weakness of the evidence—I think I exposed yesterday any claim for any inducement or instigation on the part of the Government, even while the Code was in effect. And here you have got it without even any color of a Code.

June 7th, '35, Jacobi to Maguire, Exhibit 73—after the Code:

> 4002 "Tank car prices on gasoline have advanced an eighth of a cent this week"— that was his last recommendation—you remember, that was the last golden stair; the last recommendation before he made that final one in January of '36—

> "on all grades. If present tank car prices hold, and I believe they will, it is expected that the Standard of Indiana will advance service station prices another three-tenths or four-tenths of a cent within the next week."

That illustrates what I told you yesterday about that lag in the advancing of the retail prices. They have got the tank car prices up that final jump, that final step; now he expects there will be a little lag—and in the meantime the jobber is going to suffer because he is only going to get a split margin protection, not a full margin protection of five and a half cents—and then he expects the retail market to be put up by the market leader, the Standard of Indiana.

I told you yesterday how Buckley and Jacobi and these others were anticipating a crude oil advance. Away up there in the early summer of '35, we hear it from Buckley, that if they succeed in holding this tank car market up, that then they can pull and hoist themselves by their own boot straps, and raise the crude oil price; and then they 4003 will have an excuse for going further with the tank car price. Here is Jacobi, in the fall of '35:

> "I can hardly believe—I cannot believe that the Standard Oil Company of Indiana will advance tank wagon or service station prices in the winter time"— they did do it, though—

> "—and without such an advance, higher raw material costs or higher tank car prices could hardly be justified."

He is reasoning in the right way. He says they have got to have an advance in the retail prices before they can justify the tank car price, or a rise in the crude, or raw material costs; and even he doesn't think the Standard of Indiana, in the middle of the winter, will raise its prices. And he says this—this is his prophecy, and the facts were more favorable than he thought:

> "In April or May"— that is, of '36; he is writing now in the fall of '35—

> "—Standard Oil Company of Indiana and others will no doubt feel more like supporting a crude oil price advance and raising the retail price. Tank car prices could then advance, and higher retail prices could be properly supported."

4004 Mr. Crawford: If the Court please, I wonder—the Government is very much concerned about saving the strength and energy of Mr. Lewin. I wonder if we might have a few minutes recess?

The Court: I thought perhaps he might finish before the recess.

Mr. Crawford: I am afraid not.

Mr. Lewin: It will only take me about ten minutes to finish.

The Court: Do you want to finish now, or after recess?

Mr. Lewin: Anything you prefer.

Mr. Crawford: Let's have a recess.

The Court: We will take a recess.

(Thereupon, at eleven o'clock A. M., a recess was taken.)

4005 (Following the recess the Court resumed its session at 11:15 o'clock A. M., and the following proceedings were had:)

Mr. Lewin: I am glad to tell you, gentlemen, that I won't punish you very much longer listening to this hoarse voice of mine and I will give way to people who have more melodious voices at any rate.

I have got two documents that I want to read. One is a memorandum from the Shell files, from Mr. Ruether, February 6, 1935, in which he discusses that meeting of the so-called tank car stabilization committee. Bear in mind, gentlemen, what he does say in this, and what he does not say. This is a memorandum from one official to another, written for the purpose of that person giving them information on which they can rely, telling them the whole story. That is the only reason for a memorandum, gentlemen, so they won't forget just exactly what transpired. That is why they write it down. (Reading Exhibit 177-A):

"The committee on gasoline purchases met in Mr. Bullock's office with the following attending:

"Mr. Bullock," a high official of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana—

"Messrs. Bullock, Jackson"—

Standard of Indiana—

"Bourque"—

4006 Western Petroleum Refiners Association—

"Miskell"—

Cities Service—

"Tuttle"—

Cities Service Export Company—

"O'Shaughnessy"—

Globe Company—

"Ashton"—

Lubrite, Socony-Vacuum—

"McDowell"—

Mid-Continent—

"Karstedt"—

Continental—

"van Eeghen, Ruether"— of Shell—

"The effect of lower tank car markets for gasoline on the retail price structure, was discussed, particularly low octane, since this grade controlled, Mr. Jackson stated, the Indiana's policy in fixing the retail price.

"The committee (except Karstedt) unanimously agreed that a continuous"—

All these words have the strongest kind of meaning.

> "a continuous purchasing program is necessary to take off the market surplus material from North > 4007 Texas, Panhandle, Kansas and Oklahoma, Bourque stated there is approximately 650 cars surplus, this month, in the areas mentioned.
>
> "It was agreed that the most efficient method to handle the situation would be for an individual major purchaser to arrange with individual small refiners to keep their surplus off the open markets—in this manner the purchases would be effectively placed"—

Effectively placed!

> "and the buyer would be given the opportunity"—

The buyer with the major company!

> "would be given the opportunity of using his purchasing power to influence the operating program of the small refiners to stay within his allocations, etc. This program was considered practical and much support to the previous haphazard purchasing."
>
> "The question of allocation"—

Not allocation of refinery runs, but allocation of individual refiners—.

> "The question of allocation of the individual refiners to major purchasers"—

The dancing program—

> "was left to a committee of three, Messrs. Bullock, > 4008 McDowell and Bourque, who will present the plan to the prospective buyers in Chicago on next Monday evening (after the general meeting) together with an estimate from Bourque of the surplus involved for the next ninety days of each of the refiners usually having distress material.
> "It was generally assumed that all companies would come in to the picture since a stable retail market requires a higher tank car market."

Now, gentlemen, just consider that if you will. You take that exhibit with you to the jury room, and there you have got a memorandum on which you can rely as to what they were planning on and what they were not planning on, and you can search it for statements of needs and non-concerted action, and helping the independent refiners, and all the rest of it if you want.

But that is not all. A memorandum contemporaneously written for the purpose of perpetuating the facts, written by a high official of a major central division of the Sinclair Company, one Sus—and he has not been off the stand so long that we have forgotten him—and written to perpetuate the facts and all the facts that transpired in a meeting of this so-called tank car stabilization committee a week later, after the one I have just read you, the meetin in the evening of February 11th in Chicago. Stack 4009 this memorandum, gentlemen, up against McDowell's testimony as to the February 11th meeting, in which he makes two points; one, that there was no discussion of curtailment of the buying companies' refinery runs. That he swears to, page 1189 of the record.

And he makes another point; that nothing was said as to the quantity.

> "Many of the men there were presented with how much they were going to have to buy."

Stack that up against this memorandum written at the time for company purposes by Sus, a high, responsible official of the Sinclair Company who came to that meeting, was invited in there along with Dinkins—Dippel, I mean—to get the Sinclair participation as well as these others. And here is the memorandum gentlemen; it won't hurt—you have heard it recently, but it won't hurt to hear it again, because it sums up the entire system.

And stack this matter coldly and clearly and business-like—coldly and clearly written, and business-like as it is—against that voluntary lecture that that man Sus had the nerve to try to give you gentlemen of a distorted picture of what they were about. Here is the cold memorandum.

> "A committee at a previous stabilization meeting had been appointed of which Mr. Bob McDowell was chairman to consider ways and means of establishing and maintaining an active and strong tank car market on gasoline.
>
> "This committee rendered a report to the effect that a movement is under way which will take the East Texas surplus gasoline off the market so that it will not be a disturbing influence in the Standard of Indiana territory."

What becomes now, gentlemen, of this claim that there was only a selling program of some small independent refiner in East Texas? Diverting the gasoline that normally would come in from East Texas and be available to the jobbers, diverted it, taking it off the market?

> "It was stated that this East Texas gasoline would move to the Gulf and then go to either the East Coast or for export.

> "A survey by the committee then indicated that the surplus gasoline, which would affect the Standard of Indiana territory only, amounted to 600 cars per month involving fifteen refining companies."

And those fifteen are about those fifteen that are specifically named in this indictment, that had this so-called surplus gasoline.

4011 "A report is attached which lists the refineries in the Mid-Continent field who will have surplus gasoline. This report shows their capacity, their crude runs, their allocations, etc."

Knows all about it; a thorough job. They know just what the burden is going to be.

> "The program of the committee involves fourteen major companies."

He is only talking about one pool now, not about both pools. There will be more than fourteen of both pools. He is talking about the Mid-Continent.

> "—each selecting one or more of these fifteen small refining companies, and the major company obligating itself to take whatever surplus gasoline this small refining unit will have from time to time."

Dancing partner obligation—allocation!

> "In other words, a major company would select from among the fifteen small refineries some company whose surplus or distress gasoline it could advantageously move."

Could advantageously move! That is, all it needed, what it could advantageously move!

"and in that way by dividing up these fifteen companies and these estimated 600 cars per month of 4012 distress gasoline no great burden would fall upon any one."

Dividing up the burden; not pointing out where they can satisfy their needs, but they recognize it will be some burden even when divided up, but he says it will be no great burden if divided up between the fourteen major companies.

> "A steering committee"—

That is, the Jacobi, McDowell, Tuttle, Ashton committee—

> "would guide and control,"—

Guide and control!

> "Periodically, the prices to be paid for this surplus gasoline by the major company to the small refinery. There was considerable discussion to the effect that this new program had more chance of success than any previous program"—

Even the ones which the Government approved—

"because of the way the steering committee would function and the fact they would be buying on an ascending market."

Keeping the market up—

"thereby keeping the market both active and strong, rather than buying on a descending market as previous buying movements had been and which previous movements had failed of any substantial success."

4013 Isn't that an amazing document?

"It was estimated that the absorption of these 600 cars per month by fourteen major refiners would only be equivalent to curtailing their own crude runs two percent."

They are going to make room for it. Curtail their own runs two percent, by those who buy the gasoline, sharing the burden, and they are able to put in their pockets millions by rigging that tank car price and enjoying those jobber contracts based on it.

What did Sus say about that, confronted with his own writing? Oh, he was just giving a measure which would just about be equivalent to two percent of their refinery runs, he says. What does he talk about curtailment? If he just wanted to give an estimate of how much it would be, he would say it amounts to two per cent of the output, instead of saying that it was intended to point out that the absorption of this gasoline by major companies would not seriously affect the majors' own runs. That is what he adds there. You stack that against his oral testimony on that stand under oath!

"Each purchase of a car, from time to time, by these majors of this distress gasoline, would be recorded in the Journal of Commerce as an individual sale."

4014 Here the Journal of Commerce claims to be reporting only sales to jobbers, and here it did not, or does not make any difference in this case. Here is the purpose: I told you at the start that if they had the purpose to affect these prices, it makes no difference what happens after that, and these people believe the Journal of Commerce is going to directly take the prices they pay, and put them in the Journal quotations as the basis for the open spot market.

"Each purchase of a car, from time to time, by these majors of this distress gasoline, would be recorded in the Journal of Commerce as an individual sale, and the number of these sales recorded would indicate an active market, and buying on an ascending market would tend to create a strong market."

4015 "And the number of these sales recorded would indicate an active market, and buying on an ascending market would tend to create a strong market."

Exactly what happened.

"The meeting in question was attended by all of the major companies, including such companies as Globe, Skelly, Mid-Continent, etc., all of whom indicated a willingness to select one of the companies shown on the attached statement and assume responsibility for their surplus.

"The writer had no knowledge and did not participate in this discussion. Mr. Dippel, however, . . ."

That is the other Sinclair manager of the Southwestern District.

"because of his knowledge of some of the purchasing we were doing in the west, tentatively stated that we might consider taking the output, of, say, the Wilcox plant. Mr. Dippel indicated he would report this matter to Mr. Carnes . . ."

Mr. Jack Carnes, the Vice-President of the Sinclair Company, one of the defendants here.

"and handle to a conclusion as to our participation in this movement."

4016 Would they have you believe that this man was ignorant? He went there for one purpose, and one purpose only, and that was to find out the facts. He was no child. Just as keen and smart and crafty as he could be, as he exposed himself on that stand,—just as evasive. You remember how he just ran riot, so that his counsel had to stop him. He wanted so much to tell you this cock-eyed theory they had. Smart and shrewd and grasping and treacherous. That is what he wrote for his own company. That is what he wrote for himself. That was the complete story.

And there isn't one word in there of need. On the contrary, there is everything in there about burden. There is no word of their helping independent refiners; on the contrary, it is help themselves. Not one word about concerted effort; on the other hand, complete concerted effort. Not one word of lack of agreement; on the other hand, the testimony of agreement. Not one word of a lack of intent and purpose to affect price; but direct, cold, clear words that price was to be the be-all and the end-all. Not one word in there that they were not going to use the trade journal as a chief instrumentality, which this indictment charges, whereby they could exact large 4017 sums of money from the jobbers and consumers and put it in their own pockets. On the contrary, the clear, cold statement that they discussed the fact that these sales would be recorded, sale by sale, in the Journal of Commerce, as a basis for a rise in the tank car market quotations.

So, gentlemen, I leave you with all of those documents and all that evidence, and in particular I leave you with the summary of the Government's case, given us here by Sus, produced here in response to a subpoena,—unaltered, authentic,—he admits he wrote it,—and let you gentlemen be the judges, and I am perfectly clear and easy in my own mind, in regard to trusting you sensible men to the clear-cut decision of this very simple case,—proved out of the mouths of the defendants themselves, and their agents.

And I ask you, gentlemen, if you want to encourage them to go on in their arrogant, high-handed, cruel, powerful way, and if you want to encourage other industries made up of the same type of men,—eager, grasping men, to take the law in their own hands and rig the price against the smaller man, then, I think the way to do it is to acquit them and let them go out and laugh up their sleeves that they did it and got away with it.

4018 But if, on the other hand, if you have respect for the law—and I know you have—and have pride in our American tradition and the sense of justice—that is a wonderful word, "justice", for all classes, and if you understand this evidence, and I know you do,—I have looked right in your eyes and I have seen you watch piece by piece this evidence, then gentlemen, you are going to bring in a verdict of guilty against these sixteen companies and these thirty-six individuals that rigged this market for their own aggrandizement and financial return. And I confidently leave it with you, feeling that you will not let your Government and the United States and its citizens and society down.

Mr. Brazeau: Your Honor, shall we begin now?

The Court: Yes.

4019 Thereafter, on January 18, 1938, Mr. Theodore W. Brazeau made the first closing argument to the jury, on behalf of the defendants. In view of the defendants-appellants Assignment of Errors numbers 37, 39 and 40, relating to remarks made in the closing arguments to the jury by Mr. Lewin and Mr. Crawford, counsel for the plaintiff-appellee have requested that the entire closing arguments to the jury by Mr. Brazeau, Mr. Thomas and Mr. Donovan be inserted in this Bill of Exceptions. Such closing arguments are hereinafter set forth. The closing argument to the jury by Mr. Brazeau is as follows:

4020 CLOSING ARGUMENTS ON BEHALF OF THE DEFENDANTS.

ARGUMENT BY MR. BRAZEAU.

Mr. Brazeau: May it please the Court, and gentlemen of the jury.

For some reason or other I was not invited to your Christmas party and this is the first time I have had an opportunity of wishing you a Happy New Year, which I do.

Gentlemen of the jury; there are sixteen companies and thirty-six individual defendants still on trial in this case. The individual defendants are so numerous that even after this long trial, I cannot, and I am quite sure you cannot, identify all of them. These individual defendants, except one, have come from distant states. They have been brought here to Wisconsin for trial on a serious criminal charge; and they have been held here in this court through all the long weeks of this trial under criminal process of this court, awaiting their fate at your hands. They are strangers in a strange land. While your absence away from home has undoubtedly been distressing, so much more so has theirs.

The character and reputation of these defendants are presumed to be good; and in spite of the statement 4021 of counsel here made time and time again, there is no evidence or no intimation to the contrary. It was stated by counsel that these men have been favored by fortune in arriving at the positions which they occupy. But, Gentlemen of the Jury, insofar as the evidence discloses, these men have come from humble places of the industry to positions of responsibility and honor. And now, these gentlemen attack that honor and it is put in question.

You have been selected from your ordinary walks of life to sit in judgment on these, your fellow men; not in judgment on one alone, charged with crime, but upon sixteen corporations and thirty-six individuals, each bearing separate and distinct relation to the circumstances involved in the Government's charge.

You are called upon to pass upon an issue to which the counsel for the Government, in his opening statement, says few lawyers, even, could give a perfect analysis. You are the final judges as to whether that evidence so difficult to analyze, shows these defendants, or any of them, guilty, beyond a reasonable doubt. Few men have been called upon to render more difficult service or to assume a greater responsibility. You have been accepted by the defendants as fair and impartial judges 4022 of their conduct, and you, under a solemn oath, have submitted to the performance of that duty.

I think, gentlemen, in the long weeks we have been together, I have learned to know you. I think I understand the character of the men I am addressing. These are the kind of Wisconsin juries that I have dealt with for years. I know that you have endeavored to understand all of his testimony as it has been produced; and I know that you have a determination to ultimately do what you deem to be just and right.

I know that you regard your oath as something more than a mere formality, and that you will, as you have sworn to do, view the evidence in this case fairly and impartially,—and that is all that the defendants in this case ask of you,—gentlemen of the jury.

Now, reference is made by counsel, in the opening statement to this—in their opening statement of their case to this jury, some months ago,—referring to these gentlemen, these defendants, as millionaires and billionaires. It was the key to what the Government intended to harp upon throughout the whole of this trial, and that is the largeness of these companies and the wealth of these defendants.

4023 It was stated by the counsel in his opening argument to the jury, he referred to Mr. Arnott, as an eighty thousand dollar man. The figure was incorrect but the motive was clear. It was to prejudice you gentlemen against him and against these defendants' case.

These companies were referred to constantly in the argument of counsel as powerful corporations. It was said here that they were represented by a hundred lawyers, the cream of the American Bar. I would be proud of the reference if I didn't question the motive. It was to create in your minds a prejudice against these defendants. There are a number of lawyers here,—not one hundred,—but there are a number of lawyers here. But, gentlemen of the jury, these lawyers have represented these companies for years. They know their corporate set-up. They know their relationships. They know their clients' intimate affairs. And they are here as observers in this trial, to suggest to counsel, from time to time, matters connected with their corporations which they otherwise would not know.

We could not do anything else. We could not conduct this trial in any other way with the attack that is made. But that is referred to for the purpose of poisoning your minds against these defendants.

4024 A quotation was given from Judge Ryan here of money-organized power coming into being, and referring to these defendants as falling within that class.

These defendants were referred to as oil barons. And I am using quotations from the opening statement to this jury, in the opening argument of counsel. The Standard Oil of Indiana was referred to as "that great octopus" and the court ordered that stricken from the record. "Largest corporations in the world." "Arrogant cruelty by large corporations." "Cruelty behind the combination." "Greedy and lust for power in these people." Arnott a "cut-purse and a pickpocket."

Just think of it, gentlemen of the jury. The great Government of the United States here, represented by men presumed to be fair and impartial even as prosecutors in this case and referring to a gentleman of Mr. Arnott's standing as a "pickpocket and a cut-throat". And for what purpose? For the purpose of poisoning your minds and prejudicing you.

Mr. Chaffetz: Did you say "cut-throat"?

Mr. Brazeau: Cut-purse. Quoting from Hamlet, I think it was.

By the way, Hamlet was crazy, according to all the authorities.

4025 And then the climax of all. Mr. Lewin gives his experience in Washington, D. C., as a tired public official, going to a bathroom, after his service during the day, and being rubbed down by a colored gentleman; and this colored gentleman being a great philosopher; and this colored gentleman says to Mr. Lewin that a poor man can get no justice; that he doesn't believe in justice; that a rich man always gets out and the powerful always escape.

Now, Mr. Lewin didn't tell you that story, emphasizing the fact that he takes a bath after his work in the Department of Justice, but he told you that story to try to ream into you that little bit of poison from this colored rubber, so that you would look on this evidence in a different light. Very cunningly done, but its purpose very obvious.

Now, all of this reference to power, and all of this reference to wealth that is made here is not to be answered by a colored rubber in some bathroom, but it is answered by this court himself. And I will take my philosophy, and I will take my rule of justice from this Court, His Honor, and not from a colored rubber in some bathroom in Washington. The Court said to you, when they referred to the wealth of these defendants at the open-4026 ing of this trial. He said these words:

> "But at this time I want to clear up in the minds of the jury this fact; that no evidence will be received as to the financial condition of any individual defendants or persons—"

I am quoting from his Honor now.

> "All persons, rich or poor, have the same standing in a court of justice; and you will disregard any remarks that have been made in reference to the financial condition of any of the defendants,—individual defendants. I think it is proper that I should make this remark at this time."

Now, gentlemen of the jury, that is a statement of our American idea of justice; very well said. And it is the statement that the Court wants you to understand and follow in your deliberations in this case. That is the Wisconsin doctrine of justice. I don't know what kind of appeal they would make in Washington, D. C., or in some other city. I don't know what response that would get from a jury, but I do know the response it would get from a jury here in Wisconsin. My experience has been enough to teach me that juries in Wisconsin want to do what is right, and they want to treat defendants with equal justice; that the one law for all. That is the American system of justice.

And the reason they want to poison your minds, and the way they attempted it here, gentlemen of the jury, is to draw your attention away from some other things in this case that they cannot meet in other ways. They want to poison your minds and prejudice you, so that in spite of anything that is done here, that you will have a feeling of hatred and prejudice against these defendants, and you will feel like going into your jury room,—their idea is, and in spite of everything, that you will find a verdict of guilty against these defendants.

4028 Now, at the outset of this case, gentlemen of the jury, the Government sat with an indictment in its hands. And it kept that indictment in its hands for quite a little while; and they thumbed it, and referred to it, and read from it. But the indictment began to disappear in the background, and you haven't heard much of it lately. And in the opening statement of counsel to this jury, he never once referred to that indictment—not once, except in a most casual way.

Now, in some modern countries, like Russia, men are punished and condemned wholesale in lots of thirty-six and sometimes more, because the prosecution so wills. And if the punishment can't be obtained upon one ground, it will be obtained upon another.

But, here in the United States of America, and in Wisconsin, we cling to the old-fashioned doctrine that in order to convict a man of a crime, you must inform him of the charge specifically that you have against him. You must not only inform him of the charge that you have against him, but you must prove the material allegations of that charge, and every material allegation of that charge, beyond a reasonable doubt. Innocence follows a defendant in this country, and in this state, from the time he is charged with crime until you end your deliberations in your 4029 jury room. And every presumption of innocence is to be indulged in his favor.

It is not my purpose to tell you what the law is, but I think I am safe in saying that the Court will say that if the evidence can be reconciled reasonably with innocence, it should be done. And if it is equally as consistent with innocence as with guilt, then these defendants should be acquitted. That is the American system, and the Wisconsin system of government.

And, in accordance with that requirement, the Government here has filed an indictment against these defendants. It is an extensive document, but it has a number of very distinct and very clear allegations—

Mr. Chaffetz: That document you hold in your hand is not the indictment; you don't want the jury to believe that is it, do you?

Mr. Brazeau: Not all of it, but I have got the indictment in it.

Mr. Chaffetz: Oh—I just didn't want the jury to misunderstand that that was the size of the document.

Mr. Brazeau: No, I am not going to deceive this jury—I am not going to use the same tactics that have been used here; I have no such intention. But the indictment is contained in this instrument, and occupies that much of 4030 this (indicating); and it has very distinct charges against these defendants.

And one of the charges, gentlemen of the jury, that is made in this indictment, is that these defendants combined to fix prices. And all through this trial you heard from this table over here (indicating), time and time again, "this is a price-fixing conspiracy."

Here, really, is the indictment (producing copy of indictment—

Mr. Chaffetz: A good deal smaller than the other document.

Mr. Brazeau: Oh, yes. But it is just as distinct, just as distinct as to its allegations.

We heard that this was a price-fixing conspiracy. And objections were made, time and time again, to evidence in this case, basing the objection on the ground that this was a price-fixing conspiracy.

Now, you have heard the opening statement of counsel to the jury—to this jury, their opening summation here—and there was not one single word or one single reference to any testimony about price-fixing, not one.

And I will take up other allegations of this indictment, particularly with reference to the part of this that is assigned to me, and I will show that not one of the 4031 material allegations in that indictment are proved.

Now, it isn't a mere circumstance, it isn't a mere accident that after this six hours of discussion to you by this counsel, that he has never opened that indictment to this jury, or recited to you the allegations of that indictment.

He has talked about the red herring—he took the red herring off the hook again, and said we were attempting to draw the red herring across the trail. Why, gentlemen of the jury, if there was any red herring drawn, it has been done in this opening statement to this jury; and you will find out before we get through the analysis of this evidence, if that is not true.

The Court: I think, Mr. Brazeau, this might be a good time to recess.

Mr. Brazeau: I think it would, too. The red herring is gone now.

The Court: Two o'clock.

(Thereupon, at twelve o'clock noon, a recess was taken until two o'clock p. m., of the same day, Tuesday, January 18, 1938.)

4032 Mr. Brazeau: May it please the Court—gentlemen of the jury:

I think when we adjourned for noon I had just hung the red herring back on the hook again, and that disposes of that part of my argument.

I think I ought not to go any further, gentlemen of the jury, without calling your attention to the general attitude that the Prosecution in this case has taken, notwithstanding that this is a criminal case and that these gentlemen are charged with a serious crime that might involve disgrace and a blot upon their characters for the remainder of their lives; yet the Government started out this prosecution, and has continued throughout, with the as-4033 sumption that what the Government says they did is to be final and a fact, taken as a fact to begin with; and that we weren't to be allowed to explain it unless we fought for the chance to explain it. And we have had to fight every inch of the way for a chance to explain what we did do.

In the opening statement to the jury, one of the counsel stated this to you:

> "Don't be disturbed because you are not understanding this case as it goes along. Not all the lawyers in the case, and I think very few of them, are able to make a perfect analysis from the evidence at hand as to what the set-up was. But you will, I am sure, keep in mind the major points—" in the whole case, in so far as the whole case is concerned, and the defendants? No—

> "—in so far as the Government is concerned in this prosecution; and that is the fact that these men went outside the law, placed themselves above and beyond it, and took over the power to do the things that that law says they should not do; and it is for that that this prosecution by the Government is carried out."

At that time, there was not a syllable of testimony 4034 in this case; there was nothing but the indictment, before we started. This statement to you doesn't state that the Government will attempt to prove this or that, or attempt to prove something else; but you are to start out and accept the Government's statement that this is a fact, without a syllable of evidence to support it, before there is any evidence to support it.

And then, as the case went along, day after day, we heard the objection made in court: "Well, that piece of evidence is no defense to a buying pool." And one of the counsel had the audacity to say—and I used those words as I arose from my seat over there and objected—to say that, "We have shown what they did. Now, the only thing they can show is, did they do it or didn't they do it?" And that is the attitude right up to this minute.

Now, we have contended throughout this trial that we had a right to show what we did do; that we were not obliged to accept what the Government says we did, and we were not obliged to accept what the Government said our purpose was; but that we had a right to show what we did do in this matter. And I think we have shown it.

Now, as I said, this matter is covered by an indictment. That indictment shows what the Government charges. It shows what the Government must prove. And in order to understand this whole case and the whole relation of 4035 these defendants to what they did, you must understand the condition of the country and the circumstances surrounding these gentlemen when they did act.

This country was in a serious condition. We were in a panic. Industries had shut down; labor was unemployed; wages were unpaid. The Government was interested in a stabilization move, not only for the oil business, but for all industry throughout the country. And there was a fight on. And the Government was fighting in alliance with industry, and that was the whole theory of the N. R. A. and the other acts that the Government took during that time. Now, you have got to understand that in order to understand the situation in this case.

Not only was the oil industry involved in that partnership with the Government, but every industry was involved. The Government, with the A. A. A., was attempting to put the farmer upon a decent, paying basis. They were attempting, through the N. R. A., to put industry on a decent, paying basis. They were attempting to get wages raised, through labor acts. They were attempting to put this country in a condition where the purchasing power should return.

Now, it isn't a benefit to the country to have any in-4036 dustry in distress. It isn't a benefit to the country as a whole to have any industry, the oil industry, or any other industry, or farming, operated at a loss. And the whole theory of this Governmental move was to put these industries back on their feet. And the industries that had the special favor of the Government at the time were the small industries of the country. And the Government had in mind that matters should be so arranged, that the laws should be so enacted that those small industries would be protected, and they would come under the cover of the larger industries.

Now, they enacted, as I say, the N. R. A.; and the oil industry itself was so important to the country, it touched our lives so intimately that the Government, as Colonel Donovan said in his opening argument to the jury, and I think he explained that beautifully, if you remember it—they arranged a special N. R. A., you might call it, or Petroleum Code for the oil industry, and it was governed by a special body. And that body had in mind the rehabilitation, not only of the major companies, the raising of wages, the shortening of hours, but the rehabilitation also of these minor or small industries within the oil business. Now, I wish you would keep that in mind when you are considering what these people did in connection with this matter.

4037 It was not an act of selfish, gluttonous, over-reaching men, as the Government would have you believe, at all. And if you are to take the view that the Government attempts to enforce here, or to impress upon you, then you are to assume the very opposite that the criminal law requires you to assume, and that is that men act innocently where it is consistent with innocence, and not criminally. The Government would have you go out of your way to find that all the motives of these defendants, all the acts of these defendants were selfish and criminal, even though there is an innocent explanation.

Now, in this indictment the Government alleges two buying programs. It alleges that these companies combined to fix a price for gasoline, and that in order to carry out their combination and illegal conspiracy, they carried on two buying programs. Now, the defendants are charged with a violation of the Sherman Act.

We have never disputed in this case—and go back to Colonel Donovan's opening statement to this jury—we have never disputed in this case that we carried on a concerted action to buy gasoline—never.

Now, every concerted action isn't a violation of the Sherman Act, by a long odd. There has got to be a concerted action that is unreasonable in its nature. A con-4038 certed action to rehabilitate an industry, to remove evils from that industry, to correct abuses in that industry, to put the industry back on its feet as a paying industry, to see that it can pay wages, that it can shorten hours, that it can improve the industry, isn't a violation of the Sherman Act. And there is no use of the Government coming here and claiming, just because we bought gasoline, that we were violating the Sherman Act, and that we are criminals. You have got to go back and analyze what we did, and see whether it was reasonable, and whether it was just for us to do what we did.

Now, letter after letter was read to you, in tiresome detail, in which it said that this company was buying in East Texas, and this company was buying in the Mid-Continent, buying gasoline—as though it was something new that the Government had dug up and discovered, and something terrible; and it was read with a voice emphasizing that they were buying gasoline down there. This letter here—why, great Heavens, gentlemen of the jury, if you will recall, Colonel Donovan stated to you in his opening argument to the jury just exactly what they were doing, and that they were buying gasoline, and that they were buying gasoline in a concerted effort to improve a situation. And to stand here and read letter after letter, as though 4039 that in itself was criminal, because some fellow took so much gasoline and another took so much gasoline, and that they thought the price would improve, and that they thought the situation would be cleaned up—why, that was just exactly what we were attempting to do, gentlemen of the jury.

Now, we were attempting to do that—there were two situations. There was the Mid-Continent buying program. And it was a buying program, there isn't any question about that. There is no dispute about that in this case. There is no use in shouting that, and assertion after assertion about it, as though that constituted a crime. And then there was buying in East Texas. There were those two situations.

Now, we have divided this argument into parts. What I say to you will be concerning East Texas. Mr. Thomas will treat the Mid-Continent program; and Colonel Donovan will treat the general situation. And we will review that according to the evidence that there is in this case.

Now, to begin with, gentlemen of the jury, with reference to East Texas: Can there be any doubt in the minds of anybody, even the Government attorneys, that there was a situation in East Texas that needed the attention of the industry?

You will remember the situation in East Texas. It 4040 is a field about fifty miles long, and about three miles wide. And it came into production in about 1930, the biggest oil field in America, a startling addition to the oil industry. And there were in 1936, in that field, 23,000 oil wells—and earlier than that, up into the twenty thousands of oil wells in that field. They tried to limit the amount of oil that could be taken. That field, as I remember the testimony—and I am almost afraid to use the figures, they are so large and so startling—it seems to me the testimony is here that that field was capable of producing three hundred million barrels of oil a day. Am I right in that?

Mr. Thomas: Yes.

Mr. Brazeau: They say I am. Those are figures beyond comprehension.

Now, it was explained to you in some detail how those oil fields work. One person owns a piece of land or a lease here; another owns a lease there; another there, all within the same field. One person sinks a well, another sinks a well on his land, and they both begin to take oil as fast as they can take the oil from the ground. It is wasteful; it is a violation of all we know about conservation; and it was something that the states and the Government 4041 didn't desire. And there were passed laws to forbid it.

There were laws known as proration, in which they set up boards and told the different people how much oil they could take from their lands or leases. That proration didn't work; it couldn't be enforced.

In 1934, there were millions and millions of gallons of oil, called hot oil, produced by people taking more than the Government allowed, or the state allowed, from their property at the expense of their neighbors; avoiding the payment of taxes on it, avoiding the laws of conservation, and creating a disaster in the industry. Millions of gallons of that hot oil poured up into the Mid-Western territory. And what was the effect of that?

The effect of it was to come in at times at a rate from a cent to two cents below legitimate oil, legitimate gasoline, and to demoralize the markets by creating what was known as price wars.

Now, those prices wars were not desirable, because somebody had to pay the bill. One person would begin, because he got a bunch of this hot oil—he would begin to sell it at a terrific discount. His neighbor had to do likewise, and so it spread from place to place, and you heard the description, sometimes spreading like wild fire into other 4042 states. It was not only a loss to the retailers in that business; it was a loss to the jobbers, it was a loss to everybody. And the Government desired that that be corrected. And it took measures to correct it.

4043 Now, the government had what was known as 9-C in the Petroleum Code to control the shipment of this hot oil in interstate commerce, to keep it from moving into places where it could do harm, and attempt if possible to curb the production of this illegal product.

That did not work. It continued even after that 9-C was in, and the attempt to regulate it, and in 1935 it still continued.

And then on January 7, 1935, the Supreme Court of the United States declared that law unconstitutional and void; and there was no curb, and there again this flood of gasoline, as told you here by Mr. Dyer, another growing flood of this hot oil in that district.

Now, that was a situation that had to be corrected. That gasoline could sell from a cent to two cents, sometimes three cents, less than legitimate gasoline, so that the producer of legitimate gasoline found his markets gone and his profits gone and his business ruined by a condition that existed there.

Now, what was done? Mr. Fischer, who represented a group of East Texas refiners, told those East Texas refiners after the introduction of the Connally Act into Congress, which was enacted February 22nd, as I remember it, to go in force on March 1st—and that act forbade absolutely the shipment of oil in interstate commerce, and was so 4044 drawn that its constitutionality could not be questioned—Mr. Fischer advised his plants, many of whom were hot oil merchants, dealing in hot oil, that they had to observe that law in the future, and observe the law of Texas which he thought was valid, regulating this hot oil production.

Now, the government claims that we were instrumental in organizing the East Texas Marketers Association for the purpose of selfishly serving ourselves, our own industry.

Well, the only trouble with that allegation in the indictment, and the only trouble with that assertion, is that there is not any evidence to support it at all. Now, the evidence is overwhelming that that was not true, and they cannot fasten anything like that on these defendants.

These people got together, these Texas marketers, and they organized an association, and you were told just how they organized it, and for what purpose. Mr. Buckley was on the witness stand, and he told of his relations with it. They called Mr. Cline on the witness stand, the secretary of the association, and he told about its organization.

They called Mr. Bradshaw, and he told about the organization.

They called Mr. Steiger, and he told about the organization. And the story is all one; and the answer to it 4045 by the government is that Mr. Buckley is a liar.

They cross-questioned him and cross-questioned him; they had him before the grand jury, and they had him here in your presence, and because he would not tell the things they wanted him to tell, why, then he is a perjurer and a liar.

And so they went through the witnesses, every witness that testified to those facts, and the same classification was made of those witnesses.

And they would have you believe, gentlemen of the jury, because they could not prove the opposite out of the mouths of these witnesses, then you are to assume that what they say is true anyway without any evidence.

Now, after those East Texas marketers got together under Mr. Fischer, their attorney, the question was how they could get their markets back. They had been hot oilers. It was a risk to deal, buy gasoline made from hot oil; it could be confiscated. It was not safe for these major companies to go into East Texas and buy gasoline with that threat before them, and they had been buying gasoline in times past, and they always needed gasoline; there isn't any question about that. But it was risky to go into that territory and buy that gasoline. As Buckley put it, and another witness, I think, they were scared to death of East Texas.

4046 Now, this association met, and the question was, how could they get these majors back in there to buy, how could they get them to trust them again as legitimate makers of gasoline and legitimate sellers of gasoline? They had been selling locally, everybody in East Texas. They had to get back markets with the majors. The natural outlet of their gasoline was in the Gulf and in East Texas itself. The freight rate was against them going north. That was not the place which gasoline ought to go under any circumstances.

So the question arose how to get the majors back to purchase in East Texas?

The natural way was to get somebody in whom the majors had confidence to present their case to the majors, and to attempt to get the purchasers back into that field, and the most natural person in the world to turn to was Buckley, Neil Buckley.

Neil Buckley had been a buyer down in that region. He knew all of those East Texas refiners. He was a person of attractive personality, as you saw on the witness stand; a friendly sort of fellow, a likeable fellow, a trustworthy fellow—not the scoundrel that the government paints him to you, not at all. There was not an element of that in Buckley's make-up.

4047 Buckley was acquainted with the majors, and he had been a buyer for the Cities Service Export Company, and he was the natural person for them to turn to there; and so they rang up Buckley and told him what they were doing, that they were organizing, that they intended to observe the laws of their country, they intended to deal in legal gasoline, they intended to favor the reenactment of the Connally bill and the act in the legislature that would help them, and that they were going to lead decent lives as sellers of gasoline, and would he be willing to help them?

He told them he would have to take it up with his people. That was his field of operation; he could do it, he could help them on the side and carry on his business. Well, they told him to take it up.

He telephoned Mr. Brandli, his superior in New York. Now, remember this; that the Cities Service Export Company was an export company. It sold gasoline on the seaboard, coastwise gasoline, and abroad. The world was its markets. It did not have any markets up here in the mid-western territory; it never sold a gallon of gasoline in the mid-western territory; it never derived a single penny of profit out of anything that ever happened in connection with this.

4048 And counsel said that after they reaped their illegal profits out of this, that they dissolved. Nothing could be farther from the truth. They reaped no illegal profit; they could not.

Mr. Buckley also wrote his story in that letter which is in evidence. They would have you think that we went back as far as January 30, 1935, before anybody ever heard of anybody questioning what we did, and that we had to get up a letter. It would have to be the most violent distortion of evidence I ever heard of.

He wrote this letter to his superiors, and does this sound as though the majors were in a combination down there, in a conspiracy? (Reading exhibit 14)

"Mr. H. E. Brandli,
New York Office:

"Several of the larger East Texas refiners commonly identified here as being the Fisher group, who are nominating themselves for classification in the 'survival of the fittest' are endeavoring to reopen the subject of a central sales agency for East Texas. You will recall that Mr. Bennett had an idea along this line last spring."

Mr. Bennette, a government representative.

"A meeting was held in Judge Starns quarters on the evening of January 29 to develop the subject, obtain the ideas of potential members in such an association, and if possible make preliminary plans 4049 for a corporation. Potential members are Arrow, Oil Refineries, The Wrather Interests, Southport Petroleum, Panama Refining, Union Refining, Danciger, East Texas Refining, Texas Oil Products, Gilliland, Long Star, McMurray, and two or three others. All of these people are not, however, represented by Judge Fisher.

"Jules Constantine of the Solarine Refining Company has been pushing himself rather strongly for the management of such an organization. His principal rival is Louis Green of Ft. Worth. Neither of them can secure cooperation from any large part of the proposed membership.

"It is the idea of this group, if an organization can be perfected, to endeavor to offer their products through the P. and C. committee to major oil companies. It is hoped that under such a method cooperation could be extended for the curtailment of runs during periods of slow demand and for elimination of dumping into the domestic market with resultant price slashing.

"While such an organization might accomplish much good,"

Now, listen to this:

"we doubt very much the ability of the sponsors in securing sufficient cooperation to warrant the suc- 4050 cessful functioning, for the present at least, of such a proposal. Entirely too much suspicion of the motives of neighbors exists today in East Texas. Furthermore, several refiners have advised us that under no conditions would they turn their output over to such an organization for disposal.

"As further details on this question may be available, we will advise you.

"Yours truly,
"Neil Buckley."

4051 Before that letter was sent out, he attached this postscript:

"Learned today that some of the members of the proposed organization discussed among themselves the possibility of obtaining cooperation from some of the major companies and furnishing an experienced man to operate the proposed agency for a period of six months or more. Their idea was to borrow the services of such an individual. We were asked whether we would consent to consider such a task were it offered to us, and replied that any overture along this line would have to be made to the officials of the company. You will recall that Mr. Bennett had such an idea last May or June."

Now, Mr. Brandli, the superior of Mr. Buckley, telegraphed back the following: —just observe this and see how absolutely out of joint this is with the theory that the Government attempts to impress on you:

"Arnott away on vacation."

Who is Arnott? Arnott was the Government representative engaged in the business of stabilization. I don't care whether there was a formal title of "Chief Stabilizer" or not. What figure does that cut in a criminal case like this when you are charging men with a crime? He was 4052 engaged in stabilization, and he took that title.

"Arnott away on vacation. Coates discussed matter with Jim Collett—"

Coates was a member of the P. and C. Committee, a superior of Brandli.

"—discussed matter with Jim Collett and Dr. Lederer—"

Who is Jim Collett? Chairman of the P. and C. Committee and a Government representative, and he is the one they discussed it with immediately. And who is Dr. Lederer? Why he was a member of the P. and C. Committee, in charge of labor and allocations, and a Government representative.

"—both Washington and both agree excellent idea. They believe majors will cooperate. Believe you will appreciate undertaking no small job and will require > endless amount of work to keep all these Texas refiners in line."

Now, the Government would have you believe that the meaning of those words, "keep all these Texas refiners in line," meant in line with some conspiracy. But it is plain enough from the situation existing there in East Texas, isn't it, how they had slopped over with their hot oil, and people didn't trust them, and they were trying to come in line and work on legal gasoline only. Isn't it plain what that meant? Can you give an evil interpretation to that when it is as plain as day, when there is an innocent inter-4053 pretation of that sentence?

> "You have the confidence of all here and believe you can put it over, so go to it. Best wishes for your success."

Now, Mr. Buckley took that—let me briefly call your attention to the evidence as to the character of that East Texas association, that the Government would make you believe entered into a conspiracy with these majors to do some evil thing.

And, remember, gentlemen of the jury, in spite of the fact that Mr. Lewin, in his argument to you, said, that these independent refiners entered into the conspiracy and were a part of the conspiracy, the only thing is that they didn't—weren't as big as the other—that they were part of the conspiracy, and remember this, that the Government never indicted one single member of that East Texas association, not one single company, or not one single individual did they indict.

And they didn't indict any company in the Mid-Continent field, not one of those individual companies, in spite of their allegation that they were a part of this conspiracy, and they didn't indict any single individual except one in the whole thing.

But they picked out these major companies, some 4054 of their employees, and some of their officers, and they indicted them. They didn't dare indict these individual companies, and they didn't want to indict those independent companies, because they couldn't come before you then and make an argument that these things were being done by powerful groups, as they had designated them here.

I want to tell you, gentlemen of the jury, this thing was shrewdly planned, the whole thing. We will then find out a little later what was back of this.

Now, what was that association down there. Mr. Fischer, the attorney who conceived the idea of organizing the association, referred to it on the witness stand here as a selling organization, a central organization to which each refiner could turn over his surplus and which would dispose of it like any of the coal companies of which the Supreme Court approved.

Mr. Travis, one of the organizers, and chairman of the committee to work out the plan, said the association was organized to act as a central agency, through which the members' surpluses of gasoline was to be sold. It was to offer impartially all gasoline the members had for sale with the idea of obtaining the best price obtainable.

Mr. Cline, the secretary of the association, was also on the witness stand and testified that it was his duty to 4055 try and find a market for the surplus gasoline of the members. He described the operation of the association, which was solely for affecting sales.

Mr. Buckley was on the witness stand, as I have already referred to, and described the character of the organization.

Mr. Bradshaw, who dealt with the association, described the operation by saying that its members would call Cline and tell him of the gasoline they had to sell, and he would contact buyers and try to make a deal with them.

Mr. Steiger of the Journal described the operation of it, and he said it differed from a buying pool; that they called it a selling pool; that it wasn't like the buying pool that the Government itself had conducted the year before.

Now, in face of all that testimony, what does the Government say? How do they answer it? How do they characterize this as something else than what this testimony shows? Why, every one of these are liars and perjurers, and connected in some way, in an evil way,—even though there were no indictments, named them co-conspirators—and, by the way, they have overworked that figure, so that they can brand everybody. When they can't do it in any other way, they brand them as a 4056 co-conspirator, to the grand jury unknown, and they so designated Jacobi at one time in this testimony.

Well, now, here you have the evidence—

Mr. Thomas: Bradshaw.

Mr. Brazeau: Yes, Bradshaw, although Bradshaw had been before the grand jury, he was a conspirator unknown and not indicted in this case.

Now, there is this East Texas Association. Now, there isn't any evidence to the contrary, and there isn't anything but insinuation, but there isn't anything but assertion by counsel to the contrary, not a single bit of it. Are you going to condemn a man, are you going to find a man criminally liable upon the assertion of counsel made in a loud voice, and an insinuation of guilt without anything to sustain it? I don't think you want to convict anybody on that kind of evidence, nor would you want to be convicted yourselves of a serious crime on that kind of evidence; of course, you wouldn't. And you will give these men the same show that you will want to give anybody or that you would want yourselves.

Now, let us go a little further with this situation here. I want to tell you how this was described as operating, and Mr. Cline was the organizer—the secretary of 4057 that association. Now, they attempt to claim here and they allege in their indictment, that Cline was appointed at the instigation of Buckley. Buckley said he was glad to have Cline appointed. Buckley was an ex-service man. Cline was an ex-service man, a wounded soldier. And he said he was glad to have Cline get the job. That is all there is to it. The association chose Cline. The majors had nothing to do with the choice of Cline one way or the other, and there isn't any evidence that they assisted.

Now, Cline was the man who operated this association, and he was on the witness stand and you have got the testimony. And this thing can't be thrown out of the window, and it can't be disputed.

He says,

> "The first thing every Monday morning I would contact all of the members of our Association, and I would find out two things from them; first, how much gasoline they would make during the week over and above their regular commitments which they would desire the Association to attempt to help them move."

Second, what they wanted for their product.

> "And I would say, for example, that Monday whether or not they wanted four and five-eighths, but some might hold out for more, and another > 4058 might intimate that if he couldn't get that, he might sell for less. And when the buyers called, I would try to sell them at four and five-eighths, and if we could get together, I would take the orders on that basis, and distribute them to the members. If a buyer would say that he would buy it at four and a half but not more, I would tell him I could not handle the order, that would suggest that he call > the refiners who I had talked with, that they might be willing to sell for less—"

Turn them over to deal with each other, and they negotiated their own price.

> "That order I would not consider handling through the association, but I charged a commission on those sales made at four and five-eighths, which I considered to be a fair spot market price for that day.
>
> "Frequently majors told me the price they would pay. Frequently they would say they did need material and they would ask what they could buy it for. They would often call me on Mondays, but the most of them bought gasoline the first part of the week for their week's requirements, and they would ascertain from me what they could buy gasoline for, and a few hours later or the next morning, they would call me and have an order at a specified price. I exchanged market information with the majors 4059 the same as any other sales manager. I don't remember giving them the amount of gasoline produced in the field. For example, if Bradshaw called me and wanted to know what the conditions were in the field, I would tell him the condition of the various refiners, whether they were sold up or had a certain amount to sell, what they considered the market was, and any other information I had.
>
> "I never said we had so much to dispose of, and would they take a certain number of cars. Sometimes I told them how much gasoline each refiner had and the grade. When Bradshaw called on Monday, he would either tell me what he was going to pay or would ask me what he could buy it for.
>
> "If he says, 'we will pay so much. That we consider a fair market price—' and I would try to get the material for him, and if he asked what it was going to cost, I would give him the prices that our members had given to me."

Now, Buckley described the association in just exactly the same way, its operation, and there is no testimony to the contrary.

Now, where is there any price-fixing conspiracy there? Remember when they formed this association, these Texas refiners were going broke. That is the undisputed 4060 testimony in this case. They were going broke. They were losing. You couldn't sell gasoline at less than five and four-tenths for the third grade gasoline and not go broke, according to the Government's own figures, and the price they fixed on crude. They couldn't pay a dollar for crude and have somebody else buying it for twenty-five cents, when it was hot crude and live. And this was an association organized so that these people could live.

Now, Buckley started out after he accepted this—he accepted it and he started out to help these people out and get in touch with the majors and get them to buy, not at high, arbitrary and artificial prices, as the indictment alleges—there isn't any evidence that he attempted any such thing at all, not a bit. He went out and started out—I won't take time to follow Buckley's ramifications—but he began going to the majors to attempt to get them to buy that gasoline at a fair price, at a fair market price.

Now, it would never do for those people to come down there. It wouldn't help these East Texas refiners out a bit, not one single bit. If they came down there, they began chiseling and buying down there at the lowest figure they could get that gasoline for. These were little 4061 refiners; they couldn't afford to store their gasoline. They didn't have storage capacity, and they didn't have the money to carry it. They had to keep on running, and they had to pay for their crude. If they quit running or stopped paying for their crude, or quit taking it, they lost their crude customers, and they lost their gasoline customers, as well.

4062 So they were in a bad predicament. That also, gentlemen of the jury, is the undisputed testimony in this case. And that is the position these small refiners found themselves in. Going broke; obliged to keep on and buy gasoline at a figure at which they couldn't make a living and exist. Now, these people came in to buy that gasoline.

What would the people in this country say; what would the government say, under the Petroleum Code, if these refiners appealed to the major companies to help them out,—these major companies that had the market for gasoline, that had the money to buy it; that had the storage facilities,—what would the people of this country say and what would the government say, under the Petroleum Code and what would these gentlemen (indicating government counsel) be saying to you, if these major companies didn't go in and use these resources to help these little fellows out? What would they tell you about it then? What kind of brutes would they be then? What would be the cruelty of that situation?

And they had the power to absolutely crush those people, if they so desired. There is no question about that.

Mr. Lewin has described their tremendous power.
4063 And don't you think, and don't you know, that they could have let those little fellows go and sink in the industry and gobbled up everything they had, if they were that kind of men? And it wouldn't have lasted long either. Not a bit of it. But they didn't. But they went out.

And he sought advice of these people and he appealed to them. He told them their situation. He told them they were going broke. He told them that they had resolved to run on legal crude and to obey the laws of their country and that it would be safe for them to go back and buy gasoline.

He saw in Pittsburgh, one of the first persons, Dr. Lederer; and Dr. Lederer introduced him, over the telephone, to Mr. Arnott, who was at Pinehurst. Buckley had never even met Mr. Arnott up to that time. And there is no evidence to the contrary.

And again, the government would have you insinuate that in the organization of this association and in the conduct of this association at the outset, that Mr. Arnott, the arch conspirator, was the one that directed it. But he never knew Mr. Arnott; had never met him. And Lederer introduced him and his cause to Mr. Arnott, over the telephone. And later he saw Mr. Arnott, and he went to 4064 Mr. Arnott because he was Chief Stabilizer, and because this was right along the line of his work, to rehabilitate these small industries within the petroleum industry.

And he went down and saw Mr. Arnott at Pinehurst, and Mr. Arnott listened to his story. He heard what he had to say. He heard his representation but gave him no answer. He would look into it further. Mr. Arnott did look into it, and he did resolve to help him in the work that he was doing. And he enlisted in that help, and he invited Buckley to meetings that the majors held—that these committees held—of the Code, and one of them at New York, and one of them at Chicago, in which he allowed Mr. Buckley to present his case to the majors.

They were suspicious. They didn't enter into it readily. It was a task that these majors had to take on themselves,—not something that they grabbed at, in an effort to make an evil situation but a task that faced them to help these small refiners.

And finally Buckley enlisted a number of them and got them back in there, and their confidence to go back in and buy gasoline. Mr. Arnott assisted him throughout, in this whole thing, helping him get buyers. They enlisted Mr. Jack Carnes in the work, and he helped in 4065 getting buyers. And they argued this matter with the majors. They got some of them to go back in there and buy gasoline. The allegation in the indictment is that ten majors entered that field to buy. There are only four of them left in this indictment. One of them is Cities Service Company that never bought a gallon of gasoline or produced a gallon of crude oil. And it is announced, time and time again, to this jury, about this Cities Service Company,—this big company, you heard about, buying down there. Cities Service Company never bought a gallon of gasoline down there.

So, in spite of the fact that they are left in this indictment, they are dropped out of the picture, and there are only three left. One is the Continental Company; and they only bought four cars in the whole four months. Cities Service Export Company, which is not now a defendant in this case, and Buckley's own company, had bought gasoline there in January, according to the undisputed evidence, and they bought gasoline there in February and March. And they never bought another carload of gasoline out of that territory in all the rest of the period of this indictment.

4066 So, what have you got that allegation down to? It is whittled down simply to nothing, a zero point, in this indictment.

And the cars that Buckley bought, in February and March, out of I think thirty-five purchases that he made, thirty-four of them were below the market price and the other was at the low,—and it was at the low because it was a special grade of gasoline.

Now, just look at that situation. Cities Service Export Oil Company didn't have an iota of interest in increasing the price of gasoline in that market or in the mid-western area, including Wisconsin,—not an iota of interest in it. That was Buckley's superior.

Now, it doesn't change the situation to designate it something—to name it something. You can't call a thing something and make it that something.

I think of a story that my charming friend, Mr. Francis, tells on himself. You know, this Texas gentleman that explained endpoint one day to us. He said when he entered the law school in Texas, the professor said, "Charlie, stand up. I want to ask you some questions." He said,

"Charlie, how many legs has a pig?" He thought there was some catch in it, and he hesitated a little while and finally he said, "Four". The professor said, 4067 "That is right; correct." He said, "Now, if you call a tail a leg, how many legs has a pig?" Charlie answered promptly, because there was no catch left, "Five". The professor said, "Charlie, you will never make a lawyer in your life. Because you call a tail a leg doesn't make it a leg. The pig still has four legs, no matter what you call the tail."

And that is just exactly the situation here. It doesn't make any difference what you call these things. It is, what it is. And these letters that were read, one after another, designating this thing one thing, when it is another, and the evidence shows that it is another, doesn't make it something else.

Now, I have told you what the effect of the East Texas Buying Program was on the industry. Right here I want to, while I think of it, mention one thing. Mr. Lewin, in his opening argument to you, mentioned it as much as a dozen times,—this buying pool in East Texas, and this buying pool in the Mid-Continent.

Why, there is no buying pool even as claimed by the government. There is no allegation of a buying pool in the indictment. There never was a buying pool and there is no evidence of a buying pool. There isn't anything resembling a buying pool in either the East Texas or 4068 Mid-Continent field.

There was a buying pool conducted by the government in 1934, in which ten million dollars was to be put in a pool. You remember Mr. Steiger's statement. And these companies had all to put this money in the pool and then buy gasoline.

There is no buying pool alleged in this indictment, and there is no buying pool here. And it was said time and time again, in objection to testimony, as it came up in the course of this trial, by one of these gentlemen, well, what has that got to do with the buying pool?

Now, there isn't a buying pool and there never was a buying pool, and there wasn't a buying program. There was a selling program carried on by these people.

And Buckley enlisted a great many majors to come in there and help these people out in that East Texas situation. And they bought from those people, through the solicitation of Buckley and the solicitation of Arnott, and the solicitation of Mr. Carnes, and perhaps others. And a good many of those that bought in this program, a good many of those that bought there, felt that it was an obligation to buy,—a moral obligation to buy. And I think it was too. And they felt that they should take 4069 their share, enough to dispose of the surplus gasoline that these people had, that they would have to dump on the market at any price that they could get for it. And I think it was an honorable and a big thing. I think it was a wonderful thing for these gentlemen to do what they did down there.

I know that Mr. Lewin sneered at it. He said, "This altruism makes me laugh." The distress gasoline makes him laugh. Well, it was not a laughing matter to those people that had that distress gasoline on their hands and wanted to dispose of it. It was no laughing matter for farmers that had produce on their hands,—distress produce, and wanted to dispose of it. It was no laughing matter for any industry having products on their hands and manufacturing products, that they could not dispose of, without dumping on the market. You can laugh at it all you want to, but it becomes a grand thing, and that is what the government tried to do with the farmers, was to take this distress material in some way, or limit the production, so that there wouldn't be any distress material. We were doing that all through the depression; and to sneer and laugh at the efforts of these gentlemen, I think is in poor grace for the government of the United States that was doing the same kind of stuff they were doing for ex-4070 actly the same purpose.

Now, is it possible,—do you think that these men are not capable of having a disinterested thought? Do you think that these people are so sordid and so low and so mean that the sole thought in their minds was to enrich themselves by what they did? Why, of course you don't. If you did, you would have to simply turn the presumption of innocence upside down and have a presumption of guilt, just because these men, as they say, are big men, or these companies are big companies.

4071 Now, I want to tell you, from what you have seen on the witness stand, that you know these men are capable of big things; that they are men that are capable of unselfish thought; they are men that are capable of doing things for society; and that they have got a social consciousness that is just as sincere and just as good as any other class of people in the world.

Now, I am not going to tire you gentlemen out. I want to read to you paragraph 18 of the indictment.

(Producing copy of indictment)

I have got a little smaller book, this time, so I won't be charged with any crookedness. There are 25 pages, 25 printed pages of this indictment. May 18th:

> "Purchases of gasoline through said Association from the respective members thereof have been made at the instigation and under the supervision and direction of defendants Arnott and Carnes, with one Neil Buckley, employee of Cities Service, acting in a liaison capacity between said Association and the defendant major oil companies, and also instigating and directing said purchases. Said Buckley acted in such capacity under the instructions of defendant Cities Service Company"— not a syllable of testimony of that, gentlemen of the jury—

4072 "—and defendants Brandli"— not one single line of testimony in this case that Brandli ever gave one single direction of that kind, have they produced, or can they produce—

"—Coates and Frueauff"— not one single bit of testimony in this case that Coates ever wrote a line to Buckley or to the East Texas Association, or that he sent a telegram, or that he attended a meeting, or did anything at all—not one single bit of testimony here that one single one of those gentlemen did one single thing that they allege in that indictment, not one.

There is testimony here that Mr. Frueauff asked for their purchases in East Texas, and the Mid-Continent field, to see what he ought to do or what he would have to do in the purchasing—assuming that he had some responsibility as to that. But no communication between Frueauff and the East Texas Marketers' Association, or with anybody connected with it.

Now, what are you going to do with allegations of that kind? Are you going to assume that they are true? Are you going to assume that these gentlemen are rascals, and that there must exist somehow, somewhere, something that the Government never got? Can you convict men on 4073 that kind of testimony? Why, if you can, then there is no need of making a defense or attempting to make a defense in a criminal case, if you are a large company. If bigness is a crime in itself, then all that is necessary is to show that fact, and conviction follows as a matter of course; and every man then is a criminal, in proportion to the size of his business. Is that the law of America? Is that the law anywhere? Haven't you got to prove what you claim that they did? And hasn't there got to be evidence to sustain it?

Now, on the contrary, instead of there being agreements to buy at a certain price, to buy through this Association, as alleged here, at high, artificial and progressively increased prices—that is what they have said—instead of there being evidence to that effect, there is evidence just exactly to the contrary.

The purchases down there were not made at high, arbitrary prices. They were not made at uniform prices. They were made at prices below the market, and they were not uniform. The same price was not paid by the same company, some times on the same day. Different prices were paid by different companies in their negotiation with the East Texas refiners, with this Association or with the individual members themselves, without going through 4074 the Association. That is the undisputed testimony in this case.

They put up a chart here, with a straight line, at the very outset of this case; and they claimed that that line was the high, arbitrary and artificial price that these people were paying for gasoline. And they left this chart, without an explanation. They didn't prove that we did actually do it. They just said that we did it. And they said so in the indictment.

And then they threw the burden on us—I thought quite shrewdly; I thought it was a very clever piece of work. They threw the burden on us to show that it wasn't so. And they complain that they rested on Thanksgiving Day, and we took all of this time. We had to take all of this time. We didn't stop with the fact that they had failed to prove their case. We weren't going to rest there, and take any risk in the matter; but we went on, and we had to go into all of those purchases down in East Texas and in the Mid-Continent, purchase after purchase, from person after person and independent refiner after independent refiner; and the figures absolutely and completely refuted what the Government charged in the indictment, and what they claimed.

Oh, I know counsel sneered at the Government's, 4075 or at the defendants' accountant, Mr. Miller. But you saw him on the witness stand. They didn't impeach him by any testimony of any nature or description, and they couldn't impeach his figures; and they stand undisputed.

The only attempt the Government made to prove the allegation in their indictment with reference to those purchases at high and arbitrary prices was to put another accountant, a G-man by the name of Miller, also, on the witness stand. Do you remember his first appearance on the witness stand? The journals were still in the case, and Colonel Lawton, among others, cross examined him. And it showed that his charts were falsely labeled, that they didn't show what he claimed they showed, that he didn't put the figures in the right freight districts; and they were such a complete failure that they withdrew two of the exhibits, on his first appearance. Then he appeared once again, with the same fiasco and the same false representations; and his figures were riddled, and they never corrected them, and they never could, and they never could show that what they claimed in that indictment was true, because Miller, our accountant, absolutely disproved what they claimed.

Now, after all this long testimony, after all these 4076 days, and days and days of testimony, refuting this and that that the Government claimed, and that they left without any proof—then what did the Government do? They took about two days to answer all of that testimony. And they took a little memorandum, written by one fellow, of what his impression was at a meeting, that they had had in their possession since October; and they had subpoenaed him in October; and the last thing they presented was that memorandum. And they called on the witness stand a gentleman by the name of Vaughn, a broker, who attempted to discredit these defendants by a statement of what took place in the Globe office. And the testimony turned out that it was untrue. He wasn't in the Globe office, no such telephone message was ever given, and they didn't prove that it was ever given, and they can't prove it; and that testimony was false. And that was their rebuttal to all of this testimony that we offered, and all of this proof that we offered that was unassailable. And they saved that little memorandum until the very last thing. They thought that was a powerful thing, and they sprung it here on you the very last thing, as they sprung it in the testimony.

4077 Now, are you going to convict men on that kind of stuff? The Government doesn't want you to convict these men, or shouldn't want you to, unless they are guilty. They owe something to these defendants, as well as to the Government. And they will think no more of you as jury men, if you conclude that these men are innocent and you so find, than they would if you went out and swallowed their assumptions and their assertions and their blackmail of these defendants.

Now, as to the volume of the purchases, the same thing follows as to that, that they divided this up among them, and each one took some of it. That they did purchase, we don't deny; we never have denied it. They assert it here as though it was something we denied; and then to set up this straw man and knock it down with great gusto, is just simply misleading this jury.

> "In 1935 the present defendant major companies"—

I am taking this from the evidence. I am paraphrasing it, so as not to tire you, but I have the references here to the pages of the testimony:

> "In 1935, present defendant major companies bought 40,195,000 gallons of gasoline from East Texas independent refiners named in the indictment, and 45,598,000 gallons from all East Texas refiners. In the same year, the total shipments of East Texas > 4078 refiners named in the indictment were 285,000,000 gallons of gasoline. Of this volume, sales to the defendant majors constituted 14 per cent of what they sold."

And the indictment alleges—and we want to talk about the indictment; that is where the charge is—the indictment alleges we bought fifty per cent.

> "Shipments of all East Texas independent refiners in 1935"— that is, taking all of them—

> "—were 378,000,000 gallons, of which sales to the present defendant majors constituted twelve per cent. In the same year, sales to Cities Service Export, Louisiana Oil, Tide Water Oil, Gulf and Texas, amounted to 48,299,000 gallons. Adding these sales to the major purchases increases the percentage from twelve per cent to something under twenty-five per cent."

The Court: We will take a recess at this time.

(Thereupon at 3:20 o'clock p. m., a recess was taken.)

4079 (Following the recess, the Court resumed its session at 3:40 o'clock P. M., and the following proceedings were had:)

Mr. Brazeau: May it please the Court, and gentlemen of the jury.

There is one little item in connection with the East Texas

Marketing Association that I did not mention, that indicates that that association was an association of those independent refiners themselves. The expense of that association was paid by assessment on the members. There is not any evidence in this case—there could not any be produced; the evidence is all the other way—that association paid its own expenses by assessment of two dollars and a half a car on gasoline when it was sold at the going market price, and later two dollars a car.

Now, there is another thing I want to mention in this connection, and that is, I stated to you that the Cities Service Export Oil Company had nothing to gain by loaning Mr. Buckley to that company.

Now, I know that the government will claim that they were part of the Cities Service organization, and that that company had something to gain from it. But Mr. Coates, the superior of Mr. Brandli, was a member of the P. and C. Committee, he was a government representative, and there wasn't anything that could be gained either by Cities Service in this way or through any other kind of 4080 connection that it had in this East Texas matter.

The Empire Oil Refining Company did not operate in East Texas; it operated in the Mid-Continent field.

Now, these are facts I wish to call to your attention if the government should charge or state that there was a sefish motive in the Cities Service Export Oil Company.

Now, the allegation of the indictment with reference to East Texas, as well as to the other, is that:

> "Beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuously to the date of the presentation of this indictment, defendant and certain persons hereinafter referred to, and other persons to the grand jurors unknown, well knowing all the foregoing facts, have combined and conspired together for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing the tank car prices of gasoline in the aforementioned spot markets, and, as intended by them, defendants have artificially raised and fixed said spot market tank car prices of gasoline and have maintained said prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels, and at levels agreed among them and have thereby intentionally increased" the prices, and so forth.

Now, what does the evidence show? The evidence shows that out of those ten companies that were in East 4081 Texas as I have analyzed it for you and shown, there are only two companies left, Pure and Sinclair.

Did they conspire together? Did these companies buy at a high and artificial level of prices? Why, we have the analysis of that given by Mr. Miller, our accountant, taken from the invoices and records that are impounded here in the Court, and they show why and how they did buy in that East Texas market.

These dots (indicating on chart) show the purchases, and underneath is the number of purchases by these companies.

These gray lines show the range of prices, the top of the line showing the high, and the bottom the low of the market price, the market published price.

Now, if you were rigging the market and buying at a high and artificial price, an arbitrary price agreed among you, why you would buy up here (indicating). You would buy at the top of the market, or you would buy above the low of that market. You could not lead the market here (indicating), and you could not rig the market at a high and artificial price here (indicating) by buying below the market.

And that is what this map indicates. As that price increased the purchases here (indicating) remained below the market price, and the purchases here (indi-4082 cating) are an eighth below the low of the market price. Purchases here (indicating) are an eighth below that price (indicating) as that price went up. They were following the market, and following far below it instead of leading the market up. This row of purchases here (indicating) is all below the low, and there is one there (indicating) that is at the low. These purchases here (indicating) are below the low.

Is that the way people go ahead with a conspiracy to pay a high, artificial and progressively increased price? Isn't that absurd, isn't that unreasonable?

Wouldn't you have to presume something, wouldn't you have to find something that the evidence absolutely contradicts? Of course you would. That allegation is absolutely void.

And here (indicating), that they bought at uniform prices, take this date here (indicating). Did they buy at uniform prices? There were four purchases made at that date, and every one of those purchases was at a different price. And the same thing on other days on this chart that you can readily see.

Now, if there was a combination and conspiracy of people to fix uniform, high and arbitrary prices, would you find four prices here on the same day by companies going in there that they claim are members of this con-4083 spiracy? Why, the very statement is absurd and refutes absolutely the government's charge in that indictment. And they have not shown any evidence to sustain that allegation here in this case. Not one bit of evidence have they shown to sustain that allegation.

Now, they claim we were buying there when we did not need to. Why, the evidence of these two companies, Sinclair and Pure, shows they needed millions and millions of gallons of gasoline, even running their refineries at full capacity. Pure Oil could only furnish seventy per cent of the gasoline they needed. And they not only bought millions of gallons in East Texas, but they bought millions of gallons from majors, that is, to supply the demand.

And the same is true of Sinclair. You saw that big chart that Mr. Wood, the attorney, put up here as to Sinclair, its manufacture of gasoline, and its demand for gasoline, and you saw the millions of gallons that they had to go out in the market and buy in order to supply their purchasers.

Now, are you going to ignore that testimony? It is easy to convict people of crime if you do just one thing; just throw all the defense testimony out of the window, and just take as testimony the assertions of the prosecutors; treat all witnesses for the defendants as liars and 4084 perjurers, and all witnesses for you as angels with sprouting wings, and you can convict anybody in the world of any crime you want to charge, with that kind of a prosecution.

Now, the consumers' demand at the time these people were purchasing had increased tremendously. Taken from the testimony, for the year 1935 it exceeded the government estimate, the consumers' demand did, by twenty million barrels, and demand in the middle west was about in proportion after subtracting increased export.

During the depression the consumptive demand for crude oil had dropped from two million five hundred thousand barrels to two million barrels, but in 1935 it got above three million barrels, and in 1936 and 1937 increased to three million five hundred thousand barrels. Now, that is the proof from the testimony in this case.

Now, remember this, gentlemen of the jury, also, and this testimony is undisputed, it is the undisputed testimony in the case; that the government itself, our government, the government of these men, allocated to the majors allocations that would compel them to buy gasoline and for the purpose compelling them to buy gasoline from the independents.

Now, isn't that the undisputed testimony in this case?

And then after compelling them to buy this gaso-4085 line, and arranging their allocations so they had to buy this gasoline, then come in and prosecute them because they have bought it and claim a conspiracy in buying it.

This is the testimony on that, and it is undisputed:

The allocators did not foresee—I am taking this from Mr. Shatford's testimony; he was national co-ordinator; he is the one that had charge of these matters, and the government did not see fit to dispute this in any way, and they could not dispute it, is the reason they did not.

The allocators did not foresee the increased demand. For March they estimated nine hundred thousand barrels too low, and induced refineries to curtail their production of gasoline by nine hundred and sixty five thousand barrels voluntarily, so there were one million eight hundred sixty five thousand barrels that the majors were caught short with under the emergency.

The allocations of April proved to be eight hundred thousand barrels too low.

By the end of May the major companies were short about three million barrels of gasoline, or fifteen thousand tank cars.

In that situation they had to find three million barrels of gasoline somewhere. That is about equal—the testimony of Mr. Shatford shows—that is about equal to the amount purchased during the first several months of 4086 the buying program.

With reference to inventory control, I want to call attention to this testimony:

On January 2, 1935, Administrator Ickes wrote the chairman of the P. and C. committee on the subject of inventories, stating among other things that he did not feel that any appeals for manufacture of gasoline in excess of the federal determination should be approved.

Why didn't Mr. Ickes want any increase in the allocations of those majors? Because he was looking after the interests of these small refiners, and wanted these majors to purchase from these small refiners.

Continuing, that the figure of 65,000,000 barrels established as an objective for March 31, 1935, by the industry was reasonable and should not be exceeded, that there should not be an unbalanced accumulation of inventories in any part of the country or in individual plants, that in making allocations, the required production should be separated into that necessary to balance current consumer demand and that necessary for additions to inventories.

It is undisputed in this case also, gentlemen of the jury, that the government desired to stabilize the price of gasoline.

Mr. Ickes appointed a committee known as the 4087 Blazer committee to make a study of these independents or small industries, and that Blazer committee reported in favor of stabilization, and for stabilization of the price of gasoline.

Now, with all this backing and all this help from the government, and all this urging from the government, are you going to brand these men as just selfish individuals? These men knew at the time that this country was in distress. These men knew at the time that it was up to the industries, and the large industries and the large people in this country to pull this country out of that tailspin they entered.

Counsel quoted Colonel Donovan in his opening statement as saying that intelligent, self-interest demanded that they do what they did and he labels that as a confession of selfishness.

Is it? No, it was an inducement for those people to do what they did, and to help the small industries out. In helping the small industries they did help themselves; of course they did. They put the industry upon a stable basis, but that purpose was not the sole purpose of those individuals. They did not go into it for that purpose.

They were brought into this position by the govern-4088 ment itself and by the situation of the industry.

Now, I want to say something about that Blazer report, taken from the testimony in this case.

In the early part of April the P. A. B. requested the P. and C. committee to review and comment on the Blazer report and to see the P. A. B. regarding it. The P. A. B. was the government organization in connection with the petroleum industry.

On May 1st Arnott sent telegrams to the members of the Marketing Committee of the P. and C. Committee, stating that the Administrator had requested the committee to give him its judgment on the Blazer report, and calling a meeting for May 9th.

That is the Administrator, the government Administrator.

A committee of three appointed by the P. and C. Committee, consisting of Collett, Majewski and Arnott, met with Mr. Fahy in his office on May 10, 1935, to respond to the Administrator's request. Fahy was the chairman of the government agency dealing with the petroleum industry, the P. A. B.

And, by the way, I might mention here that counsel for the government in mentioning Mr. Fahy and Mr. Frey called them "mice". He wanted to belittle them so 4089 in their connection—he knew they could not answer this; he knew it was so powerful a reminder that these defendants were not in a conspiracy, that he had to foul his own nest and attempt to discredit his own government officials, and he says Fahy and Frey were "mice".

They discussed the recommendations made by the Blazer committee that it would be very helpful if the major companies would buy distress gasoline from small independent refiners.

4090 Arnott informed Fahy, the chairman of the Government's agency, that he already had been buying gasoline—had been buying, and this is in effect what Fahy replied, that is quite so and disposes of that part of the report. And they went on to other phases.

Now, if that isn't true, why isn't Fahy here? If they want to dispute that fact testified to positively, and not disputed in any other evidence, why didn't they bring Fahy here to dispute it instead of abusing him here as a Government official? He is still a Government employee, as attorney for the Labor Board, and I have no doubt, a man of honor and integrity.

Now, you come to these golden stairs—before that, I want to discuss with you and call your attention to the opening statement of counsel. I want to be helpful to you, gentlemen of the jury, if I can, in pointing out the testimony in this case, the actual testimony, not something assumed, not a mere assertion, but actual testimony, and what I have already told you is actual testimony in the record in this case.

Now, in the opening statement of counsel to the jury, he said that these gentlemen were in secrecy, that what they did, they did in the dark, and it wasn't until they put the Government Secret Service men on their trail, they discovered what they were doing. And they uncovered 4091 all this mischief and all this mysteriousness.

Now, what does the evidence reveal? What has it revealed? Is that so? If they didn't operate in the dark and didn't act in secret, then the converse is true that they had nothing to hide. Did they? If everything was out in the open, if they spread everything before the Government, if they kept in their files all these letters that the Government has emphasized here and handed them over to the Government on subpoena, if they kept all that stuff, doesn't it indicate that these gentlemen didn't regard themselves as doing anything evil? That they were not engaged in some criminal enterprise?

Just look at the testimony. Let us review it just a minute. In the first place, as I have already pointed out, the first thing that Buckley did was to take up with Arnott, the Government's key stabilizer and representative of the Government itself. On a number of occasions, Arnott made disclosures of his activities to the P. A. B. He was in extreme close contact with the P. A. B., often daily. He reported to Frey. He reported to Frey. On December 18, 1934, Arnott met with Fahy and Frey, and explained to them what had been done in regard to the restoration of the retail market, and together they planned another meeting in the near future, which meeting was the January 4092 4th meeting, at which the tank car stabilization committee was appointed.

Now, there is only one way you can dispose of that kind of evidence, and that is to say that everything Mr. Arnott said was a lie, but that doesn't prove the contrary, even if you took that sordid view of his testimony.

On January 9, 1935, Arnott met with Meyer and Marshall of the P. A. B., and explained the retail price war and what had been done at the December meeting to deal with them, and what had been accomplished and the cooperation of the ifferent elements of the industry, and also told them of he meeting of January 4th, how the question of the inependent refiner had come up to the front, and what he ad done by appointing this tank car stabilization comittee. And he also discussed with Meyer and Marshall e Panama decision, and that it would be very essential at something should be done to deal with the situation ereby created.

On February 20, 1935, Arnott wrote Fahy a letter rerring to some developments in connection with the market d also in connection with the East Texas refiners.

Arnott testified that he wrote the letter because he wanted the P. A. B. to know what he was doing in 93 connection with the matter of distress gasoline, that it was such an important factor in the restoration of markets and which would be a matter covered by the members of the P. A. B. and the Secretary himself and was the objective they were working for.

Now, I won't take the time and I won't go through all of the testimony with regard to this furtiveness, but it appears here without dispute, it appears here by witness after witness and by all the testimony that there wasn't one single thing kept from the ears of the Government in this case in connection with what was going on. And you will hear, and others will treat of that subject—you will hear—and that testimony is undisputed—that the Secretary of the Interior, Ickes himself, knew the work, the work that these men were doing in stabilizing the market.

Now, an essential part of this conspiracy is alleged in this indictment, and I am following this indictment now, not talking outside the indictment. The Government has got to stand or fall on that indictment. They have got to prove the allegations of that indictment and prove them beyond a reasonable doubt.

They have also that allegation, when you come to those journals, they had here, they had taken all testimony 4094 before the grand jury, and then indicted those journals and dropped them in and held them for trial and kept them until the end of the Government's case.

And they worked manfully day after day, these gentlemen, who are gentlemen of talent, and had behind them many assistants and all the force of the United States Government that is applied to these things—they worked manfully day after day to attempt to pin on these journals something in connection with this, to prove an allegation of their indictment, and what is that allegation?

"Said defendants have been the chief agencies—"

That is, those journals—

> "—and instrumentalities through which the wrongfully and artificially raised and fixed prices for gasoline paid by the major oil companies as aforesaid have affected the prices paid by jobbers, retail dealers, and consumers for gasoline in the Mid-Western area, including the Western District of Wisconsin."

"The chief agencies and instrumentalities"!

And why were they? Because the jobber contracts were based on these journals, on the prices quoted in these journals, and so to make a conspiracy they alleged that 4095 a conspiracy was entered into with these journals to publish a false price, and as they allege in the indictment, they published the price these majors paid as the jobber price.

The evidence fell down completely, and at the end of the Government's case, they had to voluntarily dismiss these journals from the indictment and take from their indictment and conspiracy the essential link that they claimed raised the price to the jobbers.

With reference to the journals that are dismissed, look at the opening statement to you gentlemen by counsel for the Government:

> "If you want to make a conspiracy complete, the only way is to manipulate that open spot market, but to make our conspiracy perfect, we would get the journals into the conspiracy and get them to publish the regulated, artificial, arbitrary prices that we want to establish as the prices for gasoline in this area."

Were they publishing the price these people paid? No.

> "They paid increasing prices, that is, these defendants, higher prices than they would have had to pay if they were buying gasoline to meet their ordi-> 4096 nary needs, and they got the journals to publish that as the going market price that they had paid—"

Now, the evidence was—the evidence is in this case and was at the time of the close of the Government's case and still is that the journals never published any such price at all.

And then counsel ends up this statement:

> "Now, see how simple that was!"

And, indeed, it would be simple. But instead of that simple conspiracy, as simple as he claims it was, at the end of the Government's case, they hadn't proved one single thing on it to connect up the indictment in this case, the essential element of this indictment, and they dismissed those journals voluntarily themselves from this case.

"Oh, but," counsel says now—well, I want to read further:

> "Every effort was made—"

Well, I guess I won't.

But counsel says now that while of course they were an essential element in the conspiracy, that they were innocently publishing prices, and in that way affected the market, but he hadn't got anywhere then, because the evidence shows that they didn't innocently publish the 4097 price that these people (indicating on chart) were paying. Here is what they were publishing (indicating), and here is what they were paying (indicating). They didn't publish it at all, and there is no evidence that they did, not a bit of evidence that they did.

So, the only trouble with that assertion, and the attempt to crawl out of the dropping of this connecting link is that there is no evidence to sustain it, and there was no allegation of the indictment that that was what was done at all.

Now, what I want to discuss with you is what was originally termed by counsel for the Government as the golden stairs here (indicating on chart) and later was designated by the Government's attorney, who opened this case, as a ladder of roses, the ladder of roses leading to the garden of love.

Now, I think that is a very sweet description of this and very poetic. They have alleged with reference to this chart —this is the course of their logic that they expect you gentlemen to accept—(indicating)—they allege that that is a high and artificial high. If it was down here, it would be a "high and artificial price." If it was down here (indicating), it would be a "high and artificial price."

We were buying gasoline, and whatever price there 4098 was there (indicating), why, our buying was responsible for it. Now, you will—you are skipping a whole lot of proof to make any such claim. You are going a long ways to try to convict these defendants of fixing that price on any such claim as that.

Colonel Donovan said in his opening argument to the jury that what these men were doing in East Texas and the Mid-Continent might have lifted the price up there, might have lifted the price up there, but what forces were at work there?

The Government counsel didn't dare be raw enough in his opening statement to claim that that price was the price that resulted from this buying. All he did dare claim was that it was an element that might have done something, and that is it. That is all the connection it could have.

There was working at this time here (indicating), March 1st, the Connally Act was enacted. The Connally Act shut off—instead of there being seventy-nine or eighty refiners in East Texas running on hot gasoline, there were fourteen or fifteen refiners left in East Texas. The Connally Act shut off the flood of hot oil into the mid-western area—and hot gasoline into the mid-western area, and shut off the manufacture of an immense amount of gasoline.

4099 That was an important element, according to anybody with any fairness and decency.

Federal allocation gasoline came in, as I pointed out to you, and cut down the amount of gasoline that these majors were allowed to keep. The allocations were strengthened January 13, 1935, and fixed so the majors would have to buy. There was a voluntary reduction by the majors of the amount. There was a tremendously increased consumptive demand for gasoline, as I have pointed out, beginning at this time, just at the time of this rise (indicating on chart).

There was a general business recovery, and everything strengthened. There was an inflation of currency in the country, and prices went up at that time in every possible line.

There was an interstate compact of the different states that affected it.

There was the increase of foreign demand.

There was a limitation of import.

The prices of other petroleum products went up, and there was increased prices for labor, and there was a shortening of the hours of labor.

Now, all these elements were present at this time.

Now, they put on the stand witnesses who said 4100 they never saw a more uniform price for gasoline, but they didn't put on the witness stand to prove they never in the history of the industry—that never in the industry were conditions the same as they were at the time this chart was made.

And how can you say and attribute that to this cause when the same elements that entered into it were seven or eight elements that had a tendency to increase the prices here and the prices here (indicating), and they weren't present before?

Now, when that became a stabilized market there (indicating), it was just exactly what the Administration wanted. It was just exactly the desired result, the stabilization of markets, not only in gasoline, but in everything else, and they were all treated for it. And that is just what they desired.

And according to these gentlemen the major companies had power to do anything with that price that they saw fit. The price remained there month after month, and month after month. Why was that if that power was there, and they desired to exercise it? Why, you have just got to exactly, if you want to convict these defendants, to convict them on them. You have got to have a desire in mind 4101 to punish them, maybe, because they are big, or maybe because they are rich, or something else, or else you couldn't ever get a possible conviction on that kind of testimony.

Now, we had on the witness stand one of the greatest experts in the United States, perhaps the greatest expert in the United States, in statistics dealing with the petroleum industry. He was a statistical—he had charge of the statistical department of the American Petroleum Institute. He had been employed by the Government. He was learned in this very kind of work.

I am referring to Fred Van Covern, and as yet the Government hasn't placed him in the undesirable class, and I don't think they dare to do it. With all the list they have, they have never blackened him, they have never placed him in the same list.

This is his testimony, and it is the testimony of a man that knows the industry, and whose word is to be taken in matters of this kind.

He says:

> "It is my opinion that the strength in this situation was inherently strong enough to have pushed the price of gasoline up to an approximate parity with crude. However, I had general knowledge of buying by major companies of so-called distress gasoline from independent refiners. I did not know > 4102 the extent or nature of such buying. However, in that it removed so-called distress gasoline, which was overhanging and depressing this market, it did have an effect on price. But the situation was so strong here (indicating on chart) with respect to gasoline demand, following these large increases, being considerably above the demand anticipated by the Bureau of Mines, and continuous decline in the gasoline stocks to below seasonal requirements. The day supply, and the strong indication here (indicating) of crude oil, even though it being much above that recommended by the Bureau of Mines, necessitated further withdrawals from storage in order to meet the demand for refined products, and it is my opinion that whatever buying was done here had only a temporary and incidental effect and that that it did not in any way tend to increase the price of gasoline to a level higher than the natural working of the law of supply and demand would have forced it."

4103 Now, remember also, gentlemen of the jury, that the price of crude was pegged at one dollar, and the government representatives fixed the parity between crude and gasoline at eighteen and a half to one. That made the price of gasoline five and four-tenths cents.

This price that is pictured was never above the parity that the government recommended and the government desired to have.

Are you going to convict these men criminally because it did or accomplished that, even if you could lay to them the whole thing? Are you going to punish them criminally for what the government itself desired and worked for?

I want to take up briefly this question of jobbers. Counsel would have you believe that we were the enemies of jobbers; that we are condemning wholesale all jobbers. The quotation he gave from Col. Donovan shows that this is not true. The evidence shows here, and he brought out that evidence, and it is undisputed, that the jobbers are absolutely necessary to these majors for the distribution of their gasoline. And the evidence has brought out here, and it is undisputed, that the majors have been fair with the jobbers and have assisted their jobbers in every way possible.

4104 But there are certain men, a certain few jobbers, or brokers, as you might call them, in the industry, that didn't want a plan like this to succeed. They didn't want that price to be stabilized. They didn't want those small refiners to be in such shape that they could get a fair and decent price for their product.

Now, they put a number of jobbers on the witness stand here. They have chosen those jobbers very judiciously, sometimes from the very town that some of you jurors have come from. They have taken them from the counties you have come from. And they have attempted to give the impression that those jobbers were against these defendants. Nothing could be further from the truth. We haven't any quarrel with what those jobbers testified to, and they just testified to what they were asked to testify to by the government. And we haven't a single quarrel with those jobbers whatsoever.

But there is one thing very plain from what they did testify to, and that is that there is not poverty existing among them, as the government would lead you to believe. They are not poor, distressed people as would appear from the testimony.

Mr. Beroth appeared on the witness stand, and he is one of the jobbers that Col. Donovan referred to. Mr.
4105 Beroth is a jobber who doesn't want, or didn't want, this situation to be cleared up, in our judgment. And Mr. Beroth handled about twenty-four million gallons of gasoline a year. He handled two hundred and fifty cars a month. And the total investment of that man in his business was one hundred and ten thousand dollars.

Mr. Wingrove handled eight hundred thousand gallons in 1935 and one million gallons in 1936, and his total investment was only sixty thousand dollars.

The gentleman from Beloit who was on the witness stand, with a small company and a small investment, would have you believe that he didn't make anything. He had a corporation and he was paying himself eight thousand dollars a year, and a secretary two thousand dollars a year; and his investment was a hundred and twenty thousand dollars; and they drew ten thousand dollars in salaries out of that business.

I could go through the whole list and show you likewise.

Now, Beroth was what you might call a broker. He was a broker. Beroth was one of the directors of the National Oil Marketers Association. Beroth testified on the witness stand that he had difficulty, and could not get gasoline down in this Texas territory. He testified, you remember, 4106 to almost everything that would make the government's case, and he testified that he went down there and they told him that they could not sell him gasoline because they had sold it all to the majors, and they were cutting him off.

And Col. Donovan, in his opening statement, said that there were certain people that made complaint to the government, that were dealing in hot oil. And Mr. Lewin pronounced that as a monstrous assertion. That was Beroth. It appears, from the testimony, that Mr. Beroth said, after stating that he could not get gasoline down there; that they were selling it all to the majors, that he did something about it. What was it he did? Why, the National Oil Marketers Association lodged a complaint with the Department of Justice, through their secretary, Mr. Hadlick. That is Beroth's testimony.

So now, gentlemen of the jury, you know where the complaint came from and what started this prosecution. The government brought it out.

Now, Mr. Hadlick, who made the complaint for this Association, is not here. He was not called by the government. He didn't appear on the witness stand. We wish he had. There were some questions we would like to ask him. But he didn't appear. But Mr. Beroth testifies that he is 4107 the one that lodged the complaint down there. And they claim it was outrageous for us to say that any of these gentlemen that lodged this complaint were dealing in hot oil.

Now, it appears from Mr. Beroth's testimony, as I said, that he claimed that he could not get oil; he could not get gas; that they were selling it all to the majors. But the testimony shows that he could not get oil from some people because he was not reliable and they didn't trust him. You saw him on the witness stand,—glib and smart and sharp. He went out of his way to testify to everything that would make a government's case in this case.

Now, what is his record? We asked him, when he was on the witness stand, about his purchases from certain companies. He remembered some, but when it came down to East Texas he couldn't remember a thing about it. He didn't know a thing about it,—not a thing.

Now, let's look at this. Mr. Lewin says the defense has not produced one single bit of testimony to substantiate the charge that those men, the ones that were complaining, the ones that lodged the complaint with the government were dealing in hot oil.

4108 Mr. Beroth was asked on cross-examination whether it was not a fact that he had bought gasoline from certain refiners operating in East Texas in 1934. He couldn't even remember the names of some of those East Texas refiners that he was asked about, much less remember whether he had bought gasoline from them in 1934. And remember, Mr. Beroth only had ten employees and he conducted his business almost solely himself.

Now, there was an answer to those questions,—even though Mr. Beroth, for some reason, could not give the answer himself. The answer appeared on the records of the Comptroller's office in the State of Texas. Those records, or excerpts from part of those records, were put into evidence as Exhibit 1012, in this case. They show that Mr. Beroth did buy gasoline from those East Texas refiners, from time to time, during 1934. Even though he couldn't remember, and those records showed just what refiners he bought that gasoline from.

Commencing with March, 1935, the Federal Tender Board was established. The Federal Tender Board issued these certificates showing what was legal gasoline and what was not legal gasoline. Only the refiners who had legal gasoline, and not hot gasoline, for shipment, were given tenders by the Federal Tender Board.

4109 The names of those refiners who were permitted during 1935 to ship their gasoline because it was legal gasoline is in evidence here as Exhibit 989. Now, the names of thirteen companies—which Mr. Beroth could not remember—but from which he did buy in 1934,—do not appear at any time on the records of the Federal Tender Board in 1935, after the Federal Government clamped down on hot oil. None of those companies from whom Mr. Beroth bought in 1934 were among the companies shipping gasoline in 1935 when the only gasoline those companies could ship had to be legal gasoline.

Now, of course, that is asking you to draw conclusions to the facts, and perhaps the government would feel that it would be unfair to draw conclusions about a man such as Mr. Beroth. But there is other testimony in the record which leaves less room for doubt as to why it was those particular thirteen companies ceased shipping oil in 1935, and I have here a list of those thirteen companies,—when the only oil that could be shipped was legal oil. That was the testimony of Mr. Fischer. During 1934 he was the attorney for five of those companies, and he testified that those companies which disappeared in 1935 were shipping hot oil in 1934. And he testified that others on that list 4110 of companies which Mr. Beroth had difficulty in remembering, were among his clients and were shipping hot oil in 1934.

If Beroth was not trafficking in hot oil why couldn't he remember the names of those hot oil refineries, when he was on the stand here, and he was a man of remarkable memory; I never saw the like of it. It was remarkable the details that that man could remember, without a single thing before him. And he was selling the gasoline which he bought, to jobbers in this territory.

And who was Beroth? Just as the defense stated in their opening, he was a member of that very association, which he testified, on account of his difficulties in Texas, lodged the complaint with the Department of Justice.

Mr. Fischer also testified that during these years when those refiners were running hot oil, hot oil was being manufactured in East Texas at times in excess of two hundred thousand barrels a day, and that gasoline made from that hot oil was selling as low as a cent and a half a gallon. Just think of it, gentlemen of the jury. And there is the man that wanted to keep those refiners in that situation, and wanted to suck blood out of those refiners for what they could do with that gasoline in this territory in price 4111 wars and other cut-rates.

Did Mr. Lewin have any of those facts in mind yesterday, when, at the top of his voice, he shouted that not one word of what the defense had said in its opening had been substantiated about those people buying hot oil? That, I will leave for you gentlemen of the jury to decide, and when you do consider that point, consider also some of Mr. Beroth's other testimony, consider how he named refiner after refiner that he could not buy gasoline from in 1935, because, they told him, they were selling so much gasoline to the major companies. And remember, the defense took one after another of those companies and showed you that what Mr. Beroth said was not true, and the testimony was false. But the truth was that each of those companies was selling more, and sometimes three to four times more, gasoline to brokers than they were to the defendants. But they weren't selling it to Beroth. And they told why. And that ties in with what Mr. Gray told you about Mr. Beroth's ways of doing business. What Mr. Gray told you may explain what the real reason was for Mr. Beroth's difficulties, and for his soreness against these companies that were helping those little East Texas refiners out of their situation and saving them from fellows like Beroth.

4112 In going back once more to this hot oil question, the defense stated they would show you that hot oil was being bought at ruinous prices.

Mr. Lewin would have you believe that the defense here is attacking the character and reputation of these jobbers. Far from it, gentlemen of the jury. There was no one in the world that would like to be rescued from fellows like Beroth and his kind more than these jobbers would like to be rescued.

4113 I have already pointed this out to you, but it is important, gentlemen of the jury, in view of the course taken by the Prosecution in this case.

Beroth claimed that the jobbers couldn't get—and he classified the jobbers in with himself—that they couldn't get gasoline down in that region. These charts refute that absolutely, and the figures I gave you. In 1935, the defendant major companies bought 40,000,000 gallons down there—no,—oh, yes, this is the one. I called your attention to the amount that they were selling to others; now, I want to call your attention to this testimony.

The East Texas Refining Company sold in 1935, 11,097,000 gallons to twenty-seven different brokers;—1935. None to Beroth. And 2,869,000 gallons to the major defendants. 11,000,000 gallons to brokers, and 2,869,000 to defendants; and Beroth says that brokers couldn't get gasoline in East Texas. That is, it sold nearly four times as much to brokers as to the defendants.

McMurray Refining Company in 1935 sold 1,736,000 gallons to seventeen brokers; to major companies, not a large amount, compared to its refining capacity of 2000 barrels.

Grogan Oil Company in 1935 sold 12,241,000 gallons 4114 to fifty brokers—12,241,000 gallons to fifty different brokers in 1935, 738,000 to Beroth himself, and 9,000,000 gallons to the defendants. They sold 12,000,000 gallons to brokers, they sold 738,000 gallons to Beroth himself, and only 9,000,000 gallons, or a little over, to these defendant companies.

And this is the Beroth of the National Oil Marketers' Association, the secretary of which lodged a complaint in Washington with the Department of Justice, because he couldn't get gasoline down in this country. Was that the reason they lodged the complaint? No. They were living off the necessities of these little refiners, and they were buying gasoline down there at a ruinous price, that these people couldn't make a living from and couldn't pay wages to their employees from. And that is the reason that the complaint was filed with the Government. That is the reason that Beroth lined up everybody that he could under the banner of this association, and attempted to head off these majors from helping out these little refiners. He was a dealer in hot gasoline, contrary to what he said. He could buy, and brokers were buying down in that region, contrary to what he said. And he himself bought thousands of gallons down in there, from these people.

Now, gentlemen of the jury, there is one more thing, and then I am through.

4115 I want to call the jury's attention to the allegations with reference to the East Texas situation, and I want to ask you, gentlemen of the jury, in all fairness, if the Government hasn't absolutely and completely failed to substantiate one single allegation of the indictment with reference to that East Texas situation. And upon that indictment, as I have said, they must rest. They can't rest upon general principles; they can't rest upon a lot of gossipy letters. They have got to rest upon the facts, and upon the facts as they were, not on what somebody says about them, or what somebody thought about them, or what his opinion was about them, but upon the facts and the allegations in that indictment.

One:

> "That the defendants combined and conspired together for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing the tank car price of gasoline."

There is not one syllable—and I use the word "syllable", and I use it advisedly—in the record in this case, that there was any combination of major companies in the East Texas situation, to buy at an artificially high price, or an agreed price; and this chart refutes that, and the other charts that we introduced refute that completely.

Two:

> "That the defendants have artificially raised and fixed said spot market tank car prices."

There isn't a syllable of testimony in this case that 4116 they fixed the tank car market price, not one syllable of testimony, gentlemen of the jury, in this case, of any such fixing.

The Government may attempt to draw conclusions from things that they did, but they must establish a case by evidence, not by insinuations. Before you can attach a crime upon these gentlemen, thirty-six gentlemen, or any of them, you have got to prove that crime. There isn't any evidence of that at all. There isn't any evidence of fixing prices. The majors, when they bought in East Texas, according to the undisputed testimony, were put in touch with the persons who had gasoline for sale, and they bought it at a price that those persons arranged with that purchaser. And those prices differed.

Three:

> "Defendants have maintained said prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels."

There is no evidence in the case that there was a high, non-competitive level, and no evidence that these defendants maintained that, with reference to the East Texas situation. And these charts all show that, and the evidence.

There is no evidence that the levels were agreed on. Where is there testimony in this case that the levels were agreed upon between these defendants? Where can they produce any such evidence in this case? And it is 4117 necessary to produce it in order to prove the allegations of their indictment. Why, of course, they haven't produced it. There were no levels fixed in the East Texas marketing situation by anybody, at any time, or any place.

> "—Have thereby intentionally increased and fixed the tank car prices of gasoline, contracted to be sold and sold in the Mid-Western area."

There isn't a bit of evidence to sustain any such charge in the indictment, or to charge these defendants with having done that with reference to the East Texas buying program. There is no evidence of fixing prices. Buckley says that he never fixed a price; he never told anybody what price to pay; he left that to them, and they arranged that between themselves. He just brought them together, he got majors to find the surplus gasoline in East Texas, furnished it to them, and they bought it at a price they could arrange between themselves.

> "Defendants have participated in the East Texas buying program for the purchase of gasoline at uniformly high and at times progressively increased prices."

These charts refute that absolutely, and they 4118 haven't been able to impeach those charts. The best that Mr. Lewin could do in an attempt to impeach those charts was to refer to them sneeringly as "these little dots," as though they didn't mean anything. Why, those little dots are taken from the documents in the possession of the Government. They are taken from the documents that have been impounded here, and taken from us, and are here in this Court; and they represent the labor of going over these invoices and telling you just exactly what the truth is with reference to that situation. And to refer to them and attempt to refute them as just little dots, as meaning nothing, is to ignore the important and material testimony in this case.

> "The East Texas Refiners' Marketing Association was formed with the knowledge and approval of some of the defendants."

I have already shown that that is absolutely false, according to the record in this case.

> "Purchases of gasoline through the Association have been made at the instigation and under the advice and direction of defendants Arnott and Carnes."

There isn't any such testimony at all. There is testimony that Mr. Arnott helped Mr. Buckley; that he did it as a conscientious individual, that was charged with a certain duty by his Government; but that is as far as it goes.
4119 And there isn't any evidence at all that Jack Carnes engaged in any enterprise, or fixed prices or did anything else, or supervised the matter at all.

> "—With Neil Buckley instigating and directing such purchases."

The best that Neil Buckley did was to get purchasers, as I have shown.

> "—That Buckley acted under the instructions of defendants Cities Service Company, Brandli, Coates and Frueauff."

Not one bit of testimony in this case. They can't produce a letter, a telegram, a syllable of testimony in this case to connect any one of them that they have named there with any purchase down there, or any supervision of the purchases in that field.

> "Each of the defendant oil companies named in connection with the East Texas program has taken part of the gasoline purchased through the Association, as from time to time arranged between them."

There isn't any evidence that they ever arranged to take the amount of gasoline that anybody allotted to them, or required them to purchase, or that they agreed to purchase—not one bit of testimony in this case.

> "Said quantities of gasoline purchased through > 4120 the Association have amounted to more than fifty per cent of all the gasoline produced by the member refiners."

Is that so? Look at those charts. The bottom is the amount purchased by the majors; the top, the blue, is the amount purchased by others. And it is fourteen per cent—10.34 per cent on one chart. And there isn't any evidence that it ran above twenty-five per cent if you include everything that you could possibly include, that doesn't even belong in there.

> "The said purchases have been in excess of the amounts which the aforementioned major oil companies would have purchased, apart from their participation in said program."

Why, there were just two buying down there in this monstrous conspiracy. Continental bought fifty cars in the whole fourteen months; and Pure and Sinclair, that bought down there, needed every gallon of gasoline that they purchased. And they have produced charts here and records, based upon the impounded documents here, and other evidence, to show that was so. Mr. Francis produced those large charts, one after the other, having worked them out to show that that was the fact. And Mr. Wood showed the same with reference to the Sinclair Company. So, for the only two that are in there, it is untrue as to 4121 them.

> "The purchases were made at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices."

I have already shown there is no evidence on that.

> "That they were made at progressively increased prices."

Which isn't sustained by the evidence.

> "That they were made in an unlawful conspiracy, in furtherance of said unlawful purposes, and said independent refiners"—

oh, yes—

> "In furtherance of said unlawful conspiracy said independent refiners have, at the instance of defendant Arnott and the aforesaid Buckley curtailed their production of gasoline."

As I said, they never indicted him; they never brought him here. There isn't any evidence of any such curtailment. There are some of those letters that did say something about they would curtail, or something of the kind, if somebody else would curtail; but there isn't a bit of evidence that they ever did it, or that anybody ever asked them to do it.

Now, are we trying this case, gentlemen of the jury, on this indictment and on the evidence produced here in 4122 Court? Are these gentlemen, thirty-six honorable citizens of this country—as I have said, their reputation presumed to be good, and not any evidence or any intimation to the contrary—are these thirty-six honorable gentlemen to be subjected to prosecution and conviction at your hands upon anything that the Government has produced here? Are they to be prosecuted and convicted outside of the indictment that the Government has filed here? Are they to be convicted upon insinuations? Are they to be convicted upon assertions of counsel, unsupported by evidence? Are they to be convicted because, perchance, they might be large companies, or employees of large companies? Is there any such ground for conviction? No.

The Government must rest upon this indictment, and they must prove the material allegations of that indictment as alleged. The Government, the Prosecution has no right to substitute any other indictment for it, and it has no right to amend or modify that indictment so that it shows some different kind of a scheme or something different from what they allege. The Government has no right to allege a link in a conspiracy in this indictment, like these journals, and then drop the journals from the indictment and claim that anyway there was a link 4123 that connected up and made the price high and artificial in those journals.

No, gentlemen of the jury, these men are entitled to a fair and impartial trial, just as the humblest citizen of this country would be entitled to a trial. And a conviction must be based upon the same kind of evidence. And, as his Honor has told you, the wealth of these defendants, whether they were wealthy or not wealthy, is not material evidence in this case at all, and should be disregarded by this jury. They are entitled, every one is entitled to the same kind of trial and the same kind of proof, to entitle the Government to a conviction.

Now, gentlemen of the jury, this trial has been long, it has been tedious and arduous for all of us. The evidence is voluminous, and I have been only able to touch upon a few of the things that I would like to argue to you, gentlemen of the jury. But I want to say this, and I know you gentlemen feel it: That you will not want to convict these defendants unless the evidence shows that these defendants are guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. That is what the law asks; that is what you must find.

4124 And you won't find that lightly. The fact that your verdict may bring pain and disgrace to these defendants and their families isn't a reason for not convicting them if you find them guilty beyond a reasonable doubt,—don't think that I ever make any such claim as that. But it is reason, gentlemen of the jury, that you should weigh this testimony with the greatest of care. It is reason that you should be sure that you have made no mistake here, because whatever mistake you make here, you can never undo.

Now, gentlemen of the jury, in the words of that book that guides us, I say, "Let justice abide with you."

The Court: It is five o'clock now. We will recess until ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

(Thereupon, at five o'clock p. m., an adjournment was taken to Wednesday, January 19, 1938, at the hour of ten o'clock a. m.)

4125 Thereafter, on January 19, 1938, Mr. Herbert H. Thomas made the second closing argument to the jury on behalf of the defendants. Such closing argument is as follows:

4126 ARGUMENT.

By Mr. Thomas.

Mr. Thomas: May it please the Court, and gentlemen of the jury.

About the only thing that a lawyer representing either party to this lawsuit can do at this stage is to sum up the evidence and point out to the jury such evidence as may appeal to and as may be pertinent to the issues that you will have to decide.

Now, the first thing that I want to say to you is this; I want you to know what the defense claims in this case.

We say this: That what we did was lawful; that what we did was not contrary to the Sherman Law in 1935 4127 or in 1937. We say to you that what we did was lawful, and that the government of the United States through the Secretary of the Interior viewed what we did as lawful.

The Code was a condition that we had to meet with, the same as every business man had to meet with it in this country during the period of the N. I. R. A. So let there be no misunderstanding about that. What we did was at all times lawful, and was not a violation of the Sherman law.

Now, the charge that is made against these defendants in this indictment—and you will pardon me if I read the charge to you again, because it is the thing that frames the issues which you on your oaths as jurors must decide.

Paragraph 18 of the indictment, prepared by these gentlemen who are now asking you to convict these defendants, reads as follows:

> "Beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, defendants and certain persons hereinafter referred to, and other persons to the grand jurors unknown, well knowing all the foregoing facts, have combined and conspired together for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing the tank car prices of gasoline in the aforementioned spot markets, and, as intended by them, defendants 4128 have artificially raised and fixed said spot market tank car prices of gasoline and have maintained said prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels, and at levels agreed upon among them and have thereby intentionally increased and fixed the tank car prices of gasoline contracted to be sold and sold in interstate commerce as aforesaid in the Mid-Western area * * * and have arbitrarily, by reason of the provisions of the prevailing form of jobber contracts above described in paragraph 11, exacted large sums of money from thousands of jobbers with whom they have had such contracts in said Mid-Western area (including the Western District of Wisconsin), and in turn have intentionally raised"—

Mark this—

> "and in turn have intentionally raised the general level of retail prices prevailing in said Mid-Western area (including the Western District of Wisconsin)."

Now, let's see just what they have proved. The government's position is this: That these men got together and agreed to fix prices, not pursuant to some government program, but in their private individual capacities as representatives of the corporations you are trying. That is their claim. They utterly ignore all con-4129 nection with any governmental program that was then in effect and being managed by the Interior Department.

They charge, among other things, that this conspiracy was carried on by means of what they claim was a buying program in the Mid-Continent field, and another in the East Texas field. It has been allotted to me to discuss with you these circumstances and facts relating to the Mid-Continent field.

Now, the defense on the other hand claim that their purpose was not to fix either the wholesale or the retail price, but on the contrary their purpose was to correct abuses resulting from unfair trade practices, among others, the dumping of gasoline at any price obtainable therefor, depending upon the necessities and circumstances of the particular refiner.

The defendants further contend that this unfavorable trade practice of dumping gasoline resulted in the waste of oil reserves which the government of this country was trying to conserve; that by reason of the dumping of this gasoline on the market distributors were forced to sell for less than cost in order to unload heavy supplies at any price at which a buyer could be found.

When I say "distributors" I mean your bulk station operators, people with storage, some of these jobbers in here with as high as a hundred thousand gallons 4130 of storage. You can see how that would affect a man with a hundred thousand gallons of storage. A price war develops, and he has got to take the loss. And it is not a cent; sometimes it runs as high as six cents.

Because of the fact it ruins the independent wholesaler and retailer who does not possess sufficient financial strength to withstand heavy losses due to the depressed value of his stock on hand, because it is injurious and its effects are injurious on labor, producing longer hours and reducing wages, which are the necessary results in order to recoup losses resulting from price cutting.

And more important than all, and bearing on the power that counsel discussed here to you the first of the week, if something were not done and competition was left free to follow its own course, what chance would the small refiner have with the larger?

Now, it was that which the government sought to obviate.

Now, it is our contention in this case that what these defendants did they had a legal right to do, irrespective of the Code, and that it did not constitute a violation of the Sherman law, although the correction of the practice of dumping distress gasoline in the spot market may tend to stabilize business or produce fairer price levels, and that the Sherman law did not require the defendants to 4131 abstain from those efforts to correct such abuses, and this is so because the action of the defendants carried with it no monopolistic menace, and cannot be condemned as an undue restraint of trade if you find that by such efforts a change in condition was brought about which favored rather than impaired conditions in the industry.

Because of the fact that the buying that was done by defendants major companies was not a violation of the Sherman law, no written permit from the Secretary of the Interior was necessary.

Now, I want to discuss with you first the question of the pegging of the price of crude oil, because that is a practice which runs through the whole warp and woof of this effort by the United States government through the Department of the Interior to stabilize the gasoline and oil industry.

Now, I want you to go back with me and view this situation as it existed at the time this Code went into effect in 1933. Those were the days, you remember, of the Blue Eagle; those were the days when we who were in business signed postcards making contracts with the President of the United States to regulate our hours of labor and regulate our pay, pay to our help, in accordance with the N. I. R. A. You signed one of those cards, every one of you that was in business signed one of them.

4132 So there was a moral obligation, yea, more than a moral obligation resting upon these defendant oil companies to comply with the requirements of the Secretary of the Interior with reference to the pegging of the price of crude oil.

Now, you remember a lot of testimony here with reference to stripper wells. Now, let's see how that fits into the picture.

The stripper wells produce somewhere from two to five barrels a day. They are pumped a few hours. The government wants to conserve the oil that is in the ground. If they stop pumping it seeps away through the sand and can never be recovered. So in order to enable these stripper wells to operate the government of the United States in the conservation of a resource that could not be replaced sought to place the price of crude at $1.10 a barrel in the month of August, 1933.

Now, then, that was a part of the whole scheme of the Code, to put the price of crude up there at $1.10.

In the same Code was written the provision that the parity between crude and gasoline should be as one to eighteen; that is, if you have dollar crude then gasoline should be sold at a price so that you could realize that ratio. They figured it out for us in this trial as five and four tenths cents a gallon.

4133 Now, that was written right in the code, and this pegging of the price of crude to which these defendants agreed was a part of the whole program of the Secretary of the Interior.

Now, I ask you, what was the Standard of Indiana Company to gain by that measure? The Standard of Indiana, according to the evidence here—contrary to the statement of Mr. Crawford in his opening statement—purchases from 35 to 40 per cent of the crude that it uses to make gasoline.

Mr. McInerny: 65 to 75.

Mr. Thomas: 65. Correct me if I get these wrong. They tell me it is 65.

Now, what object would Standard have going into a program of that kind and boosting the price for 65 per cent of the crude that it purchased, from about 60 cents in the early part of September up to a dollar? What object would Standard have in increasing the price of its crude forty cents a barrel? If I remember those figures right—and you gentlemen will understand that if I get them wrong it is not done on purpose, but there is a great deal of evidence in this case, and if I misquote the evidence it is done unintentionally.

4134 But my recollection of the testimony is that the Tide Water Company purchased over fifty per cent of its crude. My information is that the Gulf companies purchased one hundred per cent of their crude. And so, when you average them all up, they will average out somewheres around fifty per cent or better of the crude that they were buying—and here we find them coming in and agreeing with the Government not to post the price at $1.10, but at one dollar.

Now, what was the consideration for that sacrifice? That was done under a Code, that specified this one to eighteen and a half ratio. I call your attention to that, gentlemen, in connection with this other feature of the argument that you listened to here, where my clients were referred to as cut purses, thieves and so forth, and so on—lusting for money, lusting for power. And yet you find them doing that. And there isn't any dispute about it. They did it in order to enable the Government to carry out its program of conservation, in order to keep the stripper wells in operation; and in 1936, on January 9th, the price of crude was finally raised by agreement to $1.10, and it costs these people ten cents a barrel more than it had theretofore.

4135 Oh, gentlemen of the jury, if you are looking for agreements on which to indict these men and these companies, there you have got it. It is confessed. And, like the rise in the price of gasoline that occurred in 1935, it was fostered by the United States Government.

Now, the next question that I want to take up with you is something that affects the local situation, right here in the Western District of Wisconsin, and throughout the ten states in this Mid-West territory, and that is this question of price wars. And if I seem to dwell at length on some of these things, I want you to remember that I deem them important, and I believe that you do, too.

Now, we have this undisputed testimony and evidence: On January the 31st, 1935, cut prices prevailed in areas served by 370 of Standard's bulk stations; and every bulk station averaged about five circuit points or towns, and all of the towns within the circuit affected by a cut in the tank wagon price as well as the rural territory. Since there are five or six towns in each circuit, you would have to multiply 370 by either five or six. On January 31st, 1935, the Standard had price cuts at 497 stations, which means 497 towns where the service station price was cut; and a city like Chicago counts only as one, even though there are hundreds of service stations in the city. In some 4136 of these cities, two or three hundred filling stations were affected. Moreover, if there were four or five towns or circuit points affected by a price cut, these four or five towns would be counted only as one in making up that total of 497.

Now, the Secretary of the Interior recognized just what these price wars meant. He recognized what it meant to the jobber who had bought his gasoline and had it in storage. And if somebody gets gasoline, either hot oil when that was in vogue, or distress gasoline, and cuts the price, and the man with fifty or a hundred thousand gallons in storage has got to meet it, and he has got to take a loss, because he has got to follow the price cutter down. And that is why it affects every community where a price war rages. That is where it affects our local people that are engaged in the business, and where it affects our jobbers—and I will come to that later.

Now, we find that the Secretary of the Interior, through the P. A. B. Board, who were the official arms of the Administration of the Code, appointed Mr. Arnott to see if he couldn't stabilize these prices; and not only that, but we find members of the P. A. B. Board working right 4137 along with him, side by side. We find in December, 1934, meetings called down here at Chicago, at the Blackstone Hotel, where there were ten or eleven hundred men called in from all branches of the industry, the refiner, the jobber, the marketer, the broker, the man who operated filling stations—every branch of the industry; and they call them in there, and they hold conferences that last for over a week, to see what if anything can be done about these price wars, because everyone of them, high and low in the industry, was affected by the price wars.

Now, then, I want to come briefly to the question of the iniquitous treatment of the jobber. Counsel says: "Well, the defense didn't call a jobber." We didn't. And the reason we didn't was because the showing made by the jobbers whom the Government called was such that it should convince any jury that, instead of attempting to extract money from jobbers, instead of attempting to put them out of business, the whole effort has been to keep them in business and to deal with them fairly.

Now, in view of all the time that was spent on that matter, I hope you will bear with me while I give you just a little of the testimony that the Government put in:
4138 I want to call your attention first to the testimony of Walter Wingrove, of Sheboygan. Now, he has a storage capacity of 175,000 gallons. Now, just think how he would be hit with a price war—if the price went off one, two, three, four, five, and sometimes six cents a gallon, what a loss he would have to take. But Mr. Wingrove had a contract with Barnsdall, and he had a contract for a flat five and a half cent margin under the official posted service station price of Standard of Indiana. You are in business—you have been in business. You tell me some business where a man is guaranteed a five and a half cent flat margin, win, lose or draw. Do you know of any other business? Do you know of any other commodity, unless it is something that is covered by a patented process?

This man had a flat five and a half cent margin under the official posted price. His contract contained a pay-back clause, providing that if the seller had to reduce its price and give a full five and a half cent margin, and subsequently the buyer got a margin in excess of five and a half cents, there would be a split of not to exceed three-eighths of a cent a gallon, to the extent that the seller had had to reduce its price to the buyer in order to give the full margin. Now, then, between eight thousand and ten thousand dollars 4139 was due Barnsdall under this contract upon its expiration in June, 1936. And under the terms of the contract, Wingrove was not obligated to pay a cent of it. That is in the record, page 233. And he didn't pay it; because it was in his contract to the effect that he didn't have to. I don't know where we could get any more favorable contract than that to show to this jury.

Now, he let loose of that contract—why? And he took a contract with the Texas Company—and why did he take the contract with the Texas Company? When Wingrove signed the Texas contract, the Texas Company turned over several service stations and several dealer service accounts to him, and between June, 1935, and June, 1936, the gallonage of these stations was approximately 200,000 gallons. And Wingrove sold this gasoline to them and expanded his business about twenty-five per cent. Is that cruel and inhuman treatment, the way the counsel said here yesterday?

Now, then, the idea that they wanted to crowd the jobber out of business was disproved by this witness' testimony. Barnsdall wanted to keep his business, but he went to Texas. Sinclair tried to get his business. Anderson-Prichard tried to get his business. And Mid-Continent Petroleum 4140 Company tried to get his business, so as to keep this jobber in operation.

Now, there is one more here that I want to burden you with. It was referred to by counsel yesterday, and that is the reason I am referring to it. That is Mr. Breuch, who is located here in the city of Madison. Now, let's see how unfairly he was treated.

He told us that about fifty per cent of his business is dealer accounts, and the other fifty per cent he sells to consumers direct. On the other fifty per cent, sold through his own service stations and direct to the consumers, he would get the full five and a half cent margin. He further told us that when a price war occurs, a jobber who is on contract is given protection from his refiner. He may get full protection, or only part protection, depending upon his contract. Breuch has a protection clause in his contract with Barnsdall Refining Corporation, which guarantees him a five and a half cent margin; that is, the supplier will lower the basic price in order for the jobber to have a five and a half cent margin between the price he pays for the gasoline and the price at which it is sold to the retail trade.

Now, at the time that Mr. Breuch entered into his contract with Barnsdall Refining Company—and this is 4141 his testimony, or an abstract of his testimony, he had several bank loans. And he wanted to buy out the interest of a partner. So Barnsdall put up the money for that. Cruel and inhuman treatment? No wonder the gentlemen are shocked at the supplier loaning the money to pay the bank, loaning him the money to buy out his partner.

Now, in his contract there is a pay-back clause that, at any time the margin is not five and a half cents, the refiner bills Breuch as of five and a half cents, and the difference between the full five and a half cents and what the market really is is charged to him on his pay-back account. The refiner really gives this amount to him, but charges it back at the end. If the contract is allowed to run the full term, then whatever is put on the pay-back account, Breuch does not have to pay. Is that unfair?

In 1935 and 1936, Mr. Breuch tells us that he sold 3,250,000 gallons of gasoline, and on about fifty per cent of that he got the full five and a half cents. Out of the other fifty per cent, a large volume of that was sold to consumers.

But I shall not take your time to go through these jobber contracts, one by one, in view of the limitation upon my time.

4142 Now, then with crude oil pegged at a dollar a barrel, the average independent had to get 5.4 cents for gasoline in order to break even. The whole area was swamped with hot oil, the Mid-Continent area as well as others, during the period discussed by my associate, Mr. Brazeau.

There was a Federal Tender Board established in the fall of 1934 under Section 9-C, and as a result of the establishing of that Tender Board, the price rose while that Tender Board was in operation. But, as stated yesterday, the Tender Board went out with the invalidation of Section 9-C by the Supreme Court in the Panama case, on the 7th of January, 1935.

Now, then, when gasoline was selling, as it was, around three and a half cents, or three and a quarter cents, or three and three-eighths cents, along about the first of March, 1935—just bear this in mind—the parity which was established by the Code, through the Bureau of Mines and the experts in Washington, would have required that the refiner get 5.4 cents instead of three and a half. So that every gallon that he manufactured and put on the market represented a loss.

But, you say, well, why didn't he quit? He can't quit. He has got contracts for his crude. He has got his re-4143 lations with his jobbers and others, who are his outlets for his product. And the minute that he closes down, he loses his crude supply and becomes subject to an action for damages for breach of his contract, and he loses his outlets. So, there he is, driven by the forces of necessity to keep on making gasoline for less than his out of pocket cost.

Now, I want to briefly take that up with you. Let's just see where we get off. I don't know—is there a piece of paper around here somewhere? Let's figure this out.

(Counsel makes calculation before the jury.)

Now, let's take the price of third grade—we will put it good and plenty, at seventeen and a half cents. That is the retail. Now, then, the tax on it is five cents. The freight is .0238. Now, then, the jobber, 5.5. Now, just figure those up, and you have got a total of 12.88 cents per gallon.

Now, take your 17.5, take the 12.88 out of it, and you have left 4.62 cents—for what? Now, what does that represent? Mind you, that is less than the tax; it is less than the jobber gets. That represents what? The cost of drilling the well, taking the oil from the ground, piping it to the refinery, refining it in the refinery, and loading it on cars for shipment.

Now, the Government thought that was a rather 4144 inequitable distribution, to allow for all of that only 4.62 cents. And that was one of the things that the Government set about to correct.

Our position in this case is this: That we followed what the Secretary of the Interior designated as his policy to procure a larger return for the independent refiner. The Government's position is that, instead of getting 4.62, that the refiner ought to get less, and the jobber ought to get more. Now, if you think that is an equitable distribution, I very much mistake my judgment of you gentlemen.

Now, let's see about the inception of this conspiracy.

You know, ordinarily—before I leave that, I would like to read to you some testimony of Mr. Arnott's, with reference to the effect that these price wars have upon the industry, upon the jobbers, the retailers, and every one connected with the industry. He states this, and no one perhaps knows better the effect, after having spent the time that he did spend in the investigation:

> "The retailer has a margin between what is the normal price and what he pays, and he has to operate and make a profit within that margin. If he becomes involved in a price war and, to meet his competitor in any one of these circles, has > 4145 to give away part of that margin—and when he gives it away, and again gives it away, depending on how the price war goes, he comes down to the point that that margin is reduced and reduced and reduced; and sooner or later he comes to the point that was so frequent with us, he came to the point that he couldn't go on. The margin wasn't there.
>
> "And then what did he do? He turned to his supplier; he turned to his refinery, who sold him his gasoline; or he turned to his jobber. That jobber may be the large refiner's jobber; or it may be the jobber of a small refiner. And he pointed out that, 'I must have assistance, because, see what this price war has led me to.'
>
> "And then in turn, the jobber, who would have to help him or lose his connections, lose his distribution or his retailer—he had his margin, and as he helped his distributor or his retailer, he had to give away part of that margin. And it would not be very long before he would have reached the point where he didn't have sufficient to carry on.
> "And so he, the jobber, turns to his source of supply, or he has a jobber he is distributing for, > 4146 whose refinery he is distributing for; and so he goes to his refiner. Does the refiner then say that he is not interested in his jobber or his distributor? No, he takes care of that jobber. The refiners do take care of their jobbers, because they depend on that jobber. And so that refiner eventually finds himself an important cog in this price war—a price war started by the retailer, involving all, the retailer, the jobber, the track side operator, the price cutter, the co-op, all involved in the retail war, which comes back to the jobber. And the jobber then goes for protection or help to the re-finer, and the refiner has to take care of him. And by that means he gets a realization,—a realization of what? Whatever the price war has brought back to him as a tank car price.

"And so we have a circle that starts again with that very refiner, who has sold this distress gasoline, in turn has to go out and sell it again, with no known market or no known customers, and the gasoline appears again in the retail market and more or less for the same price."

4147 Now, then, let's see what part our Government was taking in this thing. I told you, didn't I, that they worked right along with them? They did. Not only that, but as I read this testimony, you know it.

Dr. Frey, a Government witness, with whom we couldn't talk unless one of these gentlemen were present, told you on the witness stand, and I will read his testimony, that the P. A. B. induced one of these companies to raise the price of gasoline in this territory in 1934 and 1935. That is how far the Government was interested in this, and how far they were engaged in helping operate this business.

4148 Now, these are questions by the Court to Dr. Frey:

"The Court: Well, what did you understand to be the price war that was raging in July, 1934, and continued, and reached its peak in October, and practically ended in December? Now, do you know anything about that price war?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What was it?

"A. Do you mean what was happening during the period? That price war was very extensive all through the Middle West, and I was in that; in the position that I occupied, I was trying right along to see what could be done to get the prices normalized.

"Q. The prices at the service stations?

"A. At the service stations, and between jobbers, and between track-side operators. Every one that was engaged in marketing in any way seemed to be in that embroilment; and it was part of my job to see if I couldn't iron out that difficulty.

"Q. What did you do during that time?

"A. I worked very closely with Mr. Arnott as the Chief Stabilizer of the Stabilization Committee, to iron out these difficulties between various con-4149 tending forces. We held meetings in quite a number of places in the Middle West, trying to get the companies to determine what was wrong and what could be done to get prices back to normal.

"Mr. Chaffetz: Q. That is, retail prices?

"A. All prices.

"Mr. Donovan: Q. Now, when you say all prices, what do you mean?

"A. I mean the general price structure.

"Q. And what are the prices that go into the general price structure?

"A. I mean retail prices, jobber prices, tank wagon prices, tank car, right back to the refinery.

"The Court: Q. What was done to eliminate the price war between July, 1934, and January 1, 1935?

"A. Well, many, many meetings were held to get—to overcome the causes that were partly responsible—

"Q. What were those abuses? Well, let's just start out; you first felt the effects of this price war among the service stations, did you, one was underselling the other?

"A. Yes.

"Q. Now, what did you do to eliminate that?

"A. We went into that—at first, we went in and tried to hold local meetings.

4150 "Mr. Donovan: Q. When you say 'we', whom do you mean?

"A. The Petroleum Administrative Board, acting with Mr. Arnott's Stabilization Committee. Now, this is the period late in '34?

"The Court: Yes.

"A. And we very soon found that it was impractical to try to solve the problem just locally, where we would get a group of dealers or jobbers to agree that they would eliminate underselling, under-price posting, chiseling of one variety or another. And gradually our activities expanded.

"The Court: Q. Did you have any success at all dealing locally with the service station owners?

"A. It was very unsatisfactory.

"Q. What was the next step?

"A. The next step was to take a larger area. For instance, the first large area that we dealt with was, as I recall, Michigan, in which we tried to handle the entire state. Our efforts in Michigan were not entirely successful either. Then we tried to handle a very much larger area, such as the Standard of Indiana territory, but it was a gradual movement outward from a very local situation to a state, to several states, to a large territory. In 4151 some of those meetings we discussed conditions all the way from the Rocky Mountains to the Ohio line.

"Q. You discussed conditions, but what did you do to cure that trouble?

"A—"

Here is conspiracy for you, according to their view of it.

"—We got companies to enter into agreements with each other to—in some instances we even got a company to volunteer for a period to raise the general price level to see whether it would stick as an example."

That is what the Department of the Interior was doing. "We did it."

"Mr. Donovan: Q. When was that, Doctor?

"A. Well, we tried that experiment in a small way as early as the beginning of 1934. I tried that personally all through the summer of 1934, and then in connection with the stabilization committees through the fall and winter of 1934 and into 1935.

"Q. Do I understand—

"The Court: What was the result of that?

"A. That work was more successful.

4152 "Q. What did you do after that?

"A. Coincident with that this buying started, and we had also—

"Q. What do you mean by the buying started?

"A. Buying by the major companies of distress gasoline from independent refiners."

Now, that is the testimony of a member of the P. A. B. Board. And let no one fool you that this gentleman was here for the purpose of offering us some slight assistance, some free assistance. This man told the truth, and you have no reason to doubt it.

Why, here is a man that was educated out here a mile from where you are sitting in the University of Wisconsin. He taught there for years and was finally taken into public service in Washington. And what motive would that man have to come on the witness stand, when he isn't permitted to talk with us except in the presence of Government counsel, and lie to you?

And yet he is held up here with scorn by counsel for the Government.

Now, there is another thing I want to call your attention to. We have heard a lot of talk here about the fact that the major companies pretended to do what they did as a matter of charity to the small independent refiners.
4153 That is just some more bunk. What was done with reference to the independent refiners was a part and parcel of the whole Code scheme. It was just as much a part of it as it was the pegging of the price of crude. The whole purpose of the Secretary of the Interior and the Administration was to save the small refiner. Incidentally, of course, every refiner benefited by it, but it was high time that somebody benefited by it where they were buying crude at a dollar, and were selling gasoline at two cents under the price that was fixed in the Code.

And again, I say, suppose that these companies that I am defending and these individuals had hung back at that time and had said, "No, we will have none of it. Let the small refiner go into bankruptcy." Suppose we had taken that attitude? Then what would the Government have said? We certainly would have been subject to indictment.

Now, throughout this case, we have had the attitude taken that all these meetings that these gentlemen attended that they attended as the representative of their corporation, but every one of these meetings that they are talking about, every one of them they are talking about in the evidence were meetings of some committee or of some organization under the stabilization plan and operating within the authority of the Secretary of the Interior.

Have you heard any evidence here, gentlemen, that 4154 any of these men got together at some private place and agreed on something? No, you have not!

Now, there is one thing about the trial of a lawsuit that you gentlemen, if you have sat on juries heretofore, have observed. Any witness can go on the witness stand and tell a story of some sort or other. But you, all of you, have had experience in your various walks of life and you measure the testimony of any witness by this experience. You measure it not only by your experience but by its reasonableness. And so in this case, I ask you to apply your experience. I ask you to apply to the testimony a yardstick of reasonableness before you answer this question that is to be imposed on you for determination as to whether these men conspired to violate the Sherman law.

You can search your recollection, and there isn't a one of you that can recall one case where a man contemplated the commission of a crime, the violation of the laws of his country where he has caused it to be published in the newspapers or has gone to the representatives of the Government and told them flatly what he was going to do, or has taken the trouble to invite the representatives of the Government to the very meetings that he is conducting.

Oh, no! A crime isn't committed that way!

4155 So that, here is one important thing that you must determine before you convict my clients is, was there a purpose to violate the Sherman law?

Now, it is quite true, and I agree with Brother Crawford that when men are framing a conspiracy, they do it in secret. I am going to quote for you the statement of Mr. Crawford that he made in his opening address to the jury four months ago and let us see how it squares with the facts. He said:

> "Let me say now that you must not expect that we are going to come before you with any written contracts entered into by these big corporations and these 40 or 50 individuals in which it will appear that they contracted in writing with one another to go into this criminal scheme to fix prices in violation of the law. When people are going out to form a conspiracy to enter into an agreement to do something which is contrary to the law, and for which the law may punish them, they don't do it in the presence of witnesses, and they don't do it by any written contract. They do it in the dark and they do it secretly, and they do it by a series of operations—series of contracts covering a long period of time, and that is precisely what they did here. So you > 4156 must not expect us to have any contracts here to show that they engaged in writing to enter into any violation of law for which they are brought here for trial. But there will be unfolded before you gradually by the witnesses who knew the facts and by many documents taken from the files of the corporations themselves a picture of how the master minds in the conspiracy sowed the seed into the minds of those who finally came in with them of the scheme and the plan under which they would raise the price of this five per cent of spot market gasoline and in that way would be able to fix the price of gasoline all over this territory and do what they pleased with their oil."

Mr. Crawford: What page is that?

Mr. Thomas: Record pages 80 and 81.

He further stated:

> "Now, one or two of them alone couldn't have done this, of course, if there were competition between them. And they well knew that. And the picture will be painted to you by evidence here, of how they got together; how they held secret meetings, in Chicago, Washington, Kansas City, St. Louis, Tulsa, some of the other places down in the oil fields, from time to time.
>
> 4157 "And, as I said at the beginning, these were not meetings at which the public were invited—indeed, no. They were meetings from which the public was excluded. And there the scheme was hatched, and there the men were selected for the purpose of going out and taking their part in putting it into effect."

Now, let us see how—

Mr. Crawford: Thank you for reading it like that. I didn't know it was so good.

Mr. Thomas: Well, I tell you, you probably didn't know it was so erroneous, until I called your attention to it.

Now, let us see what the Government did. They prepared this case, and they said they tried to convict—God knows they did everything within their power, but let us see what they did.

This committee was appointed out there at Chicago on January 4, 1935, at a stabilization committee meeting, but where does the conspiracy start, according to the Government's theory. According to the Government's presentation, it was hatched at a meeting in St. Louis, on March 5, 1935. You remember the situation, although it was a long time ago, how we tried and tried again to have them tell us what kind of meeting it was, and we couldn't get 4158 a word in edgewise, and the result of it was that after they got through with their testimony with reference to this March 5, 1935, meeting at St. Louis, you didn't know whether it was a meeting of the common council of oil representatives or the Ku Klux Klan.

Near the close of the testimony—in the closing minute—the closing hour, they come in here with what? The Sus document and Mr. Sus is a witness at about five o'clock on the last day of this trial, and they had that document for eighteen months, and they knew of Sus for eighteen months. That is fairness for you!

4159 I say the alleged conspiracy,—what they call conspiracy, originated on January 4th, at Chicago; and that was the time that the McDowell Committee was appointed.

Let me call your attention to the testimony. There were forty or fifty oil men gathered there. They weren't specially invited or hand-picked. Out of the forty or fifty who gathered there, the government has indicted thirteen of them. And what has become of the balance?

At that meeting that was held when this committee was named, when the names of these alleged conspirators were published and broadcast to the world, the P. A. B. Board had been notified to have a man present. Do you believe that conspiracies originate that way? To call in a member of the P. A. B. Board, or one of their representatives?

I am not going to burden you with a recital of the details of that meeting. The fact is that Arnott opened the meeting, as you remember; told them that Washington was deluged with complaints from independent refiners; some of those independent refiners, Majewski, and some of the others, claimed that they were going broke with gasoline at the price at which it was sold, and with crude pegged at a dollar, and that they were going to break the 4160 price of crude.

It was after the discussion that the McDowell Committee was appointed and they were asked to make a study of conditions and report later.

They had another meeting at Chicago, on February 5th. I am not going to go into the details of that, but I want to call your attention briefly to this significant thing that occurred there. We are supposed to have a conspiracy; that men are combining together for the purpose of raising and fixing and maintaining the retail and wholesale price of gasoline. When the suggestion was first made to this meeting, that the majors buy the distress gasoline, both Karstedt, of Continental, and Bullock, of Standard, stated it would have no value, and referred to the 1934 program, which they claim did no good, and they would have nothing more to do with buying programs where there were any allotments or commitments, especially as to prices. They had been booked down there in 1934, putting the price up at a certain figure, in buying gasoline in East Texas. That is the ten million dollar pool that the witness Steiger was talking about. And their position was that the only thing to do was to cut the price of crude.

4161 Now, there you have a peculiar situation, where men are gathering together to conspire to violate the laws of the country. Here are two representatives come in there and say they won't have anything to do with it. That is a very significant circumstance.

Finally the plan which they had in mind, and which they reported to Arnott, was worked out. And the testimony shows this, and it is summed up in these words. There were to be no pools. There was to be no central buying agency; and there was not. Every one was to buy in line with his needs and requirements. They were to make their own deals with the selling refiner, and that is what they did. There were no allocations or commitments or percentage quotas, as in the previous plan that had been sponsored by the government, and the purchasing company should consider buying at a fair going market price in their individual transactions, rather than take advantage of the distress seller.

Then we come to the meeting of February 11th in Chicago. This meeting occurred following a general stabilization committee meeting, and the McDowell Committee met with men from other major companies having no representation on the committee, but who were regular buyers of gasoline. This was the meeting that Sus attended.
4162 This is the meeting that was attended by the witness who was called in here at the eleventh hour to put in evidence a memorandum that he said he made.

Now, Mr. Ashton outlined the plan the same as I have given it; and I want briefly, at this time, to call your attention to some significant things that occurred at that meeting outside of the mere discussion of this plan. Here is some testimony in this case that is absolutely undisputed. Mr. McDowell testified:

> "Question: Was anything said at this meeting about publicity?
>
> "Answer: Yes, sir.
>
> "Question: What was said?
>
> "Answer: Well, several people made the statement that there had been quite a lot in the trade journals about the activities of this committee since the time of its appointment; calling attention to the fact that there had always been, and they thought it would be a good idea to give the trade papers any information they sought on it.
>
> "Question: Did you afterwards see any articles in the trade papers about this buying plan?
> 4163 "Answer: Yes, sir, a good many of them."

That testimony is undisputed. It is corroborated by what Steiger told you on the stand, one of the government's witnesses. His papers carried what he called leads,—stories about the meetings of these committees.

Is that consistent with criminal purpose, I ask you gentlemen, to give out information to the newspapers, and not only did they suggest giving it out, but it was published in the trade journals? Is that consistent with criminal intention? You never heard of such a thing before in connection with the charge of crime.

Now, with reference to the Sus memorandum, of which counsel spoke yesterday, may I call your attention briefly to his testimony. He testified as follows:

> "Question: Now, is this report that has been offered in evidence here a verbatim report of what took place at the meeting?
>
> "Answer: No, sir."

He further testified:

> "Question: Now, in this report or memorandum of yours you also referred to a steering committee and to its functions, in a short paragraph in your memorandum. Was there a considerable amount of discussion as to a steering committee and the functions it would perform? 4164
>
> "Answer: Yes, sir.
>
> "Question: Will you tell us what that was and what was said about it?
>
> "Answer: One of the recommendations of this tank car stabilization committee was that there should be appointed a steering committee. The function of this steering committee was to keep itself currently informed as to who had gasoline to sell,—who had distress gasoline, and who, on the other hand, wanted to buy gasoline, in order that there might be an agency which would bring the buyer and the seller together.
>
> "This steering committee was also to keep itself informed as to the price at which gasoline was currently moving. And they were to see to it and to use such persuasion and such influence as lay at their command, to see to it that these major buying refiners did not take advantage of these smaller selling refiners, and by reason of the economic distress of these smaller refiners, bid down the price to below the current levels at which gasoline was selling, because to do so would have defeated the very purpose of the meeting, which was to stabilize. 4165
> "And this steering committee was to see to it that these major refiners played fair with these smaller refiners who were in economic distress, and didn't chisel under the going market, on the price at which they bought this gasoline.

"Question: Now, what, if anything, was said as to the price that should be paid, if anything was said?

"Answer: The only reference that was made at the meeting to the price to be paid was that they wanted these refiners who bought gasoline from these refiners who had the distress gasoline, was to pay the going market price and not chisel.

"Question: And getting back to the committee; was anything said as to whether or not the purchase should be made by or through the committee; what if anything was said about that?

"Answer: No, sir, the committee was not to function in any buying capacity. The buying committee was simply to put the buyer and the seller together, and from that point on the buyer would make his own deal with the seller; because there were such matters as specifications, and freight rates, and quantities and so forth, that would be involved." 4166

Now, that doesn't differ very much from what you heard from the other witnesses that have testified as to what took place on that same occasion.

The one thing that strikes me peculiar about this whole matter; I told you that they knew about Mr. Sus; that they knew about this note that he had made, for a period of eighteen months. Now, they had the trade journals in here, and they allege with equal degree of solemnity that the trade journals were guilty of conspiring as they do any of the defendants I am appearing for. Here is this reference in the Sus memorandum with reference to the trade journals, and yet, the government knowing of Sus and knowing of this document, voluntarily came into this Court and dismissed the trade journals out of this case.

And they withhold it, as I say, until the eleventh hour, before it is offered in proof in this case. What is the reason for it? The reason for it is this; they know that it does not state the facts as the facts occurred. They knew it, and that is the reason why they withheld it, and they put it in with the rest of this bankrupt testimony they have here in the last few hours of this trial, and which I will discuss later. 4167

It is interesting, in connection with this meeting, this feature of it. I told you, did I not, of the reluctance of Bullock of the Standard Oil Company to have anything to do with any buying programs where there were any commitments or allotments or agreements on price. Here is some testimony. Mr. McDowell relates what occurred in that respect:

"Question: Did any one disagree with that suggestion?

"Answer: Yes, that suggestion with reference to the plan, provoked quite an argument. I remember particularly that Mr. Karstedt and Mr. Bullock stated that they didn't think major company buying would do any good, would have any value.

"Question: What reason did they advance for that statement?

"Answer: Well, they had a good many, as I remember it.

"First, they said that, with hot gasoline moving out of East Texas as it was, that any buying in the Mid-Continent would be just like mopping up the 4168 ocean. They said, furthermore, that they wouldn't have anything to do with any more buying programs; they had had some experience with some in 1934; they didn't think they had done any good, and they just didn't want to have any part in anything that was like the 1934 buying programs.

"Question: Did they say why the 1934 programs hadn't done any good?

"Answer: Well, yes. Hot oil had continued to be uncontrolled during several of those 1934 programs; but they also made a very definite point on this, that they didn't want to have anything to do with anything where there were any allotments or commitments, or where anybody could tell them how much they would have to pay for gasoline—which were principles of some of the buying programs in 1934. And they had expressed the opinion that they thought those were some of the reasons that those plans had failed, because people were being asked to do things that they didn't want to do.

"Mr. Karstedt and Mr. Bullock said that in their opinion the only thing to do was to have a crude cut.

4169 "Question: Did you have anything to say on this proposal?

"Answer: A cut in the price of crude. They didn't think anything could be done.

"Mr. Donovan: Question: Did you have anything to say?

"Answer: Yes. I took the position that I didn't agree with the pessimistic attitude of Mr. Karstedt and Mr. Bullock; that, although the situation was fairly bad right at that time, that I thought we should be encouraged by the attempts on the part of the Administration to get the Connally Bill passed, which we knew had as one of its purposes the establishment of the Tender Board, which would, we hoped, put a stop to the trafficking of hot oil and hot gasoline out of the East Texas; and that, I called their attention to the fact that we were a committee, appointed by Mr. Arnott, representing a section of our industry, and that I thought we should attempt to do something."

Now, moreover, if this was a conspiracy, if they were framing up some crime, do you think this would have happened? Do you think that Bullock, for instance, would have got up and left the meeting? This question was 4170 asked:

"Question: Did Mr. Bullock stay to the end of the meeting?

"Answer: No, Mr. Bullock was there but a very short time."

Now then, the Standard Oil Company seems to be the target at which these gentlemen are shooting. Let's see just what happened with reference to inducing the Standard to purchase gasoline.

"Question: What did Mr. Bullock say when McDowell telephoned him with reference to purchasing?

"Answer: Mr. Bullock thanked me for the information and he didn't tell me anything definitely as to what they would do."

When asked on redirect examination, by Mr. Kirkland, as to how he kept in contact with Standard Oil Company, he stated, at pages 1226-27 of the record:

"Principally through telephone conversations with Mr. Bullock. I would say that that was during the early part of the year.

"Question: During the early part of 1935?

"Answer: Along in the summer and fall. Of course I was away quite a lot, and then, frankly, I got so little satisfaction out of Mr. Bullock in some 4171 of my conversations that I wanted to save the telephone expense.

"Question: You dropped him?

"Answer: So I just quit telephoning him."

The Court: Take a recess at this time.

(Whereupon, at 11:15 A. M., a short recess was taken.)

Mr. Thomas: I now wish to deal with the March 5th, 1935, meeting. This is the meeting at which the government says the agreement was made. This is the agreement at which their proof was aimed until, as I said before, the last minutes of the trial when they bring in this Sus memorandum, which they know does not correctly state what took place there, and which they have known all the time.

Now, just what did occur at the March 5th meeting? The first meeting was held at Ashton's office in St. Louis in the morning. At that time there were present four independent refiners, Boggs, Simmons, Cocanower, who were members of an independent refiners' committee, and Winget who was present as an observer.

Now, that sounds rather unusual, that if men are going to form a conspiracy they have somebody present as an observer. That is not the usual way in which conspiracies are run.

Jacobi arrived late at this meeting; attended the meeting at the office of Mr. Ashton.

Mr. Ashton explained the plan as I have explained it to you here this morning.

Simmons claimed that the price of gasoline was so low that he could not continue to operate very much 4173 longer; and you remember the status of the independent refiners as depicted by the testimony; bankruptcy, closing, unable to continue their operations all through the Mid-Continent and the East Texas field.

At this meeting Mr. Ashton emphasized, and Mr. Jacobi does not disagree one whit from what McDowell says happened—there is no disagreement between them—he emphasized the fact that the independents were to make their own deal and it was up to them to get the best price they could from the companies which might offer to purchase.

Now, that is the undisputed testimony here as between Jacobi and McDowell, as to what occurred at that meeting.

Does that sound like price-fixing? To make the best deal they possibly could.

Mr. Bourque, one of the defendants, was present at that meeting. And let me say this—

Mr. Mitchell: Was not present.

Mr. Thomas: Was not present? Well, Mr. Bourque at least had furnished to somebody a list of the various independent refiners that had distress gasoline for sale.

Now, understand what Bourque's position was. Bourque was the secretary of the Western Petroleum Refiners Association, employed on a salary. The business of that association is to collect statistical data, and so forth. It 4174 does not sell a pint of gasoline. He was asked to furnish this information, which he did.

Now, bear in mind as far as this man is concerned they could have ten conspiracies, and it would not add one cent to his pocket.

Now, with reference to the sub-committee, that was to act as a clearing house for the purpose of finding out where this distress gasoline was located, and to communicate it to the buyers. At that time the warning was given again, that they were not to chisel down on the price, that they were to pay a fair price, not take advanage of an independent refiner when a bank had called his loan, and buy his gasoline for two cents or two-and-a-half cents a gallon, but to pay somewhere near the market price for it. And that is just exactly what was done.

Now, there were four independents at this meeting, and out of the four there has only one of them been indicted here. Out of all these companies that are listed in this indictment as co-conspirators, not one of them has been indicted, and the only independent refiner that is here subject to the indictment is Boggs, and as far as I can observe from this testimony the only thing he has been guilty of is that he insisted something be done for the independent refiners, which was reported by Arnott at the meeting on January 4th.

There were no amounts fixed that any major should 4175 take; and that is borne out by the facts. You remember the figures as to the number of cars that were taken by these majors. I recall particularly, for instance, that of Gulf, ten cars, seventy-five cars, thirty cars, and so forth; and so you go through the list and you find that variation in the amounts that they take. They take it in accordance with the needs of those concerns as it develops from time to time. There is no regular amount they take of ten cars per month, or twenty-five cars per month, or fifty cars per month, but they take it in that irregular way.

Now, when this meeting was held on the 5th of March counsel would lead you to believe that all the distress gasoline was spoken for by those present. That was not true. There was something like sixty per cent of the distress gasoline for the month of March that these majors agreed to take at that time.

But the strangest thing of all to me is this: If you are framing a conspiracy on March 5th, 1935, why on earth wouldn't you have the conspirators there? You would think if they were framing a conspiracy of that kind, anybody that would have as much interest as the Standard of Indiana, for instance, would at least have some representative at the meeting. No.

4176 You would think that a company like Pure would have some representative there to see that they got fair treatment in this conspiracy that counsel talk about.

But what was the fact? The fact, and the undisputed fact in this record is that Sinclair, Barnsdall, Pure and Skelly had no representative whatsoever at the meeting, and the arrangement was made with some of those that were present to contact those companies to see if they would buy any of this distress gasoline.

Now, there is another thing that strikes me about a conspiracy where you have a master mind like Mr. Arnott operating. The only meeting that Arnott attended in connection with this whole program was when he called that meeting out there at Chicago on the 4th day of January, and when he attended the allocators' meeting in Washington, within the very shadow of the Department of Justice.

Now, it is a strange man's mind who organizes a conspiracy and goes away and leaves it. Is that usual? Is that what you would expect? No.

At this meeting, according to the undisputed testimony—Jacobi does not deny it; McDowell says it is so—this so-called sub-committee was given no authority to recommend any price, and both Jacobi and McDowell agree that the price was to be left to barter as between the purchaser and the seller.

4177 But the government will tell you that Jacobi wrote letters to his employer or to the Wadhams Oil Company, and in those letters he recommended prices, and one of those letters is pointed out to you as indicating the presence of a conspiracy, and that is the letter Exhibit 682, dated March 15th, 1935, from Jacobi to the Wadhams Oil Company.

"Wadhams Oil Company,
Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Attention: Mr. A. G. Maguire, Chairman
Subject: Weekly letter.

"Dear Mr. Maguire:

"Crude oil. Crude oil and gasoline markets indicate a firmer trend.

"The industry seems to have taken heart in the renewed activities of the Federal Tender Board in East Texas, and most of the credit for this better state of mind must be given to the Tender Board.

"Gasoline. The writer has been busy this week on tank car stabilization work, and thus far results are gratifying. Our committee decided on a price of three and three-fourths cents for third grade, and four and three-fourths cents for 'Q', for next week. Purchasing companies, including our own units, are paying these prices today. Since this stabilization work started, an advance in price of about three-eighths of a cent per gallon on both grades has resulted.

4178 "Jobber demand has decreased somewhat the past week, and some good weather would now be very welcome, from the viewpoint of our work here.

"Natural gasoline, 26/70 grade shown no price improvement as yet, but I believe it will shortly.

"Yours very truly,
"W. P. Jacobi."

This is Jacobi's letter, a letter to the Wadhams Oil Company. Is there any reason, any legal reason why he should not advise his employer with reference to any opinion he might have on prices?

The question is whether or not the members of this committee communicated to the major companies a price that they had agreed upon and which the major companies paid for this third grade gasoline. There are the two elements; first, the communication of a recommended price, and second, the fact that the purchase was made at the recommended price.

Now, what are the facts? I don't know what those fractional figures mean to you; they do not mean much to me; I have to stop and analyze them all the time in order to figure them out.

But on March 14th, the day that letter was written, the Oilgram quoted third grade at three and seven-eighths 4179 low to four cents high, and the Chicago Journal of Commerce at three and three-fourths to four cents.

Now, at this meeting on the 14th both Jacobi and McDowell agree that Jacobi reported that some of the independents had told him that some one major or more had been buying too cheap, or in other words, as he expressed it, chiseling them.

Now, McDowell never recommended a price to anybody. Tuttle never recommended a price to anybody. The record is absolutely devoid of proof of any recommendation by either one of them. McDowell was on the stand, and so testified, and apparently the government was willing to accept his testimony as the truth about it.

Counsel tells you that McDowell confessed the truth, and that Arnott confessed the truth.

They told just what occurred, and they told what had been published in the newspapers, what was known in the Department in Washington. There was no reason why they should conceal it. No recommended price of any kind from McDowell, no recommended price of any kind from Tuttle.

Now, on that subject let me quote the government's witness Jacobi, the man who had appeared five times before a grand jury, had been quizzed by these gentlemen up, down and crosswise, and here is his testimony with regard to it. I am reading from the record, page 410:

4180 "Q. Did you tell them that that was a recommendation from you three?

"A. No, sir. I told them that that was my idea of the fair market price for the following week.

"Q. Did you tell them that was the committee's idea?

"A. I don't remember doing so.

"Q. Well, why didn't you?

"A. Maybe I did, but I don't remember doing it."

Now, gentlemen, you know I would hate to have to come before a jury and be put on trial for violating the laws of my country because of what somebody said or what somebody wrote about me. I would ask a jury to convict me or acquit me, depending on what I did. It is my acts that I want tried, and not what Jacobi wrote about me, not what somebody said about me, but what I did about it.

Now, let me call your attention to this: In June, 1935, gentlemen of the jury, the government of the United States by reason of the force of a subpoena obtained the information that is depicted on this chart with reference to Jacobi's purchases for the Socony-Vacuum. (Referring to chart). They had it for eighteen months, and when this chart was first exposed to view it was some surprise to the gentlemen, and there were no grins around the table at that time.

Now, I want to show you what Jacobi did later. I 4181 don't care what he wrote. You are punishing the Socony-Vacuum, if you punish it at all, for what it did; and here you are.

4182 This chart depicts the price trend of third grade gasoline, and these red dots indicate the purchases.

Now, look at them. Does that indicate a recommended price when they are buying below the market, buying at the low of the market, and so on through the year—here, over to 1936 (indicating). That is what they did. That is what my company did. And they want to convict my company because of something that Jacobi wrote, and that is what we did (indicating).

Now, how on earth can you fix prices by buying as was bought here (indicating) by the Socony-Vacuum Company? It just can't be did.

Talk about conspiracy, fixing prices! Why, you can take a couple of high-school boys, and they could do a better job of fixing prices than is depicted on that chart. And, mind you, this chart isn't made from the oral testimony of this man or the other man. That is taken from records of the company, the records relating to purchases of gasoline. It is record testimony that this Government had in its hands since June, 1936, and had in its hands when they put this witness on the stand, and you have had the testimony of recommended prices over the low of the market where they are buying all the way through at below the market.

I say, gentlemen, if we are to be punished, punish 4183 us for what we did, but don't punish us for what somebody wrote.

Now, I want to call your attention to another thing: They say that what was written by Jacobi and the rest of these fellows was responsible for the rise in the price of gasoline. Here is something that the Government won't contradict. Jacobi's first purchase of third grade was made on March 8th, and the price of third grade, according to Platt's Oilgram, had advanced since the 1st of March from three and a quarter, low, and three and a half high, on March 1st, to three and five-eighths and three and seven-eighths on March 8th. In other words, the low had advanced three-eighths in those three days and the high quotations three-eighths of a cent.

Of course, the reason for it is perfectly apparent. The Tender Board had been set up under the Connally Act on the 1st of March. Now, McDowell, acting for his company, made his first purchase on March 14th. The Pure Oil Company was laggard in getting in on this soft purchases which is embraced in the conspiracy. We find The Pure Oil Company not making any purchases until May 1, 1935. Now, if there is any action here resulting from a conspiracy, did they find that situation?

But let me call your attention to this significant bit of testimony. Government counsel in opening this case 4184 to this jury, told you that the purpose of these defendants in this case was to corner the excess gasoline so as to control the tank market price. You remember that, don't you? He spent a lot of time on that. They wanted to get a corner on it, so they could control it.

Now, what is the undisputed testimony? McDowell testified to this, and you remember how they dropped his cross examination, and never cross examined him hardly at all.

And here is what occurred. I am reading now from the record, pages 1193-94:

> "I remember specifically that Mr. Winget asked if this plan went into operation if it would mean that the independent refiner could not sell brokers any more, and I answered him on that and told him that I did not know where he got that idea, but certainly the plan did not have any such idea; that the plan simply involved an effort to put buying companies in contact with these independent refiners in the event they had distress gasoline to sell, and that if they could sell their output through brokers that it was just fine."

Does that sound like cornering the market?

4185 "If you can sell your output through brokers, that is just fine."

Let me illustrate how wide some of these statements are made by Government counsel. Now, that is in the record. That is the only testimony on that subject in the record; undisputed. And the facts bear out what McDowell said.

You have seen these charts here, and you have seen the number of sales depicted on the charts with reference to sales to jobbers and consumers. What is the reason for it?

Suppose you were an independent refiner? Suppose you were in business—in that business, and you wanted to continue in that business, what would you do? Why, you would do what they are all trying to do. You would want to get a number of jobbers scattered around through the territory. You would want to scatter your own connections with brokers so that you could establish a business of your own, a permanent business, not dependent upon the sporadic purchases of major companies, major companies purchasing five cars one month and then going two months not purchasing any. And that is what they were doing.

And that is why in this testimony you find these in-4186 dependent refiners, some sold one per cent to the majors, some two per cent, and some didn't sell any.
And that is the reason for it.

The Court: I think we will suspend at this time until two o'clock.

(Thereupon, at 12 o'clock noon, a recess was taken to 2:00 o'clock p. m., of the same day, Wednesday, January 19, 1938.)

4187 Mr. Thomas: Gentlemen of the jury:

I was talking to you this morning about the argument that was made to you by the defense—by the Government's counsel, to the effect that the majors, in this buying that was done in the Mid-Continent and East Texas, were planning to corner the supply of gasoline and keep it away from the brokers and jobbers. Since the adjournment, I have been advised that the evidence shows that the brokers were able to buy during the period more than eleven million nine hundred thousand gallons of gas from November, '34, to July, 1936. And when they did buy, they bought most of it during this March, April and 4188 May period, 1935—which evidence is far from being corroborative of the testimony of Mr. Beroth.

I now wish to talk to you a few minutes about another provision in this indictment, which counsel seems to have forgotten—at least, no reference was made in the opening statement to this particular phase of the question.

You will recall that the charge in the indictment is that a conspiracy was formed, among other things:

> "—and in turn, have intentionally raised the general level of retail prices prevailing in said Mid-Western area."

And, as the testimony came in in this case, I know that you, all of you thought that the Standard of Indiana connived with the other defendants for the purpose of fixing the retail price which we pay when we drive our cars up to the filling station to have them filled with gas. It was the natural impression that you would have from the opening statements of Government counsel, because we were told by Mr. Crawford in that opening statement that that was the purpose of the conspiracy, to control both retail and tank car prices.

4189 Now, I want to call your attention to the testimony that relates to that subject.

Mr. Marshall, who was one of the witnesses called by the defense in this case, testified as follows:—with reference to the change that was made on the 11th of September, 1934, when, at that time, the Standard adopted the trade publications as a part of the base for the determination of the price:

"Question: And was the change something suddenly made, or had it been under deliberation by your company for some time?

"Answer: As a matter of fact, the sales department had been promoting the idea, or an idea of that kind, for several years. I think we first started with it in 1925."

1925, ten years before the alleged conspiracy was formed.

"Question: And had there been, during the interval from 1925 to 1934, suggestions made to the executives about the change?

"Answer: Yes.

"Question: At the time the change was made, in September, 1934, were the executives or officials or employees of any other major oil company consulted by the Standard before making it?

4190 "Answer: Oh, no. We considered that a very confidential matter."

Barkdull, executive vice-president and treasurer of the Standard Oil Company, testified in response to the question by his Honor, as follows:

"The Court: Was the price charged to the consumer at the filling station arrived at by any conference or consultation with the oil companies doing business in that particular territory?

"Answer: No, sir, not to my knowledge.

"Question: In other words, you fix your own price, and don't care what the other fellow does?

"Answer: Oh, certainly, we care what he does. We hope that in posting that price, he will follow it; but if he don't follow and increase his price, if this happens to be an increase, why, we have to change our ideas of the situation if we want to hold our volume of business, and we may back down."

Now, there you have two witnesses that testified to the fact that no officer, agent or employee of any other corporation had anything to do whatsoever with the de-4191 termination of the price base for the retail sale of gasoline in the Standard of Indiana territory. They haven't offered a scintilla of proof to offset it. It stands there as an admitted fact.

Now, when this new or changed base for fixing or determining the retail price was put into effect, it was put into effect on the 11th day of December, 1934, long before any conspiracy is charged against any of these defendants. And when it was put into effect, the retail price of gasoline in the territory was reduced 1.6 cents.

Marshall testified as follows:

> "As far as the retail price is concerned, the effect of our change in method of computing the retail price, effective September 11th, 1934, was an average reduction of 1.6 cents per gallon throughout the entire territory. That wasn't 1.6 cents everywhere; it would be considerably more than that in some places, and less than that in some places; but, by and large, over the territory, the average reduction was 1.6 cents."

4192 That was September 11th, 1934, when the base was changed by which the retail price was posted by the Standard Company.

Now, then, there was a further reduction of three-tenths of a cent on October 20th. That was followed by an advance of three-tenths of a cent on November 13th, and on February 2nd, 1935, there was a further reduction of three-tenths of a cent. There was a net reduction of one and nine-tenths cents per gallon in the retail price for the six months prior to March 1st, 1935. There were four three-tenths of a cent advances in the spring of 1935, from March until June; and on June 1st, 1935, the retail posted price was still two-tenths of a cent lower than it was on September 11th, 1934.

In February—mark this, gentlemen—in February, 1935, the Standard had to raise the retail price of third grade to conform to the minimum price fixed by the order of the Wisconsin Department of Markets. Barkdull testified as follows on that:

> "Question: The Court asked you, Mr. Barkdull, if you knew in certain instances why the price was raised in the Indiana territory. Isn't it a fact that in 1935 the Standard of Indiana had to raise its price because of the price fixing order of the Wisconsin Department of Markets?

4193 "Answer: Yes, sir, that is true."

The price had to be raised—and it is an undisputed fact in the case—in order to conform to the minimum order, the minimum price order made by our own Department of Markets, regulating the retail sale of gasoline in this state.

I call your attention also to this Exhibit 186 of the Shell correspondence, where we find the following under date of April 17, 1935:

> "In conformity with an amendment to the Wisconsin minimum price fixing order, we increased the 1000 gallon consumer discount on Silver Shell from one-half cent to one and one-half cents."

In conformity with the minimum price fixing order of our own Department of Markets. Now, how does that square with the claim that the public were being gouged on the retail price of gasoline?

Now, in this connection, there seems to be some confusion in the Government ranks. Mr. Crawford said, when he opened this case to you, in telling you what they were going to prove, he said this:

> 4194 "The litigation, the indictment and the charge as you know now, involves the question of a violation by the defendants of the Sherman Anti-Trust Laws, in that it is claimed and we will have evidence here to sustain the claim, that these defendants engaged in a conspiracy to fix and regulate prices of gasoline, both wholesale and retail, during the period from at least March 1935 and continuing on down to the time when the indictment was returned here by the grand jury."

Now, that was his statement.

After this trial had proceeded for two months, we find them absolutely retreating from that position. I am quoting now from the record:

> "Mr. Kirkland: There wasn't any evidence that it was the policy of the Standard of Indiana to raise its price arbitrarily, or to reduce it arbitrarily.
>
> "Mr. Chaffetz: I didn't use the word 'arbitrarily'.
>
> "Mr. Kirkland: That is the only inference you can draw from your statement. The Standard of Indiana had a certain policy, which counsel could have shown if they had wished to. All they did was bring out from jobbers the statement that Standard raised 4195 its price today, or some other day. They didn't go into the formula, or why the price was raised; and it is also a fact that there isn't a scintilla of evidence, or, rather, any charge in this indictment that it was a part of the conspiracy, or that Standard conspired with anybody in raising the price, or in arriving at the formula by which they fixed or by which they arrived at their price.
>
> "Mr. Chaffetz: If that is what is worrying coun> sel, I will agree there is no evidence that the fixing of the price by Standard of Indiana was pursuant to any conspiracy."

I quote it again:'

> "If that is what is worrying counsel, I will agree that there is no evidence that the fixing of the price by Standard of Indiana was pursuant to any conspiracy."

Now, then, in view of that testimony and the statement of counsel, just what weight are you going to give to the statement of some salesman or buyer down in Oklahoma or Texas, to the effect that Standard was going to raise the price three tenths of a cent or a half a cent, or whatever it may be? Standard, as this testimony shows, and as 4196 the concession of Government counsel is, posted a price which it alone determined; and these defendants that are here with Standard on trial had nothing whatever to do with it.

Now, gentlemen of the jury, there is another matter that I want to call your attention to and discuss very briefly, as a very important consideration in this case. And that is this: If you would repeal the Sherman Law and permit the defendants that are now on trial here to make any agreement that they saw fit, it is an utter impossibility—I say, an utter impossibility for them to have fixed the tank car price or the retail price in Wisconsin or in this Mid-Western area. I repeat it: It was an utter impossibility, and the proof in this case so shows.

To illustrate:

Suppose that you and I made an agreement that, for our own benefit, we would reverse the tides and thus interfere with or control shipping along the Atlantic Seaboard—an utter impossibility. Have you any idea that you and I could be brought into a Federal court and prosecuted for a conspiracy for doing that?

And that is just what this evidence shows. And I say it shows it, notwithstanding the bitter attack that was made on Mr. Swensrud by Government counsel.

4197 Now, Mr. Swensrud, who was he? He is a graduate of the University of Minnesota. He completed his education in Harvard University. He was selected by the Secretary of the Interior on the Blazer Committee, to study the conditions of the independent refiner and make a report to the Secretary. Because we chose him, is the man to be subjected to criticism? Is he to be placed down here in Bloomington, in the Liars' Club? Just because they couldn't cross-examine him, just because what he was telling was the fact, is no reason why the man should be brought in here and by Government counsel castigated before this jury.

Can I have that chart now?

While they are putting up that chart, I want to call your attention to one thing. You know, a lawyer is cross-examining a witness, and when the witness has given very damaging testimony to that lawyer's side of the case, and he starts out to cross-examine him and then deliberately quits after a little huddle here, which you saw, between counsel, after they had asked him just a few questions—now, what is wrong? Simply this: What the man was telling and what he was demonstrating was an actual fact. And that is why they ceased that cross-examination the way that they did.

4198 (Large chart, Exhibit 935, is exhibited before the jury:)

I want to call your attention briefly to this chart, and I want to call your attention briefly to Swensrud's testimony.

You have been told by Government counsel that this is all theory, haven't you? Isn't that what he said? Do you think those freight rates (indicating) are theories; are those theory? Is it a theory when he tells you how much gasoline is shipped across from Louisville into Indiana (indicating), is that theory? Is it theory when he shows a freight rate much less than it is from down here in the Mid-Continent, from Louisville over here into Indiana (indicating)? Was it theory when he told you about The Pure Oil Company constructing their pipe line, leading from the refinery in Cleveland up through Toledo and into Detroit (indicating), so that they could transport gasoline more cheaply than they could by rail, and thus invade the Indiana territory? Was he telling you theory when he told you about the Standard of Ohio, under the operation of the Fleet Wing Corporation, coming into Indiana and selling in the Indiana territory? Or all of these refineries up here in Cody, Laurel Springs and Caspar, coming in and 4199 selling through the western portion of North and South Dakota (indicating)? Were those theories? Those were facts. And when you dub them theories, it is just simply an excuse to get away from the very thing that absolutely is inevitable in this case.

And finally, as the last thing in Swensrud's testimony—and just remember this—he was asked whether or not the rate, the price—the retail price, or the tank car price of gasoline advanced more rapidly in this Mid-Western section during the three months in question here, than it did outside the area; and counsel were going to let him go without answering the question, and you remember what he said. He said, "You asked me a question. I will answer it if you wish." And then he told you that the price, according to the statistics that are kept by the Government and the A. P. I., had advanced faster outside the area during that period than it had within it.

Now, gentlemen, if as a matter of fact the retail price was kept at a high and artificial level, there would have been more gasoline pouring into this territory than 4200 there was. The fact of the matter is that the price was so low that it was not an inviting price, and for that reason you had the very limited quantities coming into Indiana, coming into Michigan, and coming into the Dakotas. The price was not high and unreasonable, as is shown by what I have read to you here with reference to the orders of our own Department of Markets in this State, where they had to raise the price in order to conform to the order.

Now, then, there is one thing about this—this strikes me as being rather peculiar. Here we have in the City of Washington experts of all kinds, on all kinds of subjects. You have your Bureau of Mines, you have your Petroleum Department, under the Secretary of State—

Mr. Orr: Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. Thomas: Under the Secretary of the Interior—and where have you seen one man put on this witness stand to dispute what Swensrud said? Have you seen one witness, whether he be a Government official or employee, or whether he be a private citizen, who has been put on that witness stand to dispute in one iota the testimony of Swensrud?

4201 Why didn't they call in somebody to dispute this testimony that it was impossible to control these prices if they wanted to make that argument, instead of standing up here before the jury and criticizing this man because he is using a theory, and the theory consists of facts and statistics that are taken from government publications and other equally reliable sources?

Now, I want to call your attention, very briefly, to another chart that was used here. This chart shows,—the green line showing the price that prevailed in the Mid-Continent area. The black line shows the price that prevailed in those cities, some twenty-five or forty of them, that were selected for the purpose of making the comparison, and that were outside of the area.

This, as far as I am pointing (indicating) is the year 1934, represented by months. Here (indicating) we find, in 1934, the green line is below the black line.

You will note on January 1st, 1934, the green line representing the price prevailing in the Mid-Continent area is lower than that prevailing outside in the cities selected for the comparison; and then it advances; then gradually recedes until finally we get to September, 1934. The price recedes. I told you a few minutes ago that, on September 11th, the posted price dropped one point and six 4202 tenths. At the same time the price in the area outside dropped and kept on dropping, until it reached that point (indicating).

Then the retail price goes steadily down, both inside and outside of the territory, until it reaches this point (indicating) about October or November of 1935.

And then notice: the price outside of the territory starts to rise, at about that date. The price inside the territory continues to go down, until it gets down to about,—you can figure that as well as I can—perhaps ten and three-quarters cents, something like that. That is in November of 1934.

Now, I want to call to your attention particularly, you will notice it reached its low point in November 1934. Then it proceeds with a price rise, with some variations up and down. It keeps on going up, and the general trend is up, up, until you get into May of 1935,—June, 1935. So your price rise, gentlemen, instead of starting on the first day of March, really started here (indicating), back in November.

Now then, note this: throughout this period, and commencing at about this date (indicating) the retail price in the territory, with some trivial exceptions, was lower than the retail price in the cities outside of the area. I 4203 bring that to your attention because it is a very important matter and it deals with this question of retail prices, which they charge us in the indictment with having conspired to increase.

Now, I want to take up with you again another phase of this secrecy business. This P. A. B. Board was rather an informal sort of organization; it kept no minutes. Each one of the members was given a specific field of activity and required to report to the chairman, and the chairman reported to the Secretary of the Interior, Fahy and Frey, Fahy being a Deputy Administrator, mind you, possessed with powers which will be discussed by my associate, Col.

Donovan. Whatever their powers may be, we quote the language of his Honor, Judge Stone, when this matter was before him and the question arose with reference to our right to rely on what the P. A. B. Board's members told us.

Mr. Chaffetz: Was that something said in the presence of the jury?

Mr. Thomas: I presume so, I don't know.

Mr. Chaffetz: That is important.

Mr. Thomas: Anyway, if I may be privileged to take the Court's language as my own, anyhow—

Mr. Chaffetz: No. Just a minute. Counsel purports to quote the Court. I think he is quoting some language used outside of the presence of the jury. We are not sure you would have used it if the jury were present, in argument. 4204

Mr. Thomas: We will submit that now. I will make it my own language.

Mr. Chaffetz: Oh, yes, after telling the jury—go ahead, after telling the jury—

The Court: I think you ought to refrain from discussing anything that was said outside of the presence of the jury.

Mr. Thomas: I don't know whether it was said in the presence of the jury, your Honor.

Mr. Chaffetz: I think you should know.

Mr. Thomas: Well, anyway, here we have Dr. Frey, and Fahy, who is a lawyer and Chairman of the Commission, and the Deputy Commissioner in charge. They are sent out here to deal with these oil men. These oil men come in here and tell them this or that, or they are told this or they are told that, and now, after three years have come and gone they are brought in here on an indictment and asked to respond to a criminal charge of conspiracy.

I say that this point is important: if these men 4205 were engaged in a conspiracy to violate the laws of United States, have you any idea that a man of the competency of Mr. Arnott would be in there on the 12th day of March telling Mr. Fahy, Dr. Frey, and Mr. Swanson, of the P. A. B. Board that he had established this tank car stabilization committee that was operating out here in the Mid-Continent field? Is that what criminals do,—go right to the P. A. B. Board and tell three of them that he had appointed this tank car stabilization committee and tell them too what he intended to have them do? Not only that, but again, on the 8th day of May, if my remembrance of the date is correct, they had another conversation, when this question of moratorium was up.

And on that date the P. A. B. Board was again notified—I don't say notified—they were told, just what they were doing out there in the Mid-Continent field.

Now, counsel will urge, well, they didn't tell them this and they didn't tell them that; they left out this particular or they left out the other. You heard this testimony. They told them enough so that they knew—so that they knew, what was being done. Why, Dr. Frey testified that he knew about the tank car committee activities a month before March 12th, 1935.

4206 But counsel say Mr. Arnott didn't get approval. And the testimony of Dr. Frey was that Arnott didn't ask for their blessing. Of course, Arnott didn't. He tells you on the witness stand it never occurred to him, and it never occurred to the members of the P. A. B. Board that he ought to have one. All that was necessary was to have stepped into the Secretary's office and gotten a written order. Now that is the situation.

While Arnott didn't ask for their blessing, you will note that none of them ever told him or intimated to him that he should stop.

Arnott testified as follows:

> "Question: Would you at that time have discontinued these activities had you believed that Dr. Frey or the Petroleum Administrative Board disapproved of them?
>
> "Mr. Chaffetz: That is the same question exactly.
>
> "The Court: Well, he may answer that.
>
> "Answer: I would have.
>
> "Mr. Donovan: Question: Would you at that time have discontinued those activities had Dr. Frey or the Petroleum Administrative Board told you to do so?
>
> 4207 "Mr. Lewin: Now, we object to that on the same ground.
>
> "The Court: He may answer that.
>
> "Mr. Arnott: I would have so discontinued."

Frey said they didn't tell him to stop. Arnott said they didn't tell him to stop. If there is any question about this, gentlemen, where is Fahy, the chairman of this board and the deputy administrator? Have you seen him on the stand? He is an attorney for some labor board,—some governmental body down there in Washington. Why didn't they call him in here and have him dispute Arnott? Why didn't they call him in here if Dr. Frey isn't telling you the truth? Oh, they offer no evidence in contradiction of it. The man goes on and he does this work, working with Dr. Frey, telling him what he is doing, and then after he has done it, they indict him.

Now, counsel would have you believe that the reason was because these government officials, like Dr. Frey, and the rest of them were what he calls minutiae, or nit-wits, or tiddle-de-winks.

Mr. Brazeau: Mice.

Mr. Thomas: Mice. I don't believe that this jury thinks that Dr. Frey, a man who was educated here in the University of Wisconsin,—a professor here—is 4208 quite entitled to that classification. In fact, these men were selected for those positions. They were appointed there by the President of the United States. They were paid out of the United States Treasury. They were the ones that these oil men had to deal with. They were the ones from whom they took their orders and suggestions. They knew what these men were doing. They worked with them. And now, as I say, they are indicted.

Now, you have got to agree to one of two things: either these men, such as Dr. Frey and Fahy, and others, acted in good faith, or they didn't think that there was anything in this program that was violative of the law; or else you have to take the other position that they winked at it. I wouldn't say or make any such charge against these government officials.

I think they thought, the same as we thought, and the same as we think today, that this buying that was done by these major companies was legal and lawful and not contrary to the Sherman law, and that is why they worked with us, and that is why they approved of it.

4209 I can't believe that these men would hide behind any such excuse as I heard here from Government counsel on one occasion. When he was arguing, he said: "I am a Government official. Somebody comes into my office and tells me what he is doing. But he says, 'Now, I am just telling you. I am not asking for any sanction. I don't want any.' I do nothing about it; I am clear. I didn't give any approval. I didn't say he could do it. I tell him that if he is doing it, he is doing it on his own responsibility."

I don't know. Maybe that is the situation in official Washington, but it isn't the situation with our officials here in the state of Wisconsin.

If I go to the prosecutor's office, and I tell him that I am doing this, that, or the other thing, do you think he has got any right to wrap the cloak of his official righteousness about him and say, "I am clear; I am clear." Oh, no! Fair play demands that he should tell you—should tell me, rather, "Here, Thomas, you are violating the law. I want to tell you that you are going wrong." That is what any official would tell you, if he believed you were violating the law.

Now, here is another one. Mr. Lewin spent considerable time on the letter of April 2nd, that was sent to Mr. Arnott dealing with moratoria, and he told you that 4210 Mr. Arnott was warned.

Now, I am going to call your attention to Exhibit 923, which is a certified copy of a press release dated May 7, 1935—you remember this letter that Mr. Lewin called your attention to was dated April 2nd. Now, this is May 7th, more than a month later. Here is the press release that was put out by the Secretary of the Interior, himself, or through his Department. Here is what he says:

"United States Department of the Interior
"Petroleum Administrative Board
"Memorandum for the Press
"For Release, Tuesday, May 7, 1935.

"When the Petroleum Code Survey Committee on Small Enterprise submitted its report to Petroleum Administrator Harold L. Ickes, it included among its recommendations the statement that if wholesale gasoline prices—"

Wholesale gasoline prices!

"—did not advance to an approximate parity with crude prices within about thirty days, an immediate reduction should be made in the price of crude oil to a parity with refined products.

"Approximately thirty days after the submission of the Committee's report, the Petroleum Adminis-4211 trative Board requested an informal opinion from the Committee, asking its views as to whether gasoline prices had advanced to an approximate parity with crude prices, so as to obviate any present necessity for the reduction in crude oil prices as recommended in the refining conclusions and recommendations contained in the report.

"Mr. Paul Blazer, Chairman of the Committee, replied that he was glad to advise that the informal opinion of his Committee was that there now is no need for a reduction in crude oil prices, but emphasized that the Committee, in reaching its informal conclusion, anticipated that small additional > advances will be made in both tank car and retail prices of gasoline. The majority of the Committee, he stated, is of the opinion that at least another quarter cent advance in tank car prices is essential—"

Another quarter of a cent advance in tank car prices is essential! That was May 7, 1935.

> "—and that if such an advance should not occur within the near future, a decline of approximately five cents per barrel should be made in crude oil prices.
>
> "The Committee also is of the opinion, Mr. Blazer stated, that the final answer to the question as to the maintenance of a parity between gasoline and crude oil prices, after it has been reached, will be determined by the effectiveness of efforts to balance crude oil supply and demand. 4212
>
> "Mr. Blazer also expresses the Committee's belief that fundamental conditions in the industry have been sufficiently improved to bring about and maintain prices for finished products which will justify dollar crude oil."

Now, that is the language of the press release from the Department of the Interior.

I want to call your attention to another document, Exhibit No. 975. I can read it better here than I can out there. Just a letter from Mr. Fahy, president of the Petroleum Administrative Board, for the Administrator. It is written a day after the Schechter decision. It is addressed to C. E. Arnott, 26 Broadway, New York City:

> "In view of the Supreme Court decision holding codes invalid authority of Administrator of Petroleum Code to you and those with you in stabilization matters—"

Could there be any clearer definition of it?

> "—is suspended, and until further word all such activities must be on purely voluntary basis without any sanction from Administrator."

Had they had a sanction before? Is that what he means? Had they already sanctioned it? Had they 4213 sanctioned it?

They worked with these men, and now the position of the Government is a good deal like the fellows who volunteered to help out in putting out the fire. They worked under the eyes of the fire chief, and under the eyes of his deputies, and after they got the fire put out, the city attorney said, "Well, boys, now, it is just too bad, I have got to arrest you because you worked on this fire without a permit from the fire chief."

It is about as similar a situation, and that is the position that they are driven to.

I call your attention to another letter. Now, is this a letter of a man in the position of Fahy to a man who has violated the law of his country? It is dated June 3, 1935:

"Mr. C. E. Arnott
"26 Broadway,
"New York City.
"My dear Mr. Arnott:

"I wish to acknowledge your recent letters concerning stabilization work in the South. As I have already advised you, our participation in stabilization work terminated with the Supreme Court decision. In consequence there are no further comments that I can make at this time.

4214 "I want to take this opportunity, however, to express my cordial appreciation of the work that you have done in promoting the purposes of the National Industrial Recovery Act. Every evidence indicates that the general situation is better than it has been for some years. It is my hope that the results which have been achieved will be maintained.

"Yours sincerely, Charles Fahy, Chairman."

And there are some other things I want to call your attention to with reference to whether or not this alleged conspiracy has any of the earmarks that go with a conspiracy to violate the law.

Mr. Crawford truthfully said when men conspire to violate the law, they do it in the dark, and they do it secretly.

Now, as to the purpose of these men to violate the Sherman law, do you suppose that the McDowell committee would have been appointed during the meeting of January 4th and their names would have been recorded with the P. and C. Committee where they would be open to investigation by the Government at any time? If the purpose was criminal, would Arnott have appeared before the allocation meeting in Washington, in March, 1935, with visitors present, mind you, according to the 4215 record, and tell those present what he had done in the Mid-Continent and likewise in East Texas, and had insisted on Buckley speaking to the group?

There they were, meeting in the City of Washington!

Visitors present! And Arnott, the arch-conspirator, the master-mind, talking to that group and telling them what he had been doing up here in the Mid-Continent, telling them what he was doing in East Texas, and having Buckley there to address them!

You know, when I listened to that testimony, I was reminded of a story concerning head-on collision on a railroad. They had a track walker, who had seen the collision between a passenger train and a freight train. They were having an inquest after the accident, and they asked this track walker what he saw, and he said he saw a passenger train coming and a freight train coming. They said, "Did you flag down the freight train?" "No," he said, "I didn't." "Well, why didn't you? What were you doing?" He said, "I was just thinking that it was a hell of a way to run a railroad."

I was just thinking that about the conspiracy. Why not give Mr. Arnott credit for having ordinary intelligence? And here he goes down there to an allocation meeting with all these people present, all these visitors, and he goes in there and he tells them all about it, and 4216 yet the Government says that that man had a criminal purpose and those associating with him had a criminal purpose. It just don't make sense!

So, as I have commented, if there was a criminal purpose, would he have gone to the P. A. B. board and discussed this matter with them? If this was a criminal purpose, have you any idea that McDowell would have been paid his expenses out of this P. and C. fund, that Jacobi would have been paid his expenses out of the P. and C. fund so as to leave on the records there where the Department of Justice or anybody else could get hold of it, the fact that these men who had been connected with this were paid? The very fact that they were paid in that way shows the good intentions and the good faith of these men in what they did and the belief that they had that what they were doing, was in accordance with the law.

Now, another thing: Counsel stood here before you and read these letters by the hour. I don't know what impression they created on your mind, but as you read them over, these things strike you as funny.

Here is a group of men engaged in a conspiracy to violate the Sherman law, as they claim. Here is every—practically everybody all the way around through the field in the various departments, such as the selling departments, the buying departments, and fellows who had 4217 never had any connection with these matters or never had anything to do with them, they are writing them letters. Have you any idea that if these men were engaged in a criminal conspiracy, that they would have imparted all that information to all those underlings that are working down in the various departments of the business?

Is that the way it is done, so as to leave those records in the files of the corporation to have them all ready to bring into court at the subpoena of the United States Government to furnish the evidence to convict themselves?

Is that reasonable? Apply the test of reasonableness to it. Do you think that men do that? It simply goes to emphasize the fact that these men believed that what they were doing was within the law, that they were doing it at the behest of the Government.

As I told you this morning, these men are not to be found guilty because of what somebody wrote, if somebody wrote a letter that never came to their attention at all until it was produced here in this trial. These men are not to be convicted on that, but for what they did; that is, to produce letters by some subordinate and say that that is the act of somebody else when somebody else didn't do the act.

Now, then, about those letters, it struck me as 4218 rather inconsistent. We are charged with a conspiracy in raising and maintaining a high price in the tank car market for gasoline. Well, now, then, after all, if on every car they bought, there was going to be a rise in the price, why have all this cry among these buyers and so forth about their quota or their allotment or whatever it was?

I would naturally think and so would you, wouldn't you, if the price was going up, nobody would complain about having to take it—take all they could get. At least, it would look to me as rather a good business proposition.

I have already mentioned the fact that these meetings were published in the press, notice given to the world, and yet they say that is consistent with conspiracy. You saw one thing here with Mr. Arnott on the stand. Do you remember that Friday morning? He was on the stand from the time Court convened until the morning recess, and Mr. Chaffetz stood up there at the desk and he was pounding on the desk and shrieking it on. It is a very difficult position to put a witness in, but there wasn't an objection from the defense, if you noticed, and in spite of the desk pounding, in spite of the shrieking at Mr. Arnott. Did he admit criminality? No!

4219 Because there was no criminality to admit!

Now, with reference to some of these witnesses on cross-examination, you have heard the long, involved questions that were put to them. I will give you a sample of one of them taken from the record. I think it was asked of—anyway, here is the question:

> "So that if that—"

Another assumption—

> "So that if that was the policy of the Standard of Indiana, and if the Standard of Indiana did fix the retail prices as price leader, then if the spot market prices remained uniform during that period, you would expect the retail prices generally to remain uniform similarly, wouldn't you?"

Mr. Donovan suggests that there are three "ifs" in that question.

Now, that was a type of cross-examination. Is it just? Why, that is on this same theory. You know, if you will assume that Mr. Brazeau's aunt was a male, instead of a female, naturally she would be his uncle. Isn't that so (addressing Mr. Brazeau)?

Mr. Brazeau: A correct assumption.

4220 Mr. Thomas: Now, if you put those assumptions in, put them in those questions, just what kind of an answer will you get? And so you find it throughout these examinations.

Now, I want to call your attention briefly to this, another statement of Mr. Crawford's:

> "Gentlemen of the jury, from the beginning when it was found advisable and necessary in the interest of the common people and the protection of the people that something be done about it, as the evidence will show, when the Bureau of Investigation started out they faced a long, long, weary, crooked road to get at some of the facts."

Now, it was a long, long, weary, crooked road. If they had read the newspapers they could have found out about it if they wanted to know. If the department of investigation wanted to know about it they might have heard it from the P. and C. files, and the P. A. B. files. There would have been a good start for you. A long, long, crooked trail, blazoned openly in the public press; anybody could read it who was so inclined. If these men wanted to—I just make a suggestion to them that the next time, if there is a next time—

(Mr. Crawford spoke to Mr. Thomas out of the hearing of the reporter.)

4221 Mr. Thomas: Well, just because you were so wild in those statements you made to the jury.

Mr. Crawford: All right.

Mr. Thomas: Now, I want to call attention to this effort that was made in the last few hours of this trial, and the testimony that was put in.

You remember Mr. Miller, the government witness and accountant being on the stand. Some of his mistakes were shown to the jury, a great number of them in fact, and when those mistakes were shown to them did he make any attempt to correct them? Not in the least. And when they were finally brought before the jury and explained, there was no attempt on his part to deny it in any way.

One thing that I thought was a little unfair in the last minutes of the trial, to try to leave the impression with the jury that the Globe Companies were buying gasoline at one price and then selling it at a lesser price up here in the Mid-Continent territory; and as the figures were read off it sounded as though they were buying this distress gasoline for say ten dollars or twenty dollars a car less than it was sold for—or more than it was sold for.

Now, what is the fact? When we got to the facts in regard to it the difference was what went to the jobber in order to make up his commission on his guaranteed margin.

Now, I want to take up the testimony of Vaughn, 4222 one of the witnesses called about five o'clock the night this case closed. Now, in this connection, gentlemen of the jury, the government knew of this testimony eighteen months ago. Now, I call your attention to his testimony.

He said he had no connection with any major company. Now, presumably Mr. Meece knew that, yet nevertheless he came in here to testify, and he had not been on the stand over two minutes until Mr. Chaffetz asked him about a transaction on the eighteenth of September, 1935. The first thing the witness said, "Well, have you got any records, or have you got some papers of some kind?"

Mr. Chaffetz says to him, "Now, here; now, you tell me what you told me in my office last night," or words in substance like that; and then he proceeded to tell him, and he told us the story, how he had sold gasoline to Meece.

He said at first Meece wanted to buy fifty cars, the amount he had on hand, but he would not sell the fifty cars because of other commitments. Then he said he sold twenty cars to Meece. He told him he had to call up the refiner from whom he bought those twenty cars of gasoline, and that he went to Meece's office, and that Meece called in his stenographer and told the stenographer, or secretary, to get St. Louis, the Shell Company, on the long distance; that shortly after the telephone rang and this conversation occurred between Vaughn and 4223 whoever was on the other end of the line.

Mr. Brazeau: Meece.

Mr. Thomas: Or between Meece and whoever was on the other end of the line.

Now, the conversation was in substance this: There had been some arrangement made by Meece with Keith Fanshier for the purpose of having this sale reported as a jobber sale. That was the substance of it.

Now, right at the outset that does not seem very reasonable, does it? If Meece was a party to a conspiracy, here is a man comes in, known to have no connection with any major company, sitting across the table from him, and Meece unburdens himself the way this witness testified to. Is that the way those things usually happen?

If they had this testimony from Vaughn as against Keith Fanshier, one of the defendants in this case who is not on trial at this time, or against the Chicago Journal of Commerce, why wasn't it brought out in the open before five o'clock on the last afternoon of the trial? Why was it they did not bring that out, instead of coming in here and voluntarily dismissing as against the Chicago Journal of Commerce?

Now, I want to call your attention to this testimony, record page 1863.

4224 "But on the 26th of the month—this purchase was made on the 18th, and on the 26th of the month I got the first, the invoices for the first shipments that were made. And up to this time, I don't think that anybody knew where the gasoline was coming from. But when they received the invoices, naturally they did—

"Mr. Chaffetz: Q. You mean the Globe Company found out for the first time on September 26th, when they got the invoice, where the gasoline was coming from?

"A. Yes, they did. Then they cancelled—eleven cars had been shipped up to that time, and they cancelled the balance of the instructions for the reason, as they put it in their excuse for cancelling, that they were not shipping as per schedule."

"Q. Where was it to be shipped from, what refinery?

"A. Nothing said about what refinery. I might have notified them after I had made the purchase, but I made a new purchase to cover this twenty cars."

Now, gentlemen of the jury, I want to show you the purchase order, and I ask you if it is true that they did not know where this gasoline was coming from. 4225 (Showing exhibit to jurors.) Imperial Refining Company, Wickett, Texas, U. S. Motor Gasoline, September 18, 1935 (showing exhibit to other jurors).

September 18, 1935, Imperial Refining Company, Wickett, Texas, U. S. Motor Gasoline (showing exhibit to other jurors).

I show you the date, September 18, 1935, Imperial Refining Company, Wickett, Texas, U. S. Motor Gasoline; there is the date and the name of the company (showing exhibit to other jurors).

Now, gentlemen, I won't take the time to read these letters, but you remember the reason that was given, the cause of the cancellation was not that which the witness gave, but it was because of the fact that they had given him phony car numbers and that the shipments had not come through to the customers to whom they were ordered shipped.

Now, then, did any such conversation take place on the 18th of September as this witness testified?

You will remember that due to the lateness of the hour we were unable to present to you and to the Court at that time the telephone bills relating to this supposed telephone conversation with St. Louis. We did present to you and to the Court a telegram which we received from the office of the Globe Company, wherein it was stated:

"Examination Chicago office telephone bill for 4226 September nineteen thirty-five discloses there were no long distance telephone calls to St. Louis, Missouri, on September seventeen, eighteen or nineteen, nineteen thirty-five. Sending original telephone > bill for September nineteen thirty-five air mail tonight. Should arrive Madison two fifty-five Friday. R. E. Everitt."

Since that time we have received—and I think it was the last exhibit that was put in this case—we have here the letter paying the bill for September, and we have here the telephone bills that were issued by the telephone company, and you gentlemen can take them to your jury room, look at September 17, 18 and 19, and you will find absolutely no notation of any long distance telephone calls to St. Louis.

Now, finally when this telegram came in Mr. Chaffetz made this statement:

> "Well, perhaps it was a reverse call, so it would not appear on the telephone bill."

If it was a reverse call why didn't he ask the man that testified with regard to it? According to the witness's testimony, he called his secretary and told her to get St. Louis. Now, why didn't he testify that he told his secretary to get St. Louis and reverse the call?

And then finally he makes the suggestion that probably he was not talking to St. Louis at all, but to some-4227 body in Chicago.

> Mr. Chaffetz: Mr. Thomas, you probably have forgotten the testimony. The witness testified the first time the thing was suggested to him said he did not know whether it was St. Louis or Chicago. It was not suggested at all. It was his own testimony.
>
> Mr. Thomas: Sure. I do not profess to remember every item of testimony.
>
> Mr. Chaffetz: No.
>
> Mr. Thomas: I do not think there is any lawyer can remember it all. I am telling you what I think the testimony is.
>
> Mr. Chaffetz: I do not think you are doing it deliberately, but I thought you would like to know what the testimony was.

Mr. Thomas: Then the suggestion was made that the name Loudi—the witness said it sounded like Loudi or Lowery, probably it was somebody in the Chicago office, and then we got the name of the fellows in the Chicago office from Meece, and they didn't sound any more like Loudi or Lowery than McCarthy sounds like Levinsky. So much for that.

Now, then, gentlemen of the jury, I have burdened you for a long time with what I have had to say. There are one or two other things I want to say to you.

4228 I believe you are going to decide this case on the evidence. I do not think you care whether Arnott had six, ten or eleven hundred jobbers and retailers, and so forth, in conference in the Marble Room in the Blackstone Hotel, or whether it was in some town hall. That hasn't got anything to do with the evidence against my client. I do not think you are going to convict Mr. Arnott because he has been a successful man, and because he is able to earn a salary. I do not see what that has got to do with whether he violated the Sherman law. Do you?

I do not see in what way we are interested as to whether these men are oil barons or whether they are not. It would be an interesting thing to you if you knew where these men came from, if you knew how they have worked up in their positions, from humble positions to positions of importance. You heard Mr. Arnott's testimony here that he had a high school education and went into business.

I do not think you are going to be persuaded to a verdict of guilty against these men or against these corporations because of any Ethiopian philosophy that counsel received in some bathhouse. I do not think you are going to find a verdict of guilty because these corporations are large.

We knew before you took your oath that you would decide this case fairly on the evidence and instructions of 4229 the Court.

I do not think you are interested in these prejudicial assertions that we have got a hundred lawyers here. Why all there is to this lawyer business is the gag that is always used in the trial of a case.

I am paid by the defendants to come here and represent them, and so are the other lawyers; and the government counsel are paid by the United States government to come here and represent the government.

Is there any difference between us? We are both paid by those whom we represent.

4230 I don't think that you are going to be prejudiced with these statements, such as were made here, that Dr. Frey was excluded from the meeting of the Texas refiners in Chicago. The fact was that they had a lot of these hot oilers in there, and they were talking; and Dr. Frey agreed with Mr. Arnott, after knowing the facts, that probably they could get further without him in there than they could with him there.

I don't think any inference can be drawn, such as Mr. Lewin has drawn here to the prejudice of these defendants, with reference to his golden stairs. Now, in that respect, let me call your attention to this:

The price of gasoline, according to the Oilgram, decreased from three and seven-eighths cents low, four cents high, on January 2nd, 1935, to three and a quarter low, three and a half high, on February 2nd, 1935; and remained at that price until after the Federal Tender Board commenced operations on March 1st, 1935.

Now, Mr. Lewin in cross-examining Mr. McDowell, pointed out that an increase of one cent in 1935 and 1936 would mean a difference of $4,000,000 to the Mid-Continent Company. And so you keep multiplying that by companies, until you finally get some large, aggregate amount.

Now, just remember this: With gasoline two cents 4231 below parity, as it was at that time, instead of a profit of $4,000,000 to the Mid-Continent Company if there was that increase in the price of one cent, that simply meant that the Mid-Continent Company was losing $4,000,000 less money over the year. When you added the one cent to it, to the prevailing price, you hadn't got it up anywheres near parity then. Instead of a profit, it was simply the fact that the loss was decreased.

And so, if you will examine the records here, and the charts, you will find that in March, 1933, when Mr. Lewin claims this march up the golden stairs started, they were manufacturing gasoline and selling it on the market at approximately two cents below the parity that was established by the United States Government. So that, if they increased the price, or if they increased the price one cent, or if they increased it two cents, they weren't up to parity then. It simply meant that they were cutting down their losses. And I ask you, where crude had been stabilized at one dollar, and later on at $1.10 as a part of this program, was it anything more than the program contemplated that crude and gasoline was to be placed on a parity? It is rather a fanciful figure, these golden stairs. But Mr. Lewin has an entirely wrong conception. I can readily see 4232 how that might come about. He knew nothing about adversity, such as you knew. He was a Government employee. And I can readily see how Mr. Lewin, in the circumstances in which he was placed, with a Government salary check coming to him regularly each month, without having to put up with the things that you and I and every one of us had to meet—I can readily see how he might mistake the stairs from the cellar of bankruptcy and depression for the golden stairs that he has been talking about.

And we find now that these golden stairs have developed into a ladder of roses, was it—and a plateau of love—which probably might be excusable under the existing circumstances.

Now, then, gentlemen of the jury, when he is talking about that matter, he assumes that any rise in price in the tank car market is due solely and entirely to buying by the major companies—with the knowledge and the sanction, apparently, of the Federal Government through the Department of the Interior. The effect of the Connally Act is discounted. The effect of allocations is discounted, whereby the Government sought to bring about the very condition that was brought about, the stabilization of the price that occurred after June. All these elements 4233 that contributed to that price rise are left out of consideration.

And there is a peculiar thing in this case. I don't know whether you noticed it or not, but when two of the Government counsel made their opening statement to this jury, four months ago, did you hear any mention of the Connally Act?

The Connally Act was passed for the express purpose of making it possible to stabilize the market. And when you come to deliberate on this question, as to the guilt or innocence of these defendants, you must determine whether or not the effect of the Connally Act was to stabilize these prices in the wholesale market. You must determine the effect of the allocations which were in force by the states. You must determine the effect of the unprecedented demand. You must determine the effect of the allocations, whereby the majors were forced to buy gasoline, that being the policy of the allocators. All of those things must be determined. And, after you have weighed all this evidence, you must then answer the question whether or not those things accounted for this rise in price, which had started, as I pointed out to you, before any buying took place; there having been a rise, of 4234 about a half a cent between the first and the 8th of March, when the first purchase was made.

Now, finally, I want to say this to you: I will be followed by my associate, Colonel Donovan. I have tried to show you what some of the facts, the pertinent facts here, are. He will be followed by Government counsel. We will have no opportunity to reply. And it is for you to determine as to the correctness of the contentions that may be made at that time. There is no chance for us to make any further arguments after Government counsel has closed the case.

And, in closing my address to you gentlemen, I want to read you the letter from Harold L. Ickes, signed "Administrator," dated July 25, 1935, addressed to C. E. Arnott:

> "My dear Mr. Arnott:
>
> "The Planning and Coordination Committee, which was appointed and served under the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, engaged with me for nearly two years in the most earnest effort of both industrial and Governmental action perhaps ever undertaken. For the purpose of furthering national recovery, we entered upon 4235 this work at a time of great stress within the petroleum industry and generally throughout all industries.
>
> "Through the invalidation of the Code, your activities with the Committee now have been brought to a close; and my own as Administrator have become limited under the amended National Industrial Recovery Act, to research and review, with such advisory assistance as may be useful to state authorities, to the industry, and to the Government.
>
> "In the organizations formed to assist in administering the Code were numerous and important committees and employees, who contributed to the real progress made during the Code period in the diminution of unfair competitive practices, the balancing of crude oil supply with demand, the increase in employment and wages, the orderly operation of petroleum refineries, and the systematic development of new fields.
>
> "I desire to express the appreciation of the Government for your long and often arduous service on the Committee, and, through you, to the many individuals who worked with you. I do this with 4236 the conviction, which I believe most of the Committee share, that the work was well worth while, and went a long way in the accomplishment of the purposes of the Code and the National Industrial Recovery Act.
>
> "Sincerely yours,
> "Harold L. Ickes,
> "Administrator."

Now, if Mr. Arnott and those associated with him in this Code work were nothing more nor less than criminals, who had violated the Sherman Law, would the Secretary of the Interior be writing this letter to them, to Mr. Arnott, as late as July 25, 1935?

The Court: We will take a recess at this time.

(Thereupon, at 3:30 o'clock p.m., a recess was taken.)

4237 Thereafter, on January 19 and 20, 1938, Mr. William J. Donovan made the final closing argument to the jury on behalf of the defendants. Such closing argument is as follows:

4238 ARGUMENT.

By Mr. Donovan.

Mr. Donovan: May it please the Court,—gentlemen of the jury:

I have been here before you now for something over three months. Unlike the gentlemen at this table (referring to government counsel) I have no badge of authority; and unlike Mr. Thomas and Mr. Brazeau, I am utterly unknown to you. I am in reality a stranger here and I am what Mr. Thomas has called "a hired lawyer," to come and present this case of these clients whom I represent. You have got to look at me that way and recognize that I am trying to plead a cause; and I expect you to judge me that way.

I recognize that you gentlemen are men with a sense of duty. If you were not, in the face of the warning of the Court that you would be here for many weeks, you would never have consented to serve. You have been here a long time. You have been patient and you have been attentive.

Mr. Brazeau said some very encouraging words about the fairness and the sense of justice of the jurors 4239 of Wisconsin; so I have less hesitancy in appearing before you than I would have otherwise. As I speak to you, however, I must say what I feel, in the courtesy and patience and consideration of Judge Stone toward me.

In the course of these many weeks, gentlemen, I know that I may have appeared to you at times unduly emphatic and unduly aggressive in trying to carry out what I thought was my duty to these men that I represent. And I can understand very readily that my conduct may have excited in you some opposition and some resentment. I would not blame you if it did; although I do say that if you have that feeling, consciously or unconsciously, that you hold it against me alone and not against these defendants whose case I am trying to present to you.

Gentlemen, in every case,—in every criminal case particularly, there is not only a legal side but there is a moral side, and the legal and the moral sides are not always together.

You here are the judges of the facts. You are here, in the final determination of this case, to say who is telling the truth; to say what the ultimate fact is. And no one can come into that room and upset your conscience or your judgment. That is a very important thing. It 4240 puts upon you a very heavy obligation. And it is very encouraging to us in the defense to understand that you are men of conscience; that no matter what the ultimate decision, that you are going to see that these men get a square deal.

And that is the way I am going to talk to you. I am going to address myself, not only to your reason, but to your sense of justice. I am, if I can possibly do so, going to reduce this case to its simplest terms.

Mr. Thomas and Mr. Brazeau have so ably and so completely treated, analyzed and summarized the facts to you that that part of the case with which they have dealt I don't intend to touch upon. But before taking up the more limited part, which now rests with me, I am going to address certain questions to you that I think you will ask yourselves when you go to the jury room. And I think you will ask yourselves, first, this:

In what these men did, was it the moral thing; was it the right thing? Was it the moral thing and was it the right thing for them toward these people that were in this industry; toward the government to which they owed a duty; was it the right thing for them to endeavor to remove the evils and abuses that existed in that industry, so that industry could be restored to health?

4241 When you ask yourselves that question it seems to me you want to ask yourselves the next question: What was the sensible thing to do in this situation? What was the sensible thing from the standpoint of these men, in their position in the industry, as trustees to the stockholders of the companies that they represented,—the sensible thing to do for preserving that industry.

Then, having asked yourself those questions, it seems to me you will want to consider whether what they did was violative of the law. Was it the legal thing to do that they did do?

And in reaching an answer to that question it helps you tremendously in considering what was the moral and what was the sensible thing to do. Because, as I said to you a good many months ago, gentlemen, it is not our position that we were claiming more for ourselves than we really were.

In every one of us, no matter how good or how bad, there is a mixture of motives, and I don't think it is a bad motive that people, besides trying to do a decent thing, were actuated by intelligent self-interest; and I use that expression, I don't know where I got it, whether it was from Mr. Ickes or someone else. But I still use it, because it was never intended by the law to place a 4242 penalty upon the use of intelligence in the conduct of business affairs.

Now, gentlemen, keeping those questions in mind, what are the facts in this case?

We have an indictment to meet. There is a charge by which you must measure our conduct, and by which you must determine whether or not we are guilty or not guilty. And in considering that charge you have to consider too, what is called the presumption of innocence.

That is really a wonderful conception of human beings to have,—presumption of innocence. The law puts its arm around a man accused and says, "This man is innocent until his guilt is established beyond a reasonable doubt." It is pretty hard to define; but I have often thought that the simplest way to define it is much like we used to learn in catechism or Sunday School, about the idea of the guardian angel. That idea is continued under the law, with the protective arm of the law resting upon the shoulder of the accused, even when you go to your deliberations in the jury room. And I know you will keep that in mind; and that is why I am not worried about any of this prejudicial talk, and I am not disturbed in the slightest about these subtle appeals to any feeling of position or of class. Let's keep those principles in mind while I 4243 talk to you.

What is the fundamental charge of this indictment? I have got to make you understand this. It has not been stressed much with you. The prosecution has avoided it. These gentlemen who are counsel for the government here, as pointed out by Mr. Brazeau, have not stressed the allegations of the indictment in their summary to you.

In these closing minutes, before you get a much needed rest this evening, I want to call attention to these specific allegations in the indictment, which as I say, is the fundamental charge which runs throughout that entire indictment, all else of which is simply there to fortify, and buttress, and bulwark it. That charge is this: that these defendants, together with the independent refiners named in the indictment, agreed to fix and maintain the tank car spot market. That applies to East Texas, that applies to Mid-Continent, that applies throughout the indictment. That is the charge, gentlemen, that you have got to consider, and that is the charge that we have had to meet. We have been led off on side issues.

Now, before we can understand that charge, there are two things we have got to get in our heads. I have had to work to get them into my head. And what 4244 are those two things?

The first thing is, what is price-fixing; and the second thing is, what is the spot market?

Well, perhaps you can say what price-fixing is not. And in that respect there is one thing you can be sure of. A transaction that merely influences or affects the price is not price-fixing. When you come to a question of price-fixing there are two things that must take place. First, there must be an agreement upon a specific price; and second, there must be an agreement to stick to that price.

So, in dealing with the question of price-fixing, in this spot market, there must have been an agreement as to the specific price which would be maintained and stuck to.

Now let us see then, what is the spot market? You have heard a great deal of talk of the spot market. I thought, when I first heard of the spot market that it must be some building, where a group of traders met, one with another, and carried on their transactions together. And when I heard that was not so, I thought the spot market must be some square, in some place down in the oil fields, where you find a lot of tank cars, and you would find places where people would 4245 transact their business with one another. Now, you and I have learned through this trial that is not so; that there is no building; there is no square; there is no exchange, like the Corn Exchange, or Produce Exchange. That it is nothing but this,—that it is the territory or area where refiners sell at wholesale, in tank car lots, for prompt shipment.

Territory or area, where refiners sell at wholesale, in tank car lots, for prompt shipment.

Now, we have learned too that anyone can go and buy in that spot market. You and I can go in there and buy a tank car, but, the important thing is, who are the sellers in that market.

We learn from paragraph 13 of the indictment, virtually the only sellers in the tank car market are the independent refiners. See if I am not right about that. Let me read it. On page thirteen, paragraph thirteen.

> "Defendant major oil companies do not sell any substantial part of their gasoline to jobbers or brokers in tank car quantities in spot transactions. Virtually all gasoline sold in tank car quantities in spot transactions in the aforesaid Mid-Western area is sold by independent refiners."

4246 So, then, the spot market is the place where independent refiners sell at wholesale, in tank car lots, for prompt shipment. Now, that is what we have got to deal with.

Now, who are the purchasers generally in that market? Well, we have learned now from these charts that from ten to seventeen per cent only is bought by these defendant companies in the spot market. So, then, somewhere between eighty-four or eighty-five and ninety per cent, depending upon where it may be, is sold in the spot market to others than these defendants. Now, that is important to remember.

So then, any charge of price fixing in the spot market comes to this: That it is the price fixed at which independent refiners will sell to customers, such as jobbers and brokers, in the tank car market—not the ten or twelve or seventeen per cent that these defendants might buy, but the price fixed between these defendants and the independents, at which the independents will sell to the other customers, to the jobbers and the brokers. Now, that is the charge, gentlemen.

Now, I ask you, where there is any support for that charge throughout this entire record? That is to say, that the price at which independents sold to the jobbers and brokers was a price dictated by these defend-4247 ants. Let's look at the record. No witness has testified to that. No exhibit refers to it. No rumor or suspicion in all of these letters even suggests it.

Now, counsel for the Government recognize that fact. On Monday, Mr. Lewin made a very long and comprehensive argument. And I think that it is fair to say that his argument comes in corroboration of the assertion I now make, because, throughout that argument, he no longer said, as has been so frequently said during these months of trial, that this was a price-fixing arrangement. His statement the other day was that what we did affected the price. And then he said to you gentlemen, "And if that affects the price one iota, it is a violation of the law."

I say this to you, gentlemen: That is not only an incorrect statement of the law, but it just isn't good sense, because if every transaction was a violation of the law, then you and I and all of us would be violating the law every day, because every transaction affects price, and every sale affects price.

Now, gentlemen, at this point it might be well for us to keep in mind that it is the obligation of these gentlemen representing the Government to prove their case—not for us to show our innocence. It is the obligation of these men to establish to the satisfaction of your 4248 minds beyond a reasonable doubt that we are guilty of the charge that they set forth in this indictment.
And there is a complete failure of proof in that respect. And, more than that, gentlemen, more than that, we have demonstrated that that spot market is a free and open market; that we did not interfere in any respect with the negotiations or transactions between these independents and their customers, the jobbers and the brokers. Now, let's see if I am not right about that.

I wonder if we could just look at Exhibit 1024?

(Exhibit 1024 is displayed before the jury:)

Now, gentlemen, that chart, 1024, as you have heard here, represents a great deal of effort, a great deal of labor, a great deal of care, and a great deal of intelligence. It takes thousands of transactions, and puts it on a piece of paper so you can see what it means. It is unfortunate that, before these gentlemen at the other table found this indictment and brought this case here, that they didn't do the same thing. If they had, gentlemen, the case wouldn't be here, because that discloses the truth.

And you see from that chart, gentlemen, that the prices charged to jobbers and consumers on very, very many days, and substantially on all days, differed from 4249 the price charged to defendant major oil companies.

So that, upon its face, gentlemen, it is clearly disclosed, clearly disclosed that the prices fixed or dictated by the independent oil companies to these jobbers and consumers was not participated in by the major oil companies.

Now, added to that whole question is the charge that the prices were uniform, they were high, and they were arbitrary.

Well, "high and arbitrary", we have got to consider that as against some standard of comparison. "High and arbitrary", compared to what?

High and arbitrary, compared to neighboring cities, or neighboring states? That is one way of measuring it. Well, we have had some testimony on that, and Mr. Thomas has just taken the chart and shown you by careful tracing that during this period the prices within this Indiana territory were lower than the prices in neighboring states.

Now, you heard the testimony of Mr. Swensrud. Mr. Lewin referred to that testimony as testimony of chicanery. Well, I, myself, thought him a pretty decent fellow. I thought he was a bright fellow, and I certainly thought he was an honest fellow, who wanted to tell the whole truth. And he testified, under the questioning of 4250 Mr. Chaffetz, that at this period, at this period, the prices within this territory were lower than the prices outside this territory.

Gentlemen, if you are going to get a conspiracy to raise prices, certainly you have got to do somewhat better than that, because the prices here in point of fact were not higher than in the neighboring territory.

Does it mean that the prices were higher than people, other people buying within that area paid?

Well, let's look at that Exhibit 1024. Look at the lower line. Either take your third grade or take your regular, I don't care which. Look at the prices paid by defendant major oil companies. Look at the prices paid by jobbers and consumers. Do you notice how many more purchases were below the line under the defendant major oil companies than were below the line of the jobbers and consumers? Do you notice how many more purchases were above the high of the jobbers and consumers than were above the high of the defendant major oil companies? Why, gentlemen, it is a complete exposure of the case of the Government.

Now, they have said something here about the market leader, and the power of monopoly. Don't let's be scared by that word "monopoly". Let's find out 4251 what it means. Any one of you could be called a monopolist in these conditions: If you had the power, and exercised that power, to exclude others from commerce; or if a company or a group of companies had the power, which it exercised—which it exercised; not alone the power, but which it exercised—to exclude others from commerce.

Now, we may not be economists, you and I, but we can't have helped but learn something during the course of this trial. There is one peculiar characteristic about any company or group of companies, if it has—assuming that their power was consolidated, and they were in some arrangement together—they might have the power to break the market, but they haven't got the power to raise the market.

Now, you will see that exemplified in the story of Swensrud, when I asked him that, assuming that the allegations of this indictment were right—that they were right, and they were true; and I wanted him to assume for the purpose of my questions that those allegations were true—if that group of companies constituted, as appeared in the indictment, then, eighty-five per cent, or as appears now, somewhere between seventy and seventy-five per cent, or seventy-six per cent—assuming that they wanted to lift the price in this territory, could they do so? And he said, "No."

4252 And I said to him, "Why not?"

"Well," he said, "it is just like you put a dike across the river. Unless you put it substantially all the way across, you can't stop the flow. And where, as here, if you have twenty-five to thirty per cent that is not in any combination, you haven't got the power to lift that price."

But it doesn't work the other way, gentlemen. He said that even ten or fifteen per cent can break a price, can break a price. And, of course, that is the thing that was happening during this period, at the time of which these gentlemen who are here before you undertook to aid their Government in curing the evils and correcting the abuses that existed in the oil industry.

These companies, as big as some of them are, could never have destroyed the independents by lifting the price, because the independents would have gotten under the umbrella. But if they had been content to let the price go down and not make any effort to remove these burdens upon commerce, then it could very well have been, it could very well have been that many more of these independents would have died.

And this is a thing that you have got to keep in mind, gentlemen: That it was in cooperation with the Government that these various companies here, among them 4253 being the defendants before you, stepped in to correct conditions. And what they did was not to do the thing that would amount to a monopoly, but what they did was to keep open the channels of trade, and keep open the forces of competition.

Now, it is a curious thing, gentlemen, that we here, the defendants, should be on the side of competition, in view of the way this indictment is drawn, and these gentlemen here (indicating Government counsel), should be on the side of monopoly. Because, if what they contend for had been done and had continued, then you would find, through the sheer inability to live at a time when big as well as strong were being destroyed, you would have found those little fellows going to the wall. And that is why, that is why the Government intervened to prevent that very act.

Now, gentlemen, also, complaint has been made here that one purpose of this was to destroy the jobber. Well, both Mr. Brazeau and Mr. Thomas have treated of that subject, and I think you will remember some of my questions during the course of the trial, the answers to which completely showed how vital it was to these gentlemen in the industry, representing these companies, to have the jobbers continue in business. Because company 4254 after company here, by their own men, showed that unless the jobbers did continue in business, that they wouldn't be able to exist in competition.

Now, that suggests something to me. I think it must be very clear to you now that this industry is a very hotly competitive industry. And that is shown by several instances.

Mr. Shatford referred to—Mr. Lewin, rather, referred to Mr. Shatford's testimony relative to what happened through all of this territory over some twenty or twenty-five years, in the development of competitive conditions. And he showed the hot competition existing among several of these companies, and the gradual elimination of many of these independents. But, also it appeared from his testimony, as well as from others, that some of the larger competitive companies that you find here today were companies that were small independents in that day.

I think you will remember Mr. Marshall's testimony, of Standard of Indiana, and I think it shows how absurd is some of this talk of the market leader. In answer to questions by Mr. Kirkland, he said: "Well, the market leader may lead a market down, but he hasn't much of a chance of leading a market up."

And then he told the story of the Standard of 4255 Indiana: How, in 1905 it controlled what? Eighty or ninety per cent of the business in this territory. And now, as a result of competitive conditions and the new companies that have come in here, and the many companies that are waiting on the edge as Swensrud told you, like his own company, to get into this territory—how, now, Standard of Indiana's business is only something over twenty per cent of the total business done within this territory.

So there is an awful lot of flapdoodle, gentlemen, about this talk about monopoly and competition, and when you get down to the essential facts, they are much more simple—just as there is about this talk about the jobbers.

Now, I only want to treat on one phase of that, and you can look at it and see it very quickly, and I am not going to spend much time on it.

The complaint was made here that what these defendants were doing was harmful to the jobbers.

You will remember that there has already been explanation to you that when the price is at a normal level, there is a five and a half cent margin to these jobbers; but that during these price wars, these local price wars in a narrow territory like the City of Madison, no protection is given to them. Of course, some times it is done, but you 4256 can take that as a start. And if a price war exists, and you begin to deduct from that margin, the jobber loses.

Now, just look at that chart. It is right here before you, Exhibit 1014. That red represents—I am not going into the detail of it, because all you need to do is to get this picture: That red represents a price war, and the effect of a price war. And just look at the effect of that through 1934, and look what it was in January, 1935—one and three-tenths cents below normal. So, all the jobber was getting was seven-tenths of a cent out of his two cents. And see how, then, from the mere psychology of starting this movement in January, conditions began to improve, and how, as this Stabilization Committee began to operate, the position of the jobber steadily improved as the price war was eliminated, so that during most of April, practically all of May and in June, he was getting his whole five and a half cent margin. So this thing, instead of hurting the jobber, gentlemen, was of great benefit to him.

4257 Now, gentlemen, let me say to you how this case strikes me. Here is a charge, and I am not going to keep you much longer this evening, and I hope to finish up very early tomorrow morning, because I think you have been patient, considerate, and long-suffering, and I am not going to be able to help you much if I am talking to you when you are tired, but I just want to leave this thought with you when you go tonight:

The Government has made a certain fundamental charge which I say they cannot establish and have not established. One of the vital elements of that charge was that with respect to the journals. That constituted the heart, the very heart of their charge. And that was based on the fact that the journals falsely and fraudulently represented in their publication, that the prices that they published were the jobber prices, when, in truth and in fact, the indictment says, that they were publishing the prices of these defendants, which were higher.

Now, that, was the charge. And they said that the journals constituted the chief instrumentalities, the chief instrumentalities; it was the whole pin that hung this charge together, this conspiracy together. And that was their charge.

Well, gentlemen, the journals are out, and where is their case? "Oh, but," they say, "now, we still have it, 4258 because they were the innocent tools which you used."
Used to do what? "Used to publish your prices as the prices of the jobbers and consumers."

Let us look and see how absurd that is. Gentlemen, if they had published our prices—just look at them (indicating on chart), look at those black marks below the line (indicating)! If they had published our prices as the prices of the jobbers and consumers, the prices that they published, the quotations that they had in their papers would have been lower instead of higher. The chart shows that!

Now, the truth of it is, gentlemen, that the papers were truly reporting the actual prices of jobbers and consumers as is seen from that chart.

Now, that, to my mind, utterly ruins the position taken by the Government here, and what we really have been dealing with, gentlemen, what we really have been dealing with, and it hasn't been fully realized, is not the charges, not the charges which the Government makes in the indictment, but the story that we came in and told you frankly as to what we were doing.

And we put on the stand Mr. Arnott, the head of the stabilization committee, and we put on the stand Mr. Mc-Dowell, head of the tank car committee; and they 4259 told that story, and all this time they have been battering at our story, which does not represent any attempt at conspiracy to fix prices, but deals with what?

Deals with an honest attempt, no matter how they may laugh at it—and I don't think that people that are experienced in business, whether it is agriculture or industry of any kind, will laugh at anything that is distressed, because you know the effect that that has upon price.

All that this was, gentlemen, was an attempt to go in and remove an obstruction to free and open competition, to remove that that was depressing prices and tearing this country down into a subnormal level.

Now, we say and only say this that what we did in respect to dealing with distress gasoline, what we did in that respect was an honest, and a right, and a proper, and a decent thing to do. There was no violation of the law in that. Any law that would make such a thing a crime ought to be wiped off the statute books if any such law existed, because it is against common sense, and it is against common decency.

And so we say here that if there had never been a code, that if there had never been a N. R. A., what we did would have the sanction of the law, because it was reason- 4260 able and it was proper. Now, nevertheless, these gentlemen of the Government, say if we wanted to do this, we ought to have come in and gotten some permission from the N. R. A. We didn't need to come in and get permission from the N. R. A. for something that was within the law. If we were trying to do a thing and they came to us to find out what we were doing, which I think you had a right to expect, that might have been one thing; if we were trying to go to the N. R. A. and get immunity for doing what we did, that is another thing. But I have said before this Court to you that we weren't claiming immunity. What we did was right and proper thing to do, and we didn't need that immunity.

I am not going to argue as to whether if what we were doing was not a proper thing, that we would be obliged to make out of the machinery set up down there or that they could grant us immunity, even if we did apply—if we were doing a little illegal thing. I only say this, gentlemen, that our position is that we didn't need to ask for any further ticket-of-leave or sanction, because what we did then we would have a right to do today, even though there were no law.

But, I have said all along, gentlemen, that just like you can't talk of the way you live, without thinking of the land around your house, or the nature of the country where 4261 you were born, so you can't consider those things of what was done without considering the conditions under which it was done.

And that is why I was prepared, and I will be prepared to talk with you tomorrow very briefly as to just what happened in these conditions surrounding what we did and trying to do in conjunction and in cooperation with the officers of the Government.

And I am going to try to do it this way: Not to make an argument, but to try to have you put yourselves in the position of these men and then show you what happened, and I will try to do that very briefly, show you what happened in each period and let you consider for yourselves what you would have done in the same conditions and under the same circumstances.

The Court: We will suspend now until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock.

(Thereupon, at 4:40 o'clock p. m., an adjournment was taken until Thursday, January 20, 1938, at the hour of ten o'clock a. m.)

4262 Mr. Donovan: May it please the Court.

At the close yesterday I told you that today I wanted to talk to you about certain things that influenced the minds and the actions and the conduct of these defendants. I told you I would not take long in doing it, and I won't; and I told you very frankly what I wanted to do; I wanted you, if you would, to imagine yourselves in the place of those men at that time; and I asked you that, gentlemen, because I thought I had a right to ask it, because when we undertake to judge of the conduct of anyone else we must try, in fairness to that person, to put ourselves in his position at the time he did the act that we are undertaking to judge.

Now, it is not going to be very long before you gentlemen will be sitting down and deliberating on this case, and I think if you ask yourselves the question I ask you to ask yourselves, What would you have done in a similar situation, it may help you to a determination of this case.

Now, the first thing I want to refer to is the speech of Mr. Ickes on September 18, 1933, and very briefly I want to recall to your minds what the situation was at the time he made the speech.

You remember at that time we were in the midst of a depression; the new administration had just come in;

4263 efforts were being made to deal with the depression; the N.R.A. and the A.A.A. had been passed; codes and been set up for all industry; they were administered by General Johnson, but it was felt that the oil industry was in so serious condition as it appears from the testimony of Mr. Franklin who was upon the witness stand as an independent producer and refiner, and who was the first chairman of the Planning and Coordination Committee, that a special code was set up for that industry under Mr. Ickes.

Now, the Planning and Coordination Committee had been appointed by the President, and besides men who represented on that committee every branch of the industry there were three who particularly represented the government.

Now, that was the situation, and it is not asking too much for you to assume that you are members of that Planning and Coordination Committee on this morning, and Mr. Ickes comes in to you and talks to you. Now, here is what he says:

> "Gentlemen of the Oil Industry:
>
> "I am pleased to welcome you to Washington in connection with the important work of stabilizing the oil business of this country to which work we expect you to contribute largely.
>
> "Certainly it is a gigantic task which confronts us and one that will call for strong nerves, clear > 4264 heads and sound hearts. Your best business judgment, highest technical skill, utter unselfishness and ardent patriotism will be needed in support of President Roosevelt's program. With proper comprehension and cooperation his plan must succeed.
>
> "A short time ago conditions in your industry were very bad, but since the passage of the National Industrial Recovery Act notable improvement has been shown. I find that advances in retail gasoline prices of 30 percent, in wholesale gasoline prices of 100 percent, and in crude oil prices up to 250 percent have already taken place, although our control of production was only inaugurated ten days ago. Your problem is to hold and consolidate this improvement so far as it is justified while paving the way for further improvement.
> "I ask you to remember that our primary purpose is to put men back to work and to raise wages, thus enlarging the purchasing power of the industry.

This beneficial result will then extend to other industries and again be reflected back to your own. I trust you will direct your earliest and most earnest attention to this labor and wage question, and to keep my staff advised of the progress made.

"Many units in the oil industry adopted the labor 4265 and wage provisions of the N.R.A. under the President's re-employment agreement even before the Oil Code was signed, and reports on the improvement in employment and wages should be available by now. I will be most interested in having them brought to my attention at the earliest possible date.

"I have established in the Interior Department the Petroleum Administrative Board, the personnel of which was recently announced in the press. This is now organized to handle all matters promptly. The routine will be for all communications from the industry or from the public to clear through the Board's secretary, Mr. Meyers, by whom each question, technical, legal or administrative, will be referred immediately to the proper person for action.

"Many of these matters should go to your committee first for investigation and recommendation and I hope you will organize yourselves to receive and handle them. The Petroleum Administrative Board will acknowledge each inquiry, request or complaint by letter or telegram the day of its receipt, if possible, and issue final determinations at the earliest possible date. This procedure seems highly important if we are to secure the cooperation and support of the public and I am sure your 4266 committee will aid us to carry out this procedure.

"For all matters to be taken up by the committee with the Board I have selected as the point of contact our special technical adviser, Mr. Thomas, who is already known to most of you. This should also facilitate our work, save time and avoid duplication of effort. On this latter point I regret that the pressure of details has prevented one member of the Board from sitting constantly with the committee but so far we have been unable to arrange that. In the meantime, I suggest that the committee keep the Board advised in a general way of the proposals which the committee has under consideration, even while the recommendations are being formulated, in order that our approval can be expedited.

"I have a further and important suggestion to > make, one that I transmitted to the committee through the Board a week ago. It is that in naming the personnel of your sub-committees regional and local, representation be given to all the various groups and factions within the industry so that the problems and views of all may be considered simultaneously in formulating your recommendations. During the process of adopting the Code we became aware how many factions and schools of thought exist, and how widely variant are their ideas on > 4267 the industry's problems and their proper solution. None should be denied a right to be heard and one of the best ways to assure that is to make your committees comprehensively representative. Thus we may reduce the flood of telegrams reaching us to the effect that this and that action is being taken without consideration of the welfare of the particular groups."

And then he concludes:

> "Gentlemen, we have a solemn duty to perform. Our task is to stabilize the oil industry upon a profitable basis. That is the keen desire of the Administration and we will work with you constantly to that end. But we must remember that the income of the oil industry is the outgo of the consuming public, and so design our program by progressive stages, that too great a burden is not placed too suddenly upon the purchasing power of the public just at this time. In the end our program cannot succeed unless we have the support of the public."

Now, gentlemen, after you as members of the Planning and Coordination Committee heard that speech Mr. Ickes issued a press release, and that press release contained the speech that I have just read, but it contains more.
4268 It contained on the margin, as you will see from the exhibit which I will place upon this table, it contained on the margin the tank car price of gasoline for gasoline of 60-64 octane as being five and three-eighths, and it was with reference to this that the Secretary asked you to hold that advance while paving the way for further improvements.

Now, the record does not disclose whether or not third grade gasoline was higher than the level line reached in June, 1935. I wish the record did disclose that, but it does not. But there is enough in the record for you to draw the inference as to where the Secretary wanted the price to go.

Now, all through this case there is evidence that middle octane was only a small fraction of a cent higher than third grade gasoline, and yet on that day, September 13, 1933, the price of middle octane was five-eighths of a cent higher than third grade gasoline ever reached during 1935.

The Secretary asked you on that occasion to pave the way for further improvement.

4269 Now, out of that letter, there are three things, therefore, that you would have in mind: First, that the Secretary approved the increase in the wholesale price of gasoline, and asked you to hold that advance while paving the way for further improvement. Second, that he advised you that he had established as his agents to represent him the Petroleum Administrative Board. And, third, that you had a solemn duty to perform. And what was that duty? That duty was to stabilize the industry on a profitable basis, and that the administration would work with you constantly to that end.

Now, gentlemen, that speech was in the minds of these gentlemen who are defendants here, just as it would have been in your mind had you been members of that industry at that time. And let us put that there (indicating), so that we can keep it before us.

Now, then, I want to take you along to November, 1934. What was the situation then?

There isn't enough in the record here to show what transpired during that period. There is enough, however, to show that there was tremendous activity in attempting to carry out the objectives of the Code. You knew, as members of the industry, that at that time, on November 14th, 1935,—this is Exhibit 968, which is the speech at Dal-4270 las, a portion of which the Court gave me permission to read to you during the trial—you knew that at that time the price of third grade gasoline was four and one-eighth cents, on that very day. And you know from the testimony that this price was so low that the refiners were being driven from the market. And you know also that the price of four and one-eighth cents was one cent higher than that on March 1st, 1935, just before this buying started.

Now, you know also that, through the efforts and the insistence of the Secretary of the Interior, the price of crude oil was raised from twenty-five cents to one dollar, and held there at his direct instance and insistence. And you know from the testimony of Mr. Franklin that that was done because it was feared that if the price of crude oil would fall, as it would fall unless the price of gasoline was raised, that that would endanger the stripper wells and the 250,000 people of the southwest who were dependent upon the maintenance of those stripper wells.

Now, knowing all those things, gentlemen, you were at Dallas, Texas, and you saw the Secretary get up on the platform, and among other things you heard him say this:

4271 "If each of you will look back over the past year and, without prejudice or passion, compare present conditions with those of the summer of 1933, you will all find definite improvement in the industry as a whole.

"I know it might be difficult for some of you to reach such a conclusion. The refiner who has had to buy his crude oil supply at posted prices and sell his products at the levels which have prevailed might be reluctant to admit that there has been any improvement. His lot has been the hardest of all. Most of these refiners have been extremely patient while waiting for the sun to shine. They may feel that they have been forgotten, but I can assure them that this is not so. Much that has been done during the past several months has had as its particular objective the strengthening of the position of the non-integrated or the partially-integrated refiner. The allocation of gasoline production quotas under the Code and the program for the purchase of distress gasoline both had this as a common purpose. Each of those did its share of good, but the full measure of their accomplishment was not possible because of the 'hot' gasoline from East Texas which kept moving 4272 into interstate commerce, and because of the price wars which raged in the territory East of the Rockies in the bitter struggle for gallonage.

"I realize that East Texas has been an exceedingly popular dumping ground for complaints. It is the land of alibis. It undoubtedly has been blamed for many of the ills of the industry which have had their roots in other soil, but I feel very strongly that East Texas must carry a heavy share of blame for the conditions which weakened the wholesale gasoline market. How could it be otherwise when one of the principal new services of the industry has daily published the fact that gasoline, allegedly manufactured from 'hot' crude, could be purchased at a price materially less than that made from legally produced crude?

"I came to Dallas with the clear intention of putting all of my cards on the table and here go some more of them."

Now, you heard that speech, and you went back to your homes and to your business and to the activities under the Code. And here is that exhibit, No. 968, which I place here (indicating).

4273 Now, in the meantime, a letter had been written, and that was the letter of July, 1934. You will remember, I spoke about that letter to you in the opening, and I said that in one sense it was the central fact of this lawsuit, because if that letter had never been written there would have been no stabilization committee, there would have been no tank car committee, and we would not be here together in this court room today.

Now, before I read this letter, and when I read it, it may save you another reading in your jury room, and I want to do it in that way—you have got to keep in mind the circumstances under which the letter was written. Now, what were those circumstances? They were testified to from the witness stand.

And it appears from that testimony that, at the time that this letter was written, the whole Code and its administration was in danger. Price wars were raging. It was recognized then that something had to be done. The Petroleum Administrative Board called Mr. Arnott, who was Chairman of the Marketing Committee as well as being a member of the Planning and Coordination Committee. They went over all these conditions and all these circumstances with him, and they recognized that not only hot oil 4274 but distress gasoline was an important factor in causing these price wars that were rampant through the territory. And they discussed also, as he said to you from the stand, that they recognized that in order to deal with that situation, it being so inter-related, it was essential not only to deal with the retail question but with the wholesale question, which included the tank car market.

Now, with those things in mind, that you would have as members of the industry, here was the letter that was written to Mr. Arnott, and afterwards sent out to the Stabilization Committee at its first meeting, and read and explained to them. Now, that was Exhibit 891. It has been read to you before by counsel for the Government, read to you twice, so I will not inflict all of it upon you, but I will refer to those paragraphs which I think you must have in mind when you come to a consideration of this case.

Now, the letter is dated July 20th, 1934. It is addressed to Mr. C. E. Arnott, Chairman, Marketing Committee, Planning and Coordination Committee, Investment Building, Washington, D. C. It says:

"My dear Mr. Arnott:

"It has been brought to my attention that the market for gasoline and other petroleum products 4275 has recently been disturbed by numerous price wars in many different localities and states. This has resulted in causing petroleum products to be sold below cost in some areas in order to meet unrestrained competition, and has in turn depressed the wholesale market for such products, thereby leading to the building up of surplus and to the economic and physical waste consequent thereon.

"Such conditions have a strong tendency toward, and in many instances have resulted in, the payment of wages below the minimum established by the Code, and in the working of employees for a period beyond the maximum hours provided for by it. Furthermore, price wars necessarily injure small independent marketers who are unable to dispose of their products profitably when prices sink to ruinous levels. It would appear, therefore, that we are faced with conditions which would, if uncontrolled, tend to frustrate the purposes of the National Industrial Recovery Act by increasing unemployment, reducing standards of labor, and preventing the rehabilitation of industry, which the Act was intended to achieve."

4276 Now I come to the request to him, and I am eliminating some other things:

"I am therefore requesting you, as Chairman of the Marketing Committee of the Planning and Coordination Committee, to take action which we deem necessary to restore markets to their normal conditions in areas where wasteful competition has caused them to become depressed. The number and extent of these situations would make it impractical for the Petroleum Administrative Board acting alone to deal with each specific situation. Therefore, I am requesting and authorizing you, as Chairman of the Marketing Committee, to designate committees in each locality when and as price wars develop, with authority to confer and to negotiate and to hold due public hearings with a view to ascertaining the elements of conflict that are present, in a cooperative manner to stabilize the price level to conform to that normally prevailing in contiguous areas where marketing conditions are similar."

Now, gentlemen, that letter you saw. That letter, you heard read. That letter, we will put there (indicating).

And upon that letter we will put the opinion which 4277 has not been admitted in evidence here, but which has been testified to, was written by the legal adviser of the Planning and Coordination Committee at the request of Mr. Arnott, and sent with the letter that I have just read to the meeting of the Stabilization Committee.

Now, gentlemen, what happened after that—as Mr. Brazeau suggests, McDowell testified that in doing what he did, that he relied upon that letter and upon that opinion.

Now, what was done after that, gentlemen?

Work was started under the letter. You have heard that described. I will not detail it. It started in local communities; it extended to states, it extended to regions. And under that work, then, a meeting was called on January 4th, a meeting of the Stabilization Committee.

The independent had complained, Mr. Arnott in opening the meeting, said that complaint had been made—that gains had been made in fighting these price wars, but in order to hold the gains it was necessary to do something more. It was necessary to deal with the fundamental problem. The representatives of the independents there then arose, Mr. Majewski and Mr. O'Shaughnessy, 4278 and said that unless something were done for the independents they would be driven to the wall.

A tank car stabilization committee was appointed; that committee was appointed to investigate and inquire into the situation, and see if some plan could not be proposed. Mr. McDowell, over his objection, but because it was felt that he was the one to do it, was made chairman of that committee. That was January 4th.

You will remember that on January 8th or 9th, Mr. Arnott went to Washington, and he talked with the Planning and Coordination Committee; that he told them what had transpired at the January 4th meeting; that he talked with Mr. Marshall and with Mr. Meyers, members of the Petroleum Administrative Board. He told them what they were doing, and what had been said at that meeting; and from them he derived encouragement.

There were meetings held by the Tank Car Stabilization Committee: A meeting held on February 5th, at which time a plan was discussed; a meeting held on February 11th, at which time the question of publicity came up, and it was suggested by Mr. McDowell, and noted by Mr. Sus in his memorandum, that the journals be fully advised of the activities of the Tank Car Committee—not that it should have any reference to the jobber line of prices, 4279 but that the activities of the committee should be made known and made public. And that is what was done. And you heard from the testimony of Mr. Steiger that two or three times a week, in his publication, the activities of this committee were published.

Now, then, at the meeting of February 5th, a telegram was read which Mr. O'Shaughnessy had sent to Mr. Fahy, telling him of the appointment of the committee, that something had to be done, and what was the Petroleum Administrative Board going to do about it? I don't need to read you that letter, but if you were present at that meeting, you heard that telegram read, and you heard that written reply. And what was the reply? That is Exhibit 894, in the record:

> "I received your telegram of January 28 and was glad to hear from you again. I am sure you know that the tank car situation in relation to the price of crude is one about which we have no disagreement. How to bring about a correction is the stumbling block. I may say, however, that I see nothing in the recent Supreme Court decision which in any way affects endeavors to reach the solution. We are hoping soon for a report from the Special Committee which the Secretary appointed to look > 4280 into this kind of thing and make recommendations."

That was the Blazer report that you have heard about.

> "I really believe we are going to have some definite suggestions from them which will carry weight. In the meantime, we are considering your suggestions and would like to have any further suggestions you can give us."

Now, this letter and this reply, you, as members of the industry, would want to know about, and you would know about, because you were present at that meeting.

Now, then, gentlemen, we come to the letter of March the 30th from Mr. Ickes to Mr. Lientz. But, before that happened, before that happened, this had happened: Mr. Arnott had seen Mr. Buckley, and all that transpired there you already have in your minds from the very comprehensive and very able presentation of the East Texas situation by Mr. Brazeau. I will not dwell upon that. You also know from the very full and clear exposition of the Mid-Continent situation by Mr. Thomas, what had happened in relation to the plan proposed at the February

5th, at the February 11th, and finally put into form 4281 at the March 5th meeting at St. Louis, in which they were told to go ahead, following that, by Mr. Arnott.

Now, Mr. Arnott went to Washington, and he saw the members of the Petroleum Administrative Board. He saw the Chairman of that Board, who was the Deputy Administrator, Mr. Fahy. And he saw Dr. Frey, who had charge of the marketing, and whose duty it was to sit with this Stabilization Committee on these questions that so troubled the tank car market and the price, the retail market in this Mid-Continent field as well as in other fields throughout the country.

And Mr. Arnott was asked by Mr. Fahy whether, in what he was doing, that he had considered the anti-trust laws. And Mr. Arnott said, "Well, listen to my story, and see what you think." And then he told them the story, and he said the story that he told them was in substance the same story that he told the following day at the meeting of the Allocators' minutes—the District Allocators in Washington. Now, that is contained in the minutes of those Allocators, which I read to you, and which I will not read now; but which you knew about, and which you had in mind; and we will put that right there, as constituting some of the elements in this situation that your men as members of the industry knew at that time (indicating).

4282 Now, following that, Mr. Arnott saw Mr. Fahy again on May 8th, and he saw Mr. Fahy again on May 10th. And neither at the March 12th meeting or at the May 8th meeting or the May 10th meeting—whatever transpired; I don't care whether that is contradiction or disagreement or whatsoever, whatever transpired, no one said to him, "Don't do this thing." No one said to him, "Stop this thing."

And so Mr. Arnott said that he went away from the March 12th meeting with two things in mind: First, that to the best of his ability he had fully explained this plan; and, second, that he had the impression in his mind that those men thought it was a good thing, and hoped he would continue.

And so, on May 8th, there was casual reference to the buying program, according to the testimony of Mr. Arnott. Mr. Fahy asked him how he was getting along. On May 10th, they were there with Mr. Collett and Mr. Majewski and the other members of the Committee from the Planning and Coordination Committee, to sit with the Petroleum Administrative Board, to do what? To consider the report of the Blazer Committee. And that report of the Blazer Committee had some reference to the buying 4283 programs, and Mr. Fahy said, when it came to that: "Well, we know what we are doing in regard to that, and there is no use paying any more attention to that portion of the report."

4284 Now, it is true that before that time there had been a letter written of April 2nd. Mr. Lewin read that letter to you, and he read it to you very carefully, and I am not going to repeat it; and that letter was from the Administrator to Mr. Arnott. Mr. Lewin claimed that that was a solemn warning to Mr. Arnott that what he was doing was illegal and improper. You heard the letter read, and I just ask you if you agree with Mr. Lewin about that.

That letter, as you remember, specifically dealt, not with the buying program but with a moratorium on dealer accounts in Chicago. It had nothing to do and had no reference to anything about buying.

The Petroleum Administrative Board had been advised by Mr. Arnott, as we already know, that the buying program had been going on. This was just a month before, on March 12th. They also knew that there was a moratorium. They asked for information about the moratorium but they didn't ask one single thing about the buying program.

Now, when he got that letter of April 2nd, I just ask you this. Would you take that as a warning, or would you take their silence on buying, in this letter, and their failure to write any letter on buying,—I ask you, just as reasonable men whether you wouldn't take that as ac-4285 quiescence in the buying that was going on.

I put there this letter of April 2nd.

And before you answer that to yourselves I ask you to keep in mind this letter, which I will now read, which is Exhibit 995, a letter of March 30th, from the Administrator of the Oil Code to Mr. Lientz. Let's read this letter and see what the Administrator had in mind, and what his attitude was toward the activities of this stabilization committee.

Dated March 30th, 1935. "In response to your letter of March 22 I am enclosing a copy of the report of the Petroleum Code Survey Committee on Small Enterprise, which I believe will be of interest to you."

Now, we know that that committee was the so-called Blazer Committee; and we know from the testimony in regard to the meeting on May 10th with Mr. Fahy and Mr. Arnott that that related,—a portion of that report, related to buying, to a buying program. This reference is to that report, which the Secretary encloses. The Secretary says:

"Although you state that it is difficult for you to be specific and analyze the situation in a letter because of the likely repetition of information, it occurs to me that after you have read the report of the Committee on Small Enterprise you may have 4286 other instances of small enterprise abuse which you may care to relate.

"You referred to a meeting about a year ago at which Mr. Howard Bennette discussed the poor marketing practices of the oil industry before a group of oil executives. I have inquired as to whether we had a representative at such a meeting and have been informed that the Petroleum Administrative Board has no information on that meeting. Since Mr. Bennette has died any record of the meeting probably passed with his memory. I am, however, of the opinion that Mr. Bennette was thoroughly alive to the poor marketing practices of the industry, and quite likely any statement which he made would bear out a very substantial amount of the comment made by the Committee on Small Enterprise.

"Concerning the independent refiners, other than those in California, it appears from the report of the Committee on Small Enterprise that the outstanding difficulty is due to the disparity between posted crude oil prices and refinery realizations. This situation has been deplorable for many months, but it is my understanding that at present the activity of the Stabilization Committee is having a distinct effect in the improvement of refinery prices, and that were it not for old contracts, many of which 4287 are badly shaded with respect to the posted price, the independent refiner is approaching a normal market structure.

"In California the refiners' prices of gasoline have not been particularly subnormal at any time since the Agreement became effective. There, however, has been complaint of the lack of differentials, and that problem is receiving consideration.

"As I stated in my letter of March 6, I appreciate your interest in the petroleum problem and I should like to have your personal comments when you visit Washington if it is possible for me to free myself from other demands. Should I be unable to see you, please call on Mr. Charles Fahy, Chairman of the Petroleum Administrative Board, who will gladly discuss the problems of the industry with you, and who will report to me anything with which I am not already conversant."

That letter we put in here, because that would have a very strong bearing in your mind as to what the attitude and what the knowledge would be; and that letter was signed, as I should have said by Harold L. Ickes, Administrator and was dated March 30th, 1935.

Now, gentlemen, after that, in May, after all of these things I talked to you about, came the Schechter decision. And then came on that day, on June 3rd, 1935, a letter from Fahy to Arnott. The Code was out. What did Mr. Fahy say? 4288

Here I also want to refer you to the press release on May 7th, in relation to the report of the Blazer Committee and their recommendation that unless the price should go up a quarter of a cent that the price of crude should be reduced.

Now, you know, from your knowledge in the industry that the price did not go above a quarter of a cent as long as the price of crude remained at a dollar. That, you have in your mind. Now, as I say, we come to the passing of the Code, and here is the letter of Mr. Fahy to Mr. Arnott. Exhibit is 976. He says:

"My dear Mr. Arnott: I wish to acknowledge your recent letters concerning stabilization work in the south.

"As I have already advised you, our participation in stabilization work terminated with the Supreme Court decision. In consequence, there are no further comments that I can make at this time. I want to take this opportunity, however, to express my cordial appreciation of the work that you have done in promoting the purposes of the National Industrial Recovery Act. Every evidence indicates 4289 that, the general situation is better than it has been for some years. It is my hope that the results which have been achieved will be maintained."

That is the letter that he received.

4290 Now, just preceding that there had been articles in the paper, to which reference was made in the course of this trial, which were brought to the attention of members of the industry. Those articles, gentlemen, I think we should refer to here, and I will do it very briefly.

Exhibit 900, which was an article in the Tulsa Daily World, dated May 29th, 1935. And it is important for you, as members of the industry, to know about these articles to determine what effect they had upon your mind at that time and what influence they exerted upon you in your conduct during that period. Now, it was a plea of Mr. Fahy to the industry as a whole, to voluntarily subscribe to the provisions of the Oil Code, for the time being at least.

> "He said that the industry has registered large gains during the operation of the Code and 'as much of the gain as possible should be maintained by voluntary action until there is new legislation'."

And Exhibit 899. An article in the Tulsa Daily World, May 28th, 1935. A statement of Mr. Richberg, who had been General Counsel for the N. R. A., and who for a time following General Johnson had been head of the N. R. A. And here was his statement:

4291 "We face now the question of maintaining the gains which have been made in the last two years and retaining the values which have been created under the National Recovery Administration."

And Exhibit 901, Tulsa Tribune for May 31st, 1935. This was supposedly an interview with the President of the United States, and it quoted from that interview.

> "The President turned to the question of voluntary Code adherence. He expressed hope that all industry would live up to them, but pointed out that there was danger of the chisler driving the rest to the point where they would have to cut wages and lengthen hours to survive."

Now, those excerpts from the papers we put upon this pile, as indicating the influences at work upon the purposes and upon the intention of these men who were members of the industry.

And now, gentlemen, I put there also a letter of the Secretary of the Interior to Mr. Arnott, thanking him and commending him, which was Exhibit 979, for the work that he had done. I don't need to read that again; but we will put that there also.

4292 Now, finally, let me call your attention to Exhibit 917, which was the Annual Report of Mr. Ickes, addressed to the President of the United States, in November, 1935. In that report the Secretary states that the stabilization committee cooperated with the Petroleum Administrative Board in bringing about the desired parity prices in the spring of 1935. Those are his quoted words.

Mr. Lewin, in his argument to you contended that when the Secretary spoke of the Stabilization Committee he did not have in mind the so-called buying program that was carried on at that time. Would you have agreed with Mr. Lewin when you read that report back in November, 1935?

Now, in this report the Secretary is speaking of those things which caused the wholesale tank car market to go up. In so doing he must have referred to the activities of the Tank Car Committee which directly affected the market, and that was the Tank Car Stabilization Committee.

4293 But you don't need to speculate as to what it meant. You can refer to that document in evidence, which clearly shows the Secretary's understanding of the scope of the Stabilization Committee, beginning in February 1, 1935, and running to the end of the code. I can tell you why he knew that. That was Exhibit 974 and that is the exhibit which I produced here, you remember, with the personal certification of the Secretary. We find the authority of the various members of the Petroleum Administrative Board. And I refer particularly to the authority conferred on Doctor Frey. And here is what was said in that authorization:

> "As a personal representative of the Administrator to negotiate and sit with committees of those engaged in the stabilization of wholesale and retail markets throughout large areas of the United States."

Can you have any doubt in your mind that Doctor Frey was authorized to sit on committees and deal with these wholesale and retail problems? Can you have any doubt that that is what the Secretary referred to in his authorization?

4294 Let me remind you of something. You remember just before you were excused in order to permit us here to have a debate in your absence the document to which I have referred was offered in evidence, and Mr. Lewin made a statement just before you were excused, and this statement was made, although this document had been personally certified by Ickes.

And here is what Mr. Lewin said:

> "It is a write-up of a lot of detail of various functions that a man does come in contact with, and is a salary write-up. It is to justify a certain classification of salary and it isn't approved by any Sec> retary of the Interior; it never gets to any such official as that."

In the recess we called up the Department of the Interior, and we asked them to deny or affirm that statement, and we have got this telegram back to one of my associates, Mr. Irvine, and we offered it in evidence and it was received. It was Exhibit 996. And here is what Mr. Ickes, himself, who signed the telegram said:

> "Allocations of positions to salary grade based 4295 on job sheets certified copies of which were forwarded to you yesterday, describing the duties of John W. Frey, Edward B. Swanson, Norman L. Meyers, and J. Howard Marshall as members of the Petroleum Administrative Board, effective as of February 1, 1935, was approved by me January 28, 1935."

Now, from this telegram it appears specifically that Dr. Frey was authorized to sit with a committee to stabilize the wholesale or tank car market. It is also true that that became effective on the first day of February, 1935, the very day when this indictment alleges that this supposed conspiracy went into effect, and on that day of February 1st the salary of Dr. Frey was raised from $6,000 to $8,000 a year.

Now, wouldn't you ask yourselves this question: What has the authority of Dr. Frey got to do with the annual report of the Secretary of the Interior?

Well, in answering that, remembering all that I have said, let me quote what the secretary says in his annual report:

> "The operations of the Tender Board, of the production provisions of the code and refinery amendment, and of the Stabilization Committee and Planning and Coordination Committee, with the 4296 cooperation of the Petroleum Administrative Board, brought the desired parity between the wholesale price of gasoline and crude oil in the spring of 1935."

Could you misunderstand that statement as a member of the oil industry? Isn't it a plain statement? Isn't it a statement that the activities of the Stabilization Committee, insofar as they affected the tank car prices, were carried on with the cooperation of the Secretary's agency, the Petroleum Administrative Board?

Gentlemen, ask yourselves this: Would you be satisfied in your own minds that the Secretary and his agencies cooperated and encouraged the work of the Stabilization Committee in wholesale markets?

Now, gentlemen, let me put there that telegram of authorization; let me put there also the personal certification by Mr. Ickes of the authority of these men who were on the Petroleum Administrative Board; and let me put there also that portion of this annual report by the Secretary of the Interior to the president of the United States in November, 1935, of which you had knowledge, at the very time that these men were still carrying on the activities of their work, which I have said 4297 to you they had a right to do, whether there was a code or not, and ask yourselves: Would not that, if you were members of the oil industry, would not that give you encouragement, would not that fortify your position and your belief, would not that give strength to your purpose and to your intent that you are right in believing that what you were doing was a proper and a decent thing to do?

And, now, gentlemen, let me say this, that that testimony here (indicating) is the testimony of Mr. Ickes. It is just as if he stood on that stand and swore to what he said here (indicating) because certainly what he says to the chief of his cabinet, to the president of the United States, is just as true and just as honest and just as sincere as if he were here under oath.

Isn't it a significant thing, gentlemen, that he should send to us without subpoena a telegram such as I have read to you here? And isn't it significant that he should under his personal written signature send to us the authorization of these men, whose authority has been questioned here by the prosecution?

Now, gentlemen, let me recall to you a little bit 4298 more about the position of the Secretary of the Interior. We have heard a great deal about this price level. And we have learned an awful lot in the last few months about it. You remember when we came here first and the case of the prosecution was coming in that that level was marked there (indicating) without explanation and you—and from it you were to draw suspicions and inferences that there was something wrong, that there was something evil, that there was something impure, that there was something rotten.

But we have learned a lot of things since then. That is the line the Secretary of the Interior calls the desired parity, the desired line.

Now, Mr. Lewin doesn't agree with me, and I think Mr. Lewin is sincere about it, and I am not going to question anything about it, and I am not going to try to make fun of his description or anything else. I am going to deal with it as a sincere statement.

Now, he says, Mr. Lewin says that this line here (indicating) is the line of virtue, and this line here (indicating). is the line of evil.

Now, let us see about that. What does this line rep-4299 resent? It represents from the unquestioned testimony of this case as an unhealthy line, as a subnormal line, a line that is destructive of the social and political body of the nation, a line that represents bankruptcy, destructive competition, unemployment, and all the evils that follow from it.

Now, this line (indicating) that he calls the evil line is what the Secretary of the Interior called the desired parity.

What is the desired parity? Why does he call it the desired parity? It is because that line is a line of health, because that line is not built by artificial means. That line was built how? That is no thin, rose line. That is a line strongly fortified. By what? By stanchions of legislation, such as Congress enacted in the Connally Act to keep out illegitimate oil, by treaties among the states by which they agreed to control by proration the outlet of their oil, by the administrative pools of keeping down allocations so that major companies during the period of the code, so that major companies would be forced to buy in order to firm the market, by, gentlemen, by the maintenance in the administrative body under the Secretary of the Interior of men who saw to the enforcement of the Connally Act, men who kept their hands on the valves in the state to see that the law of supply and demand would 4300 be maintained.

I say it was a line of health. It was a line upon which men could walk as self-respecting men with proper standards of living under a system that we believe should continue to be the American system.

Now, gentlemen, we have talked an awful lot about economics. We have talked an awful lot about price levels, but we have got to talk something also about the human element in this case.

Gentlemen, you are dealing here not only with corporations, which, after all, are only dead things, and are alive only as they are lived by the men who run them. But you are dealing with human beings. You are dealing with men who move and breathe like yourselves. They have their families and they have people who are interested in their welfare and who are sitting today here to see what you will do with them.

Now, gentlemen, you saw two of those men upon the stand. You saw Mr. Arnott, and you heard the description of him by counsel for the government. I don't believe you agree with that description. He was a young fellow who started out as an office boy and under the merit sys-4301 tem we used to believe in in this country as being a desirable system, he was able to work himself up to a position of responsibility and of honor.

He was upon that stand, and you saw, as I believe, a man of conviction and of character and of integrity. Whatever these gentlemen (indicating counsel for the government) may say about him, evidently the President of the United States thought he was a good man to have on this committee, and evidently when Mr. Ickes saw his whole code was in danger thought Mr. Arnott was a good man to pick to assume this great responsibility of trying to get these various factions that the Secretary speaks of to cooperate together to aid him, Mr. Ickes, in bringing about this desired parity.

Gentlemen, you saw Mr. McDowell on that stand. Are these—well, these gentlemen here at this table (indicating government counsel) must have thought he was telling the truth the way they dropped him on cross-examination. Didn't he impress you as telling the truth. Didn't he strike you as an attractive, honest fellow? He said he was a lieutenant in the War and he looked like a good lieutenant. He looked like a fellow who would take care of his 4302 men. And those are the kind of men that are here.
But you are entitled, before you go to your jury room to see what manner of men there are here that you are going to pass on.

Well, gentlemen, you remember when these men were first called together they were told that you had a solemn duty to perform. Now, today when you get in that jury box you know you don't shut out all your knowledge and all your experience. You take it with you, and you need it there. You need it right here now.

And, gentlemen, we see a new depression and we see a new call issued to the businessmen of this nation to come and sit with the heads of their government. Now, a little over three years ago the roll was called for these men.

Now, in this court of justice, because they answered that roll call, I am going to call now their names and ask them to stand so you can see them.

I wish you gentlemen (addressing the defendants) as I call your names would stand and remain until I ask you to sit down, and when I call them—I think they are 4303 all here. They are all here except four, Mr. Seubert, Mr. Moran, Mr. France, and Mr. Phillips. And I think, Your Honor, I am right in saying they have been excused for illness or because—

The Court: Mr. Phillips and Mr. Seubert are ill and have been excused by the court. Mr. Moran and Mr. France were excused by the court for business reasons.

Mr. Donovan: With those exceptions, Your Honor, and gentlemen of the jury, I will call these names:

Mr. Allan Jackson. Mr. Edward J. Bullock. Mr. Charles L. Jones. Mr. Charles E. Arnott. Mr. H. T. Ashton. Mr. A. G. Maguire. Mr. Bryan S. Reid. Mr. Harry D. Frueauff. Mr. H. E. Brandli. Mr. O. J. Tuttle. Mr. Harry J. Kennedy. Mr. L. T. Cramer. Mr. Henry M. Dawes. Mr. C. B. Watson. Mr. R. H. McElroy. Mr. Alexander Fraser. Mr. P. E. Lakin. Mr. J. W. Carnes. Mr. Edward L. Shea. Mr. Noel Robinson. Mr. J. W. Warner. Mr. Robert W. McDowell. Mr. Fred L. Koopman. Mr. A. M. Hughes. Mr. W. G. Skelly. Mr. I. A. O'Shaughnessy. Mr. Arthur V. Bourque. Mr. Edward Reeser.

4304 Gentlemen, (addressing the jury) these are the men who stand accused. Look at those men and ask yourselves these questions: Are they men who would barter their reputations for any petty thing such as this? Are they men who would sell their souls for any price?

Gentlemen, all through this country today you are being looked upon as the conscience of this nation. When men are called upon in a solemn duty to respond to the need of their country.

You give that answer. You say to these men, "You go without fear and without reproach." And you say to these men and to this country by your verdict that "It is unthinkable that men should be punished for doing the very thing that their government asked them to do."

Thank you, gentlemen.

The Court: We will take a recess at this time.

(Thereupon at 11:10 o'clock A. M., a short recess was taken.)

4305 Thereafter, and on January 20, 1938, the Court made and entered an Order granting the Motions for Directed Verdict, at the close of all the evidence, of the defendants Dewey K. Chamberlain, Thomas Fitzgerald, H. A. Gardner, and Clyde M. Boggs.

(Said Order is printed at page 2477 of the Record.)

Thereafter, on January 20, 1938, Mr. Hammond E. Chaffetz, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, on behalf of the plaintiff, the United States, made his closing argument to the jury. Such closing argument is as follows:

4306 CLOSING ARGUMENTS ON BEHALF OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Argument by Mr. Chaffetz.

Mr. Chaffetz: May it please the Court, gentlemen of the jury.

I am not unaware as I commence to reply to those most brilliant arguments of the defense lawyers, that I have a terrible burden at this moment to overcome.

But, gentlemen, the day we started this prosecution, a long time ago, when Mr. Lewin and I first came to Madison to present this case to another jury, to a grand jury, we were just as conscious then as I am at this minute that our burden would be a great one. We knew then, as we know now, that we would be pitted against the best, the most brilliant, the most able lawyers that money could buy.

But that did not frighten us. Why? Because we knew that our cause was a just one. We knew that if we worked hard enough so as to learn the facts ourselves, so that we knew what it was all about, what it was really all about, then we knew that we could by the same kind of hard work get those facts—I mean the real facts, the true facts—across to this jury; and we knew if we did that that we would meet with success, that we would further the ends of justice, no matter who the lawyers were who opposed us.

And so, gentlemen, I ask you in the furtherance of your own duty to listen to me—and I will be just as brief 4307 as I possibly can—while I contrast the facts as I see them with the facts as you have heard them during the last two or three days.

When the arguments were concluded on yesterday, I began to wonder whether in fact the price had gone up at all in 1935; I thought perhaps it had gone down; but I look at these charts and see that the prices are as we said they were when we started. The price did go up in the spring of 1935, and it did stay on a flat plateau for six or eight months like it had never done before in the history of the oil business, and then the prices went up again in January.

Now, that is where we begin. And I am going to ask you gentlemen to trace with me the true facts as to the way those prices functioned, to develop with me whether there was any illegal factor that entered into those prices, and, gentlemen, to find out with me whether those defendants who stood before you this morning did not know what the law was—did not know what the law was, I say—and did not do what they did knowing that what they were doing was illegal; and I am going to prove it to you before I sit down.

But first, gentlemen, don't let yourselves be deceived. Colonel Donovan stands before you this morning and says this (referring to chart) is the price the government wants, and this (referring to chart) is the fair price.

4308 I say to you, gentlemen, the government does not want this price (referring to chart), the government does not want this price, (referring to chart). This price (referring to chart) is the price of high profits, as I am going to show you.

They talk about parity. I will show you what parity means. It means millons of dollars to the defendants, and I am going to prove it to you. But I don't care if it means millions of dollars to them if they can make it honestly. I don't care how many millions they make, and I don't care how high that price goes. And I will say to you, gentlemen, that if there were any subversive practices, any abuses in bringing the prices to that point, I don't care if the defendants eliminated those abuses—I think they should, and I should like to see them do it.

The price we contend for, gentlemen, is the fair competitive price brought about by fair and honest competition among the great corporations of this nation.

If hot oil brought that price down there (referring to chart), anything that was legally done to eliminate hot oil, we of the prosecution are all for it. If distress gasoline brought that price down there, and if the defendants in a legal way purchased distress gasoline, you would never have heard from us. And I will show you in a few minutes that they knew how to buy distress gasoline legally 4309 if that is what they were trying to do.

Mr. Lewin told you in his opening argument, and I confirm it, that any one of these corporations, or all of them, could buy just as much distress gasoline as they wanted to, they could buy more than they needed, they could remove the distress gasoline from the market, provided they did it in a lawful way, and not for the real purpose, through a combination of controlling the prices of gasoline artificially and illegally, as I am going to show you they did.

I think you must have wondered as you heard the arguments of the preceding two days, how it was possible that the defense lawyers could make such plausible arguments on the facts after the very forceful and convincing argument that Mr. Lewin had made in the opening. And I think I can tell you why that was possible.

In the first place you notice this; the defense lawyers referred to very, very few of the documents that were offered in evidence by the government. We offered hundreds of them, three or four or five hundred, I don't know how many; hundreds of them.

They say, gentlemen of the jury, pay no attention to these gossipy letters.

Does the vice-president of Shell Corporation gossip with the president when he writes him a report as to what 4310 the company was doing and what the course of prices is, and why?

Do they just gossip with each other?

When Jacobi writes weekly reports to his boss, the defendant Maguire, and copies of those reports are sent to the head of every division of Socony-Vacuum, was Jacobi gossiping with them, taking a little time off, or was he telling them the facts for their consumption so that they would know how to run their business on the basis of it?

I say to you, gentlemen, that if I were in your place and I wanted to know what happened in 1935, what I would like to see are the letters that these men wrote, in which they set forth what they were doing, and I take what they said at the time in their letters against what they tell me on the witness stand after they have been charged with crime.

I will illustrate what I mean by reference to that Sus memorandum, but first, gentlemen, let me tell you something about that Sus memorandum. You heard Mr. Brazeau and Mr. Thomas time and time again say that the government had that Sus memorandum for eighteen months and did not bring it out until the last day of the trial.

Gentlemen, do you know where that Sus memorandum was during all that time, where it was kept? It was right here in this room, in the Clerk's files, marked as an 4311 exhibit for identification by the government. And when did we offer it to be marked for identification?
In the very first week of the trial. Did we conceal it? Do you remember the day when Mr. Hale took that stand? We had some three or four hundred documents marked at one time, and among them was exhibit 376, the Sus memorandum. We conceal it? Gentlemen, whose document was it? Was it ours? It came from the files of the Sinclair Refining Company, one of the defendants.

And you remember this: We were perfectly willing to start our case on March 5th so far as the Mid-Continent buying program was concerned, and that was because it was on March 5th that action first took place. It was at that meeting on March 5th where they divided up the independent refiners and assigned each other dancing partners. We were willing to start then, but the defense said no, the government won't let in all the facts; we want to show what really took place, and to show what really took place you have got to start not March 5th, they said, you have got to start in January and February.

They put McDowell on the stand to tell you what took place on February 11th. And you remember that cock-and-bull story he told you about the independent refiners, and how they stood around at that time and these major oil company representatives talked about the needs of the independent refiners. They had the Sus memorandum.
4312 The Sus memorandum was a written document, written at the time, written on February 11th, the day the meeting took place, and it told what took place at that meeting. If they wanted you to know what took place at that meeting the Sus memorandum was in those files over there (referring to Clerk's files).

Did they mention it, did they ask McDowell about it, did they tell you of the Sus memorandum, a contemporaneous writing of what took place at that meeting? And if they did not, why didn't they?

Mr. Thomas had the audacity to say this: The government knew all the time that what was said in there was not so. Didn't I ask Mr. Sus on the stand, "Is everything in there the truth, and didn't that transpire at that meeting?" And he said "Yes".

And who was Mr. Sus? He was a high official of the Sinclair Company. They could have called him throughout the eight weeks in which they put on their case.

Gentlemen, do they want you to know the facts, or do they want you to believe the stories that they have been trying to tell, changing them, changing them from time to time, until the story they now tell you in their final argument differs very materially, as I am going to show you, from the story they told when this case first opened.

I want to disabuse your minds of something else be-4313 fore I commence my argument, and that relates to the position of Mr. Ickes, Mr. Frey and Mr. Fahy in this case.

4314 I have no quarrel with one single word that Mr. Ickes uttered. And I am going to show you what he said, and let you decide whether what he said is inconsistent in one iota with the position that we take here.

I have no quarrel with anything that Mr. Fahy said or did; his record, as I am going to show you, is clear. He warned Mr. Arnott, I say, on three occasions, about the anti-trust laws. And not as Colonel Donovan said this morning—I think what he said is this: He said, "Mr. Fahy asked Mr. Arnott about the anti-trust laws, and Mr. Arnott said, 'well, here they are. What do you think?' ".

No, oh, no. That isn't what Dr. Frey's testimony was. What Fahy said was, "Well, now, what about the anti-trust laws?" And Arnott said, "I am doing this on my own responsibility. You forget about the anti-trust laws."

Dr. Frey—I was out of patience with Dr. Frey when he was on the stand, because I didn't think he was fair with me. I didn't think that he was telling all the facts, as he should have told them as a fellow Government official. But when he left the stand, gentlemen, he had told all the facts.

And I am not disputing the facts that he stated. The 4315 defense is. After they put Frey on the stand and he told the whole story, they put Arnott on the stand to say that Frey wasn't telling the truth.

While I am on that, let me tell you what Frey did say. You heard Colonel Donovan this morning. You heard him read to you that letter of July 20th, 1934, and he said to you in all solemnity, "Gentlemen, this letter, which I place over here (indicating), this letter is the thing McDowell relied on; it is the thing Arnott relied on." You remember that. "If not for this letter, this case would never have started."

What did Dr. Frey say about that? Remember, I asked Dr. Frey this question:

> "And do you recall at the March 12th meeting that it was definitely stated to Mr. Arnott in your presence that the letter of July 20th gave him no authority, that he had no authority under the Code, and anything that was being done by him in respect to buying programs was being done by him on his own responsibility?
>
> "Answer: The 'anything that was being done by him on his own responsibility' was made on March 12th."

So we have that. Arnott said, "He is doing this on his own responsibility; he is not relying on the Government." 4316

But we have more. At record page 1307.

"Question: Now, you told us at that meeting there was some discussion with respect to buying programs, is that right?

"Answer: Yes.

"Question: And I ask you whether at that meeting, with respect to buying programs, it wasn't stated to Mr. Arnott in your presence—stated to Mr. Arnott in your presence—that he had no authority under the Code or under the letter of July 20th to operate any buying programs?

"Answer: I don't know whether that statement was made exactly that way, but that subject matter of that type was incident to the conference.

"Question: And that was the substance of what was said to him?

"Answer: Yes.

"Question: In your presence?

"Answer: Yes."

The Court asked this question, "by whom?" The Court wanted to know who said it.

"Answer: Mr. Fahy."

Now, gentlemen, that takes that letter of July 20th 4317 out of this case. You will remember how that letter of July 20th got into this case. We objected to it, and the Court sustained our objection; the Court ruled that that letter had nothing to do with this case, because on its face, all it authorized Mr. Arnott to do was to deal with the subject of retail price wars—which he did do, and which he did successfully. And he was congratulated by the Government for doing it. And we never quarreled with him about it. We never made any complaint. We stand with Secretary Ickes on that, and we say with Secretary Ickes, "On that which you were authorized to do, you did a good job. It was perfectly lawful; you were authorized to do it; and there is no complaint." But that was all that letter authorized him to do.

But so much had been said about that letter, that we thought the jury might get the wrong impression from the Government keeping it from you. And so we, as you will recall, offered that letter so that you could see for yourselves just what that letter said. And you have that letter, to take with you to your jury room; and you see what that letter says. And when you have read that letter, and then compared it with the testimony of Dr. Frey which I just gave you—and I say I believe Dr. Frey; I am not quarreling with him; they are quarreling with him; they are 4318 the ones who say he is not telling the truth, and Arnott takes the stand to say that that never happened—compare it, as I say, with the testimony of Dr. Frey, that it was definitely stated to Mr. Arnott in the presence of Dr. Frey that he had no authority under that letter with respect to buying programs; that he wasn't working under the Code when he was running these buying programs; that he was doing that on his own responsibility.

Now, how does that make me, as a Government official, feel? Here is a man that comes to the Government, comes to a Government officer, comes to a group of Government officers, and says to them: "I am doing this on my own responsibility. You don't have to worry about it. I am not acting under your authority; it is no concern of yours." But then, when he is charged with doing that very thing, what does he do but come in and try to put the blame on the Government, "Why didn't you tell me to stop?"

Now, if Arnott and his associates were not men of education and training and business training; if they were men without advantages, then you might very well say, "Well, they didn't know what the law was. They thought they were doing what was right. Since they thought they were doing what was right, it doesn't make any difference 4319 what the law was. We will acquit them."

But no, gentlemen, these men are too smart for that. They know what the law was; they knew what their rights were. They have been operating under the anti-trust laws, they and their predecessors, since the Sherman Act was passed in 1890. And there is one thing that every school child knows—when you leave school, you know that the thing the Sherman Act prohibits is combinations of large corporations, acting together to regulate the price. That is one thing you never were able to do under the law, and you can't do it today. And they knew it.

And they knew more than that, gentlemen. They knew, as Mr. Arnott testified, that in the fall of 1934, while all this hot oil was flowing in here, the Government had experimented with some buying programs; and Secretary Ickes, on November 11th, 1934, had suspended them. He said, "No more." And why? Because they were illegal. And I asked Mr. Arnott on the stand whether he didn't know that; whether he hadn't heard that Mr. Ickes said that even a program run by the Government, Mr. Ickes had no authority to do it under the Code. And Mr. Ickes himself said that he didn't have that authority, and pub-4320 licly declared that his own activity was illegal.

That, gentlemen, explains why on the March 12th conference Mr. Arnott didn't come to the P. A. B. and ask for approval. How was he going to get approval if the Secretary of the Interior himself had publicly announced, three months before, that you can't do it lawfully?

And I am going to read to you in a few minutes from the Allocators' minutes, in writing, the very words of Mr. Arnott himself. I am not going to do it now; I am going to do it later. I am going to read you his own language, to show you that he knew exactly what the law permitted, and what it didn't. And he said it there publicly—not publicly—he said it to the group that were there. Other defendants were there, Carnes, Noel Robinson, Buckley was there, and a group of others. He told them in his own words what he thought could be done under the law—and we will compare what he said could be done with what they did do, and see whether he didn't know all the time that what they did do was a violation of law. And that, gentlemen, will explain why they didn't want the Sus memorandum in here; because the Sus memorandum shows what they did do, what they set out to do, and it shows that what they set out to do was exactly what Mr. Arnott at the Allocators' meeting knew they couldn't do lawfully.

4321 I want to say another word about the documents, and then I am going to take up the indictment and proceed with my argument.

Mr. Thomas made this argument to you. He said, "Gentlemen, don't pay any attention to those documents. People who are engaged in a conspiracy,"—he said, "don't write documents, and don't leave them around where the Government can get them." And he asked you to infer from the fact that they had written these things, that they must have thought it was lawful.

Now, gentlemen, that argument damns his own clients. Because you will find, as you go over these documents, that those documents were written by only some of the companies, and not others. You will look in vain for a document from the files of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana—although the evidence shows conclusively that the Standard of Indiana was in this thing with all the rest of them. Do you think it possible that, for a year and a half, these buying programs were going on, as admitted by the defense now, and no official of the Standard of Indiana had any occasion to even write a pencil memorandum to anybody else in that company about them?

Where are such memoranda, if they were written?
4322 They didn't keep them. And why?

Think of the Mid-Continent Company—McDowell's company. We know that he was the most active individual in those buying programs during all that time. You will search the record in vain for any of the documents from that company's files. I think there were one or two rather inocuous documents. As Mr. Thomas says, that shows they must have known what they were doing was illegal, because they didn't keep any record of it—that is his argument.

Take the Continental Company. I can't remember—I think there may have been one or two isolated documents from the Continental Company file. And I am not sure whether they were found in the Continental Company's files; I think they were found in somebody else's files. Why didn't that company keep any memoranda of what they were doing? Mr. Thomas would have you believe—and I agree with him—they probably thought this thing was of questionable legality, and they had better not leave any documents around.

And, gentlemen, how did we get those documents? Did the defendants bring them in and give them to us? Not on your life. They came here pursuant to a subpoena, issued out of this Court, directed to each of those 4323 corporations, which said, "You bring us the documents described in this subpoena, or else." That is how we got them. We got them by order of the Court.

And when we had them here, they were all here in this court room. Mr. Thomas says, "Why, we have nothing to hide. All of our documents are here before you." He didn't bother to be consistent about his argument—he made whichever argument sounded best at the time. "You have got all our documents here," he said, "we have nothing to hide."

Gentlemen, you can remember how difficult it was for us to get those documents into evidence. Every time we got up with a batch of those documents and those files in our hands—objection, objection, objection; hearsay, gossip, every kind of objection that these lawyers could imagine. If they had nothing to hide, if they wanted you to see those documents, would they have objected so strenuously every time we tried to offer them in evidence?

And I say to you, gentlemen, if you want to know the real story of what took place, I say to you, start with the

Sus memorandum; read that, and then take up the first four hundred exhibits in this case, offered by the Government, and read them one by one and you will get a 4324 picture of what Colonel Donovan calls "enlightened self-interest."

What is enlightened self interest? It means enlightened selfishness; it means do things for yourself in an intelligent—I think he said an "intelligent self-interest"—in an intelligent way.

Now, gentlemen, it is perfectly all right under the law for each of these corporations, acting alone, to act in its own intelligent self-interest. But when a group of companies, controlling seventy-five per cent of all the gasoline sold in this territory, combine together for the intelligent self-interest of the whole group, that is what the Sherman law says you can't do.

Now, there was another type of argument that was made over and over again—and it sounded awfully good as it was made, and I want to expose it.

You remember, Mr. Thomas said to you, "Now, the Government charges the fixing of retail prices. They said that we agreed together to fix the retail prices and, he said, "there is not one bit of evidence in this case to show that there was any agreement on retail prices—not one bit of evidence." And he emphasized it.

Of course, he was right, in the way he put it. He even read my own statement in the course of the trial,
4325 made in the presence of the jury and the defense lawyers, where I said frankly, "If that is what you are worrying about, if you think we are charging you with sitting around a table and agreeing on a uniform retail price, don't worry, because that isn't what we are charging" And he read that to you with a great amount of emphasis, and he said, "That proves conclusively that the Government hasn't proved any agreement to fix retail prices."

We never charged such an agreement. And the easiest way, gentlemen, to make an effective argument, either before a court or a jury, is to set up a make-believe case, set up a case which the Government didn't charge, and say, "The Government didn't prove it." Of course we didn't prove it, because we didn't charge it.

And Colonel Donovan yesterday in all seriousness said to you: "Gentlemen, the Government charges here an agreement to fix prices." He said, "We have got to look at the indictment to see what it charges, and that is what it charges." And, he says, "When the Government charges an agreement to fix prices, they have got to show that these people sat around a table and agreed on particular prices, that they set specific prices and abided by those prices." That is what he said. And he said, 4326 "There is no evidence in this case of any such agreement."

No, there is no evidence in this case of such agreement, because that isn't the agreement we charge. You would be awfully surprised to find evidence of a different kind of agreement from the one we were claiming.

And, in addition to that, he said this to you in commenting on the argument by my colleague about affecting price —an anti-trust lawyer, one of the leading members of the anti-trust bar, talking to a jury whom he says he is trying to help to understand the facts—and he says this to you: "Gentlemen," he said, "why affecting the price—every transaction affects price. That can't be the law."

Well, now, Mr. Lewin didn't talk about every transaction affecting price; that wasn't the kind of effect upon price that he was talking about. He was talking about a combination of big companies, controlling a substantial part of the business, acting together to affect prices—and that is illegal.

4327 So I say, gentlemen, that was the kind of argument I am exposing to you now. You can understand with me why those arguments may have seemed to you so plausible as they were being made. The argument made by Mr. Thomas sounded very good, when he made it.
He said this. He said, at the March the 5th meeting not even all the conspirators were there. Now, he says, if this was a conspiracy, at least all the conspirators would be there. You wouldn't think only half of them would be there; they would be all there. That sounds convincing, doesn't it?

Now, gentlemen, I hate to labor the Sus memorandum, but you look at the Sus memorandum, and what do you find? You find that at the meeting on February 11th, which just preceded the March 5th meeting, they were all there. Sus says so in so many words. He said all the major companies were all represented. Under Mr. Thomas's theory if they were in a conspiracy they would all be there. And they were all there, exactly as he says they would be if they were in a conspiracy.

And why weren't they there on March 5th? I will tell you why. Because on February 11th they had already indicated what they were going to do. You remember Sus said each one of them there agreed to take the surplus —to take the responsibility, he said, of taking the 4328 surplus of each one of the independent refiners who were on that list. There is where the conspiracy was hatched.

And then, when you come to the March 5th meeting they didn't all have to be there. Those who were there picked out the dancing partners that they wanted, and Jacobi himself testified that the remaining ones of them undertook to call those who weren't there and tell them which independent refiners they were supposed to take. And they had already agreed a month before that they would do so.

Now, gentlemen, I realize you have been here a long time, but I have got a number of points I have got to make, and I will ask you to be patient. I will be just as fast and brief as I possibly can.

The Court: Would you rather continue for twenty minutes?

Mr. Chaffetz: I would just as soon, and adjourn to an earlier hour.

The Court: I think you had better go on for another twenty minutes.

Mr. Chaffetz: (Continuing) Before I finish; I am going to refer to the indictment and I will tell you what it is we did charge; and then, gentlemen, I am going to 4329 take up those documents I referred to and I am going to show you exactly what was done. I am going to show you exactly what was done was just as what we charge in the indictment. I am not going to deal with any phoney charges or any trumped-up charges.

I will deal with the charge that I told you about when I faced you for the first time in opening this case. I am going to show you that the evidence amply and completely sustains that charge. I am not going to stop there. I am going to go on. I am going to deal with profits and with costs. I am going to tell you something about costs and about profits, from this record. And I am going to deal with this question of parity and expose that once and for all. I am going to discuss with you the subject of jobbers.

I was amazed as these gentlemen stood before you two days ago, each of them in succession, repeating to you. "gentlemen, what we did was for the benefit of the jobber. It was good for him. He liked it."

Do you believe for a moment that if this thing was good for the jobber that they couldn't at least find two jobbers out of the four thousand who do business in this territory who would come and sit before you for five minutes and say to you, gentlemen, we like this thing. This was a good thing for us. They didn't even 4330 bring two; they didn't even bring one.

Now, apply your common sense, gentlemen. These jobbers do business with them. They know them all. They are in contact with them every day. There are thousands of them, and it stands to reason, is it good sense that if this thing was for the good of the jobber, if the jobber benefited by it, that they couldn't find any jobbers to come here and tell you so? Why, there are a number of jobbers right here in Madison. They could just have invited them in, they know. We brought a whole succession of jobbers,—jobbers doing business with them. They knew them; knew them for years. Did they ask any one of those jobbers whom we brought whether they didn't like this thing; whether this thing wasn't a good thing for them. They didn't dare.

We tried to go into the question of how this thing would affect the profits of the jobbers, and we were prevented from it by objection. I am going to deal more fully with the question of jobbers later in my argument.

I am going to deal with Mr. Beroth, and I am going to show you how outrageously,—outrageously,—a corporation lawyer can stand before a court and jury and slander 4331 an innocent and honest citizen because he comes here as a witness for the Government. And I am referring to the argument that Mr. Brazeau made; that labored, difficult argument that he made to try to prove that Mr. Beroth was a hot oil man. He didn't prove it. I am not so angry at him for not proving it, but to think of his going out of his way to label Mr. Beroth,—you saw him on the stand,—as a criminal, as a dealer in illegal oil. Not by any evidence. You know, gentlemen, that Mr. Beroth—I didn't intend to deal with this until later. I am going to do it now.

Mr. Beroth was the first witness called by the government, four months ago. If they could have proved, with all the money and resources they had, and all the help they had, if they could have proved that Mr. Beroth was a hot oil man, don't you suppose that before this trial was over they would have had that proof here? And that is what they tried during this whole trial to prove,—that at least one of our jobbers was a hot oiler,—and they couldn't do it.

Talk about fairness; talk about trying to prejudice and poison the minds of the jury. Look at that!

I am going to tell you something else. When Mr. Beroth left this stand the defense reserved the right to cross-examine him further, and he was sent home to study his 4332 records and get any additional information that counsel wanted that he didn't then have, and Mr. Beroth held himself in readiness throughout the entire remainder of the government's case. And I said here, before I closed our case, I said to the Court, "Mr. Beroth is waiting and ready to come back for further cross-examination if the defense want him." They didn't want him, because they couldn't have proved a thing with him on the stand.

They waited until the evidence was all closed, until they were in the middle of their final argument, and then they spring this dastardly attack about Mr. Beroth being a hot oiler,—and you can't believe it.

Mr. Vaughn, another liar out there. A witness for the government. A liar. Their witnesses were honest, wholesome, truthful, fair-minded citizens. Mr. Vaughn—gentlemen, I wouldn't have put a witness on the stand, and you will believe me, unless I really felt that his story was truthful in its entirety. I will tell you how I knew that Mr. Vaughn's story was true.

When he told this story, and it is a fantastic story, about being in Mr. Meece's office, and Mr. Meece told him that Fanshier of the Chicago Journal of Commerce said if all this gasoline in the hands of brokers was bought up, 4333 it would raise the price in the Journal,—that does sound like a very important story, if true. What would you do if you were in my place? You would go to look at the Chicago Journal of Commerce to see whether the price did go up. If it did go up, that would tend to indicate that the story was probably true, wouldn't it?

Well, that is what I did. And when Mr. Vaughn was on the stand. When he showed—had this document before him which showed that the transaction was on the 18th of September, printed documents at that time, there can't be any question about the date,—and then I looked up at the graph showing the trend of the Chicago Journal of Commerce prices. And there you are (indicating). On September 18th the price was three and five-eighths. And the next day, after this gasoline was bought up, the price went up to four and three-quarters. Does that sound like Mr. Vaughn was telling the truth?

And then Mr. Meece was called here the next day. He hurried up here overnight to prove that Mr. Vaughn was a liar and he had telephone bills to show you that there was no long distance call to St. Louis. I reminded Mr. Thomas yesterday that when he asked Mr. Vaughn the question the first time, he said he didn't know whether there was 4334 a long distance call. All he heard was that the stenographer was told to call the Shell Company, and he didn't know whether it was the Shell Company office in Chicago or St. Louis.

Why go to all of the trouble of getting telephone bills, and what not to prove it was not a long distance call? If that was one isolated transaction it might not be so important. It is significant. You remember my cross-examination of Mr. Meece. I said, "Didn't you on a lot of occasions during 1935 discuss with the Shell Company and other major companies the purchase of gasoline from brokers?" He said, "I don't remember." He remembered this transaction to the detail; the minute; whose office it was in; what was said. But he could not remember whether throughout the year 1935 he didn't have a whole lot of those transactions with other major companies.

Well, we have since refreshed his recollection for him, because Mr. Lewin read to you in his argument, the document, and I say it is this document that contained the facts, taken from the office of the Shell Oil Company, which says this. McDowell, in a meeting asked certain companies to take up any surplus gasoline moving from brokers. He said there was some. This was May, 1935, May, three 4335 or four months before that transaction of September.

What does that document say? The Globe Company agreed to participate and to take up to forty cars of any such gasoline that showed up in Chicago. And that is in writing.

Was Mr. Meece telling you the truth or was Mr. Vaughn?

Here are some other things I am going to talk about before I finish. I am going to talk about this question of secrecy. I am going to refer again to what was said in our opening statement to you. And I am going to show you what I mean when I say secrecy, not what the defense means.

If you are in a partnership with the government and if you have got nothing to conceal, gentlemen, if what you are doing is open and above board, you, when you report it to the government, you tell them all the facts. That is what you do if you act above board and knew what you were doing was lawful, and you were doing it for your country. You would tell them everything, wouldn't you?

I am going to trace with you, gentlemen, exactly what was told the government and compare it with what was done. I am going to show to you gentlemen that what was actually done, the things that they didn't want to know 4336 were done, were done in the closest kind of secrecy. I am going to point out to you gentlemen, this; that the only real evidence we have of what took place at any of those meetings was the Sus memorandum and the allocators' minutes. They are the only two documents we have which were written contemporaneously, which purport to report what actually took place there. And if we didn't have the Sus memorandum, neither you nor I would know today what actually took place at that meeting.

They said we must have believed Mr. McDowell, because we didn't cross-examine him. No, gentlemen, we had that Sus memorandum before us. And we had two alternatives. We could have used that Sus memorandum to cross-examine Mr. McDowell and say, "How come Mr. Sus says this, and you say something else?" Why waste time? We thought when our turn would come, we would offer that Sus memorandum and you would decide for yourselves which was the truthful one, what Sus reported to his company, in writing, or what McDowell said. That Sus memorandum shows secrecy better than anything else that I could show you, for two reasons, first, because, as I say, it is the only document that is in writing, of what took place there; and the only people who were there were these twelve or fifteen major oil companies. No public meetings. No government representatives. Just the companies we allege to have 4337 participated in this conspiracy.

It shows secrecy for another reason. It shows facts which these gentlemen have tried to deny during this whole trial and tried to conceal from you. And before I am through I will propose this question to you. If they tried to conceal those facts from you, and didn't want you to know about them, do you suppose that they told the government about them? Very obviously, no.

I am going to go beyond the question of secrecy and will take up again the relation between these people and the government officials and show exactly what was—. I am going to conclude by proving to you, I am sure, beyond any doubt, that what these people did, they knew all the time was illegal. And particularly, when the Code expired, when the Code expired, then they knew. Then they knew that even the legitimate authority that they had, they didn't have any more. If the Court will permit, I will deal with that right now.

We come down to the expiration of the Code. They did have a lot of legitimate activities. There was a P. and C. Committee with a lot of powers, regulating wages, regulating hours, stabilizing retail prices, regulating hot oil. Any number of things. What does Mr. Franklin and Mr. Shatford tell you the P. and C. Committee did? They 4338 stopped to function. Why? Because they no longer had authority. They were actually acting under the Code. They had power, legitimate, clear-cut authority. What they did was exactly what the government wanted them to do. But they didn't think that they had any authority to continue, and they stopped.

What was Mr. Ickes' position after the Code went out? This letter that Mr. Ickes wrote to Mr. Arnott, after the Code, thanking him for his service,—and I say to you, gentlemen, that Mr. Ickes is a gentleman; and this letter is a letter of a gentleman. He had worked with these people during the code. They had done a lot of legitimate and good work, and he thanked them for it, which any upright public official would do. I will call your attention to the fact that this letter was written before the Department of Justice has exposed the facts; before the Department of Justice had found out what these people really were doing. And there isn't one scintilla of evidence in this entire record which would indicate that the Secretary of the Interior had any real idea at all of what they were doing. If he did, if he knew that the Department of Justice was charging these people with a violation of the law, he wouldn't have written any letter to Mr. Arnott, telling him this 4339 violation of the law was a good one. He wasn't talking about that here at all. What he was talking about here was the legitimate stabilization activity. And in this letter of July 20th he said he should do, and could do the kind of thing that Mr. Frey said. That was made clear to Mr. Arnott what he was authorized to do. I say, not the kind of thing, buying programs, which Mr. Frey said. That was made clear to Mr. Arnott he had no right to do. If it was made clear to Mr. Arnott at the meeting in May that he was not working under the Code and that anything he was doing with respect to buying of distress gasoline was not a Code activity, then you can't take a letter from Mr. Ickes, talking about Code activities, and say that that approved what Mr. Arnott was doing.

But this is what I want to call your attention to at this time. This is significant, gentlemen. He says this. "Through the invalidation of the Code" that is, the Code was no longer legal, "your activities as a Committee"—and he is talking about the Stabilization Committee—he said,

> "your activities as a Committee now have been brought to a close."

Does that sound like Mr. Ickes is telling him to keep on functioning? "Your activities"—he is talking about even lawful activities,—even the fixing of retail prices in these little localities. He said even that is brought to a 4340 close because the Code is over.

And then he says this. This is significant. "And my own"—meaning my own authority,—"and my own as Administrator"—Mr. Ickes' own authority—"have become limited under the amended National Industrial Recovery Act, to research and review, with such advisory assistance as may be useful to state authorities, to the industry, and to the government."

Here is Mr. Ickes, telling Mr. Arnott, after the Code went out, that he, Mr. Ickes, no longer had any authority. The only authority Mr. Ickes had left when the Code was out was for research and review, with such advisory assistance as he could give.

Now, gentlemen, if the invalidation of the Code left Mr. Ickes without any authority, how can these people come before you and say, "We thought the government wanted us to carry on."?

The Court: We will take a recess now until two o'clock.

(Whereupon, at 12:20 o'clock P. M. a recess was taken until 2:00 o'clock P. M. of the same day.)

4341 Mr. Chaffetz: May it please the Court, and gentlemen of the jury.

I think you will appreciate that I am really making every effort to move along as fast as I can. I have got a lot of ground to cover. Mr. Crawford wants to add a few remarks when I have finished. I will be as quick as I can.

Before lunch I said something about Mr. Beroth, one of the government's witnesses. You know they called him a liar for a certain statement he made on the stand. He said there were times in 1935 when the majors bought up all the gasoline in East Texas, and he could not buy any.

Now, let's answer that by statements made by these people themselves. Here is Mr. Warner writing to Mr.
4342 Collins of Tide Water, and this is what he said:

> "These periodical disturbances, however, have been less over the last six or eight months because of the regularity in the East Texas area."

And Jacobi on October 18, 1935, says this, in writing to Maguire:

> "Many buyers who have depended on East Texas > as the source of supply for their gasoline requirements have had to seek supplies in other areas in the last ten days."

Does that sound like Mr. Beroth was a liar, when he tells you under oath that there were times in 1935 that he could not get gasoline down there? That was what Jacobi was telling his own boss in 1935.

Now, at recess I was stating that if these people were really in good faith, if they thought they were doing something under the code, wouldn't they have stopped? Wouldn't they have stopped when the code stopped? I point out to you that the P. and C. Committee itself stopped to function, even though its activities were of unquestioned legality. They were doing real code work, dealing with wages and hours. Why couldn't they continue if they had authority to continue?

Mr. Ickes writing to Mr. Arnott after the code said:

4343 "I assume your committee was stopped."

Did he say to stop because under the new N.R.A. he didn't have any authority?

I want to read you what the defense witness, Mr. Franklin, said when he was asked on the stand by the Court whether he stopped when the code ended, and here is what Mr. Franklin said. You remember he was chairman of the P. and C. Committee, or at least one of the members of it; I don't remember whether he was chairman at that time, This is Wirt Franklin, and here is a question from the Court:

> "You said they held office until the expiration of the code. When did the code expire?"

And he answered, on the decision of the Supreme Court, May 27, 1935.

> "Q. That is what you had in mind?
>
> "A. Yes. The committee continued to function for a few days after that, but more to wind up its affairs than anything else."

And then this answer:

> "We realized that decision meant that we no longer had authority."

Now, the P. and C. Committee, of which Mr. Arnott was a member, realized they no longer had authority, Mr. Ickes no longer had authority.

4344 And then in addition to that, gentlemen, the Congress of the United States had something to say on the subject.

They read you newspaper articles where the President says he does not want people to go back carrying on unfair practices or bad practices; nobody wanted them to engage in bad practices, and this is not a question whether they could engage in bad practices. This is a question whether they could combine and control the price of gasoline when they did not have any authority; and here is what the Congress of the United States said. After the Schechter decision which held the N.I.R.A. unconstitutional Congress passed a new law June 8, 1935, which has not been referred to here, and it came to my mind because Mr. Ickes referred to it in his letter to Mr. Arnott in which he says:

> "Under the new N.R.A. my authority now has been limited to do nothing but advise and continue the service."

And what did that new law provide? It provided for certain exemptions. It said if you did anything, had any agreement or any code that was approved under the N.R.A., that anything you did under that code or under that agreement, if it was approved, was exempted under the anti-trust laws, and you could not be prosecuted under the anti-trust laws.

4345 Now, Congress in June, 1935, took that power away from the President and from Mr. Ickes, and said hereafter the only kind of agreement you can have under a code which will be exempted from the anti-trust laws are those putting into effect the requirements of section 7-A, including minimum wages, minimum hours, prohibition of child labor; and prohibiting unfair competitive practices.

In other words, you could have a code which dealt with wages and hours, or you could have a code which prohibited illegal practices, a practice that was a violation of law, like unfair advertising, and other kinds of practices which are illegal under the anti-trust laws.

Why did Congress pass this law? Because it wanted to reverse the policy of the N.R.A., and it said, "We are no longer going to have any broad exemptions from the anti-trust laws." Now, the only exemptions you can get from the anti-trust laws are the ones I have referred to.

Now, do you suppose those gentlemen did not read that statute? Do you suppose they only read the newspapers, and did not know those laws? Mr. Ickes specifically referred to this when he wrote to Mr. Arnott on July 25th and called his attention to the fact that his own authority was cut down under that law.

They put the case before you on the question of good faith. They say, Don't look at it whether we were technically violating the law or not, but look at our good 4346 faith. They say, "What would you do under the circumstances?" And I say to you, what would you gentlemen do?

If you were doing it to maintain the price, and the code went out of existence, the P. and C. Committee stopped operating because it did not have any authority, Ickes did not have authority, and then Congress says you can't do it again, we won't permit it, and then you go on just the same doing it.

And there is another circumstance, gentlemen. They said it was a good thing and they thought they ought to keep on doing it. Mr. Arnott testified when he was doing that he was trying to soften as far as he could the activities of the code. He said they were engaged in trying to prepare another code. They thought if they had a code they could do not only what is in the code, but anything else they thought was desirable.

They could not have the N. R. A. code any more. That was out. They went to the Federal Trade Commission to get a code. But, gentlemen, did they tell the Federal Trade Commission they were going to continue to combine, to control, to regulate that price? Did they ask in that new code for permission to authorize the purchase of one gallon of distress gasoline? Did they mention the subject of distress gasoline in the new code? No, Mr. Arnott admitted that himself on the stand.

4347 Here they are dealing with another body of the government. They said, "The government wanted us to continue to do this thing." If they thought that, wouldn't they have gone to the Federal Trade Commission and said, "We want a provision in there which authorizes us to purchase distress gasoline."

Now, I know why they did not ask the Federal Trade Commission for that authority. They knew they could not get it, just as they knew they could not have gotten approval under the N.R.A. in the first place for the kind of thing that they did, for the very same reason they never asked the N.R.A. for an order of approval of what they were doing. And they never asked for it on that point. And that is what I ask you gentlemen; if they had only stopped when the N.R.A. went out, then they could say "We thought we had authority under the code. Whether or not we had, we were in good faith, and we really thought the government wanted us to do it."

But the fact they continued under the code, when every indication was they did not have authority—if they looked to Congress, if they looked to Mr. Ickes, or at the Federal Trade Commission, they would have found that now the N.R.A. is out of the picture, the anti-trust laws must be enforced—the anti-trust laws which it is my duty to enforce must be enforced.

4348 Despite all these indications that they had no right to do this thing, they continued to do it.

4349 And, gentlemen, you realize that the Code only covered about three months of this conspiracy. They would never have been here in this Court today if they had stopped when the Code was out. But they continued on, month after month after month, long after the Code went out, away down into 1936, and they didn't stop until the grand jury of the United States in this District began to investigate. Now, I ask you whether that shows good faith?

And then what did they do? They were more effective after the Code than they had ever been before. Just look at the way that price line stood (indicating on chart). And there was no Code, no allocations—it is just as level as can be. Do you think these men are just simple-minded enough to think that the Government wanted them to do that? That the Government wanted the oil companies, without any Government supervision at all, not responsible to any Government officer at all, to go on regulating the price of gasoline month after month? I don't think you will believe that for a minute.

Now, I want to come back to where I had intended to start this morning. I told you how the defense lawyers had characterized the indictment and said what we 4350 charged, and they told you what they wanted you to think we charged. I am going to tell you what we charge, just as I told it to you when we started this case.

What we charge is this: We point out to you that the major companies as a group have from eighty-five to seventy-five per cent of all of the gasoline sold in these ten Mid-Western states; practically all of it, they sell. We pointed out to you that a large part of that gasoline is sold under contract to jobbers; the exact percentage isn't important, whether it is thirty per cent or forty per cent; but a great lot of it, billions of gallons is sold to the jobbers under contract. And those contracts provide that the basic price the jobber is to pay shall be determined by the spot market, as reflected in the trade journals. The jobber, when he wants to know what price he has to pay for his gasoline, looks at those spot markets, and he pays the average of the averages of the prices published as those spot market prices.

So that, if the spot market price, that determines the price that the jobber has to pay—we pointed this out, too, in the indictment, that the retail price also is pegged on to the spot market price. Because, as the evidence shows here, the market leader, the Standard of Indiana, 4351 which first posts the new price, which others normally follow, has a policy whereby the retail price is based at five and a half cents, roughly, above the spot market price. So that that spot market price in Oklahoma fixes the price of all the gasoline sold at retail here, the retail prices, and also the price of all gasoline sold at wholesale to jobbers.

And we point out in the indictment that if the defendants wanted to raise the retail price and wanted to raise the price to jobbers, all they had to do was to raise the spot market price.

Now, I am going to show you, gentlemen, that what I say to you is true, and again I am going to read from a document to illustrate what I have in mind; that is, how, when the spot market goes up, the retail price goes up and the price to the jobber goes up.

This is a document, Exhibit 489, from the defendant F. L. Koopman to the Budget and Operating Committee of the Phillips Petroleum Company, dated March 22nd, 1935:

> "Gentlemen:
>
> "Assuming that it will only be necessary to purchase approximately 225,000 barrels of motor fuel 4352 after April 1st in order to cover our shortage, of which 50,000 barrels will be coming from the Barnsdall under contract, we recommend the cancellation of the contract to take effect on May 1st, purchasing the other 175,000 barrels, as Unique and '66' gasoline," that is their regular gasoline,—

> "—to support the tank car market.
>
> "In this connection much has been done to advance the market, and with east coast refiners having a program to purchase surplus East Texas gasoline over the next four months, we feel that still further advances can be made in the tank car market and a resultant increase in the service station price."

That means the retail service station price. So that this man knows, as all oil men know, that if they can raise up the spot market price, the retail price will follow it upward. That is what the indictment alleges.

We didn't say they sat around a table and agreed that the retail price of gasoline should be twenty cents today. We didn't say that the Standard of Indiana, when it posts a retail price, first consults with the other companies 4353 to find out what retail price should be posted. That wasn't the claim. The Standard of Indiana, acting alone, is perfectly free to post any price it pleases, and we don't complain about it, and we don't care how large or how small the Standard of Indiana Company is. It isn't their price that we are attacking in this case. It is when they act together with other people, with other companies, some almost as large and some smaller than themselves, to raise the tank car price in the way we have alleged, for the purpose of raising the price to the jobbers and for the purpose of raising the price that the retailers pay in this area—that is the thing the indictment charges them with doing.

And I am going to show you, if I can, just how that works. But, before I do that, I am tempted to compare this recommendation of Mr. Koopman's to the Budget and Operating Committee, where he says, "let's buy on the spot market, because we have already helped the price up, and we can help it some more"—with one that he wrote on February 8th, 1935, with reference to natural gasoline, which isn't dirctly concerned in this case, but it shows really what intelligent self-interest means. He says this—he has been talking about natural gasoline throughout the 4354 rest of the memorandum:

> "Our estimated sales for the month of February have been 1,200,000 gallons less than our purchases. Therefore, on taking this into consideration, we have very little interest in maintaining the present price structure. A decrease of one-quarter of a cent in price, balancing sales against purchases, saves the Phillips Petroleum Company approximately $3,000,000. Due to the fact that No. 26 and U. S. Motor are the same price today, our purchases exceed our sales, and further, we stand a chance of losing money should we buy additional gasoline to support the market, we recommend that we let the market take its own course, and not purchase any gasoline at this time."

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Chaffetz, that is $3000.00, isn't it, instead of three million?

Mr. Chaffetz: $3000.00, I beg your pardon—"Save Phillips Petroleum Company approximately $3000.00." I am sorry.

Now, what does that illustrate, gentlemen? It means this: We point out in our indictment that these defendants sell the great bulk of their gasoline in this area at 4355 retail and to jobbers, based on the spot market price;
and we allege that, just by buying a little gasoline on the spot market, just a little bit, they can raise up in that way the price of the gasoline that they sell up here—because it only takes a little bit of gasoline—the spot market is very small, anyway. It only takes a little purchase of gasoline in the spot market to make that spot market price go up; and automatically the wholesale price goes up, and the retail price goes up. And that is what I think Colonel Donovan means when he says that for their intelligent self-interest in the case they should help to raise that price.

But the Phillips Company, when it was buying natural gasoline, found out that the situation was reversed. They were buying more than they were selling. They were buying it from the same independent refiners—the same ones, gentlemen. Were they concerned with whether they paid a fair price to the independent refiner then? No, they said, "Since we have to buy more than we sell, let's let that market go. If it goes down lower, we can buy it cheaper. We don't care about the natural gasoline market; we have to buy more than we sell in that market. Let the in-4356 dependent refiners worry."

And the market, gentlemen—what I am talking about is February; I am talking about the time when the market was down here (indicating on chart), and he says that the price of natural was about the same as the price of U. S. Motor. So the prices on natural were down, too. Defense counsel points to us and say, "This is the price the Government wanted." This (indicating) is the price that the Phillips Company wanted for natural gasoline, and they wanted to let it go down even lower, because they had to buy more than they were selling. But, on regular gasoline, or motor gasoline, the kind that they were selling more of than they were buying, on that, they wanted the price to go up, because every eighth of a cent that that spot price went up meant an eighth of a cent times millions and millions and millions of gallons that those companies were selling up here. I think that indicates very well what intelligent self-interest means.

Now, how did this thing work? The defense points to that chart up there, and they tell you that the prices that the jobbers were paying to the independent refiners were free transactions between themselves, the defendants didn't fix that price. Now, let's see if it works that way.

4357 Let's leave oil aside for a minute. Let's take the stock market, which some of us know something about—I, personally, know very little, but I think I can ilustrate my point.

Suppose a group of bankers who are interested in raising the price of, we will say, Allis-Chalmers stock on the stock market, and let's assume they are a lot of big bankers, corresponding to the size of the big oil companies you have here. They combine together to rig that price—and that is a term that is used in the stock market, I understand, to rig that price.

Do they have to buy up all the Allis-Chalmers stock that is in existence? No. They have to buy more of it than is being sold, in order to make the price go up. They can do it in several ways. They can buy it up higher than the current market, and that will make the price go up fast. But suppose they didn't buy it higher than the market; suppose that they bought just at the market price, but bought a lot of it, enough to make the price go up. That price would go up, whether they paid above the market or whether they paid at the market. It isn't the price that you buy it at that would make that stock go up; it is the fact that they 4358 buy it, and prevent that stock from being sold to other people at lower prices.

Now, suppose this thing is working, and these bankers were buying this stock for some reason of their own, they want that stock to go up. Perhaps they think the President would like to have the price of Allis-Chalmers stock a little higher than it was. So they buy that stock.

You and I—suppose we had some money and we wanted to buy some of that stock. We went to our broker to buy it. We would have an arm's length deal, and we would buy it at the market. But, gentlemen, would that market be a normal market? No. It was a market that was rigged by the buying that the bankers did. You and I might know it, or we might not know it. But, even though we say we buy it at the market, what the market that we bought it at was, it was a market that was brought about by these bankers, and these bankers had control of that market. They could have suddenly stopped buying, and the market would stop rising. They could have decided to dump all of their stock back on the market, and the price would go down. And the prices that you and I would pay would depend upon their artificial activity.

4359 Gentlemen, that is what we mean when we say in the indictment that the price was artificial and arbitrary. It was artificial, because you didn't have arm's length dealings between individuals, but you had a group, a powerful group on one side that was manipulating the market by concerted endeavor, buying together. And they were determining, their activities determined what you and I would have to pay if we went independently to buy gasoline.

Now, let me carry the illustration a step further. Suppose that these bankers paid a price above the market when they bought that gasoline; and suppose they got the trade journals to publish that higher price than they paid, and they did it for a purpose. The purpose being to get that higher price established as the going market price. In that event, the trade journals would be parties to their conspiracy, because the trade journals would be publishing their higher price for an illegitimate purpose, for the purpose of this group. And so the trade journals would be parties to that conspiracy; and you and I, when we were buying on the basis of the trade journals, or on the prices published in the trade journals, we would be buying at the artificial prices that the trade journals, 4360 acting in concert with those companies, with those bankers, brought about.

Now, I want to be perfectly frank with you gentlemen, and tell you now what we thought happened here, and that is what we alleged in the indictment, with respect to the oil industry.

We alleged in the indictment that the major companies, in their buying here, bought at above the market, or higher than the market; that they took the gasoline off the market at those prices, and got the trade journals to publish the prices that they were paying, so that the jobbers would have to pay those prices.

When we came into this trial, how did the facts develop? We put the trade journal men on the stand, and they denied under oath that they published the prices paid by the major companies at all. They told you that they didn't pay any attention to the prices paid by the majors, that they published only the prices paid by the jobbers to the independent refiners. We had no way to circumvent that proof, whether we believed it or not. And what did we do? We stood up frankly in your presence before the Court, and we said, "If your Honor please, we haven't made out a case against 4361 the journals, and we voluntarily request that they be dismissed."

Now, the defense would like you to believe that, because the trade journals are out of the case, that there is no case, because we allege in the indictment that the trade journals are a material, are an essential instrumentality in carrying this thing out.

Now, how did the proof develop? And that is the thing we are concerned with here, how the proof actually developed; and it was this: The major companies were buying at the market. The prices that they paid made the market go up, because, if they hadn't bought that gasoline at the market, that gasoline would have been sold in independent transactions between jobbers and refiners. Any one purchase on the market affects the market, as Colonel Donovan said. But when you have the combined action of all these defendants, working together, buying up all the gasoline that might otherwise be sold under the market, buying that up, that, I say, and as the evidence I am going to read to you will show, is what actually made this price go up, as the proof here now shows. And those prices were published in the trade journals.

The trade journals, as the evidence has developed, may not have cooperated with the major companies, but 4362 they remained the essential instrumentality, because if they didn't publish those prices, then the jobber contract prices wouldn't have been based on the prices that were published; and the Standard of Indiana couldn't have fixed its retail prices on the basis of those published prices. So they are the material, essential instrumentality in the case. They are the prices, the prices published in those journals, which the defendants were trying to raise. And the fact that the trade journals have proved that they weren't guilty is no indication at all, gentlemen, that the defendants themselves don't remain guilty exactly in the way that the Government originally charged. Their purpose was to get those prices up; their purpose was to get the trade publications to publish the rigged prices that they brought about. And you can see by looking at the indictment that the trade journals stand in a separate and different position (exhibiting copy of indictment to the jury).

You read through the whole indictment, through page 22, and you find nothing about the trade journals being implicated, except that they are named with all the defendants at the beginning. And it is only when you get to paragraph 24, which stands entirely separate, 4363 at the end of the indictment, that you find there is a separate and additional allegation, in addition to what we have already alleged the defendants did, then we say the trade journals also did something. And we say they came in and published the major company prices. Suppose you left this paragraph out of the indictment; the indictment still stands, and still charges a full and complete case against the remaining defendants.

And, gentlemen, keep this in mind: If it didn't, then the Court would have dismissed this case a long time ago. Because, if there was no case against the defendants without the journals, that would have been a question of law, and the Court would have decided it. The fact that we are still before you, without the journals, is all you have to know to know that the indictment charges a case without the journals, against the defendants.

And were we negligent—were we negligent in thinking that the journals were implicated? Let me read you a couple of things.

You remember the meeting that Sus reported. All the major companies were there that were participating in the major company buying program. And here is what he says, as to what they discussed at the meeting—4364 the major companies, oil men, people who had been dealing with those journals for years. If anybody knew about the journals, they ought to know about them. And here is what they say:

> "Each purchase of a car, from time to time, by these majors of this distress gasoline, would be recorded in the Journal of Commerce as an individual sale, and the number of these sales recorded would indicate an active market, and buying on an ascending market would tend to create a strong market."

So there is no question in the world, gentlemen, that they thought at the time they started this conspiracy that the trade journals were going to publish their prices.

I say, whether or not that is true—and you gentlemen don't have to decide whether that is true or not, because the trade journals are out of the case. Whether or not that is true, the purpose of the defendants was to get the prices up, the spot market prices which were reflected in the journals; and it doesn't make any difference to you now whether the journals published the prices paid 4365 by the jobbers to the independent refiners, or whether they published the prices paid by the major companies. Whatever gasoline was bought on that spot market during that time was bought at a price that was rigged by reason of the activities of these defendants, whose purpose in buying that gasoline was to make that market go up. And that is what I am going to prove to you, beyond any question of a doubt, this very moment.

As showing their purpose—this is January 4th, 1935, a Shell document, from Ruether to the Crude Oil Department:

> "Your telegram with respect to Rock Island offer gasoline prefer wait until general program arranged do buying as do not believe individual purchase will assist quotations."

The thing they wanted was a program that would assist quotations. They wanted to do some buying as a group, so that their buying would affect the price at which the independent refiners sold to the jobbers, so that that price would be reflected in the journals and then the prices that the jobbers paid would go up, and the prices that the retailers paid would go up.

I mention this to you in passing. That is one 4366 of the interesting things that transpired in this case. Jacobi, who was running this buying program as a member of that sub-committee all during this time, he was before the grand jury, and I think five times—I think he was there only three times, but that isn't important.

4367 Here is what Jacobi said, testified here, as to what transpired at the March 15 meeting. Mr. Lewin asked him, he wanted to know whether there was discussion, whether it was intended that the price in the trade journals should be brought up by their activities.

> (Reading) "Answer: We discussed the trade journal's prices. We discussed the price of gasoline that these major companies were paying. We felt that if the trade journals reported a—that if the small refiners reported a preponderance of sales to major companies that the trade journals would certainly take that as a trend. That must be true, because I understand the trade journals don't report major companies' sales."

He learned it right here in this court room. He didn't know it at the time before the Grand Jury. And this all through the time that he is operating what we called this conspiracy he didn't know it. At least, he said he didn't know it.

> (Reading) "Mr. Lewin: Q. Mr. Jacobi, you are telling us now, adding gratuitously what you now understand. I asked you about discussions > 4368 you had in March, and only that. Didn't you understand in March that if the major companies in this program paid higher prices, the trade journals would carry those higher prices if the transactions were in the preponderance?
>
> "The Court: That question is clear. Answer that.
>
> "A. If I said, that I certainly—well, I remember saying that or approximately that, Mr. Lewin, but if I said it in those words it certainly indicates that I didn't understand the methods of the trade journals.
>
> "Mr. Lewin: Q. I said was that the substance of your discussion, you and Tuttle and McDowell together in March, 1935?"
>
> • • • • •
>
> "The Court: Let me ask a question: How long have you been taking those two journals?"

The court is out of patience with him because although in the oil business he didn't seem to know at least what the trade journals did.

> (Reading) "A. Probably 10 years.
>
> "Q. And I suppose you had some knowledge of how they gathered their information that made up those quotations?
>
> 4369 "A. Some, but I testified—"
>
> He means before the Grand Jury.
>
> "—that I didn't know how they gathered the information, and governmental attorneys asked me, and I gave them the best information I could on it.
>
> "Q. When your committee had this meeting in March, you knew at that time that if the prices of gasoline in that field were raised, that they would be reflected in the quotations in the Journal?
>
> "A. Yes, sir, we felt they would for the reasons that I mentioned."

That is all that I think is necessary for this case. It doesn't make any difference whether they intended that the major company prices should be published, because in the upper graph up there—those in the upper graph up there, or whether the independent refiners' prices should be published. The important thing is what the indictment alleges as far as these defendants are concerned, is that they intended to raise the entire market so that the Journal would carry the rigged and raised price brought about by their concerted activities.

And now I want to discuss with you this, whether in fact, whether in fact this information of his didn't 4370 have the effect of making that price go up. You remember the testimony of Mr. Van Covern, who was called by the defendants, and he just expressed the opinion that he didn't think that the buying program had much effect upon price. Yes, there was a lot of testimony in this case about other factors that they said affected the price.

Before I get to that I am going to read a little of the documents again to show what the defendants at the time thought they were doing, what they said they were doing and how they thought that they were the ones in the buying programs that were making that price go up. Before we do that, I want to deal very briefly with these other factors that they referred to, and I am glad to get to the question of hot oil.

I was amazed! I was amazed when Mr. Brazeau, in his statement, talked about hot oil, and told you about hundreds and billions of gallons of hot oil that were flooding out of East Texas in 1934. And then he said in January and February, 1935, there was a lot more hot oil. And then he posed before you and he said, "Gentlemen, that was a situation that had to be dealt with."

Mr. Brazeau: I read from the record the exact situation.

4371 Mr. Chaffetz: "That was a situation that had to be dealt with," he said.

Now, gentlemen, you will recall that every witness on that stand for the defendants admitted that they didn't deal with anything, so far as buying programs are concerned, until after the Connally Act was passed and there was no hot oil.

Hot oil was out of the picture. And still Mr. Brazeau stood before you in that very appealing way that he has and talked to you about "hot oil". You see it makes it look as though when you are dealing with hot oil you are dealing with something that should really be dealt with and you stand before the jury and say, "Gentlemen, this is something that had to be dealt with."

They weren't dealing with hot oil. They weren't dealing with hot oil. Hot oil was out of the picture, because they knew at the time that hot oil would impede and prevent them from raising the price; so hot oil would keep the price down.

The hot oil, gentlemen, surely, was a thing that ought to be dealt with, a thing that the government struggled with for years, and it was dealt with by the government 4372 lawfully under a statute passed by Congress, the Connally Act, not by the defendants.

And then they talk about the flood of hot oil in January and February, 1935! The flood of hot oil! And they produced a witness on the stand here, Mr. Dyer to tell you how much hot oil there was in January and February. And what was his testimony? It astounded me. He said 116 cars that the railroad commission was able to locate in January and 287 in February of gasoline that moved in this territory. How much was there altogether, not only that moved into this territory, but moved anywhere out of East Texas? All they could find was 218—or, 118 in January and 317 or 318 in February.

Compare that, gentlemen, with the amount of gasoline these people bought in East Texas alone. They were buying 600 or 700 cars a month of gasoline.

You have heard witness after witness upon the stand painting this terrible picture of hot oil, ruining prices, coming in here with millions and millions of gallons!

118 in January and 317 total in February! Hot oil has not got anything to do with this. The only reason 4373 they talked about these millions and millions of gallons of hot oil was to impress you gentlemen in some way—I don't know what impression—with the amount of hot oil there was. And when it comes down to it there isn't anywhere near the amount that they would have you believe there was.

Take the question of increasing consumer demands. They say this: They say, as you come in here (indicating), as you come into the consuming season, that made the price go up, not the buying pool, but increased consumer demand. I refer to Jacobi's testimony on that. He was down here in the field, and it was his job to keep his company informed. And what does he say? Exhibit 683. This was March 25, 1935. I don't want to read the whole letter. I want to read only the part in which he uses these words—I know it is in this letter, but I can't find it.

4374 I will read Exhibit 684. Here is what he says. This is to refresh your recollection, because you have heard it many times. This is March 29th, 1935.

> "Demand from jobbers continues at a slow rate for several reasons."

Don't forget, gentlemen, that it is the jobbers who buy normally on that market. And here are purchasers who are supposed normally to determine that market. That makes the price go up. If the weather is bad they don't buy, and the price would go down. Here is what he says:

> "Demand from jobbers continues at a slow rate for several reasons. Jobbers North and West have had very unfavorable weather recently. Further, I do not believe that present market prices will hold. It is quite possible they may be fooled this year in this respect."

For two reasons, the jobbers were not buying, and it was their purchases that would make the price go up. One was bad weather. There was no increased consumer demand during this particular season. Other years there was an increase in consumer demand in the spring, but this spring, on these markets, there wasn't any. The jobbers were not buying, the weather was bad, and it continued bad 4375 until June.

They weren't buying for another reason. They suspected that there was a rigged market; that it was an arbitrary market, and they didn't think the price would hold. They were afraid it was being rigged, and whoever was rigging it would let go, and they would be left with a lot of gasoline on hand, and be stuck with it at lower prices. So he says, "I do not believe that present market prices will hold. It is quite possible they may be fooled this year in this respect."

He knew the prices were going to hold because he knew the buying programs were going to work and they were going to make the price go up.

I have here a series of letters, I won't stop to read them all, but there are other letters in which he discusses exactly the same thing. So this question of increased consumer demand making the price go up in the spring is out of the picture.

What else do they have to suggest? I think they had allocations and inventory control, before you. You remember Mr. Shatford was on the stand for a long time, and he testified at the greatest length, about allocations and how, under the Code, each refiner was told how much he could produce, and he told you gentlemen that because there was a regulation of production that would make the price 4376 go up; would make the price stay up.

Have in mind that allocations and inventory control that he talked about started in April of 1934 and was all over when the Code expired, at this point (indicating).

Now, if allocations were making this price go up, if allocations were making the price stay at this level, you would think when allocations were all over, the price would go down, if that was one of the causes that was keeping it up; and there were no allocations after the Schechter decision. It was all out. If that was such a big factor in making prices go up, you would think when the allocation was over the price would go down.

What happened? I know why the price didn't go down. It didn't go down because after the Schechter decision the major companies' pools worked all the harder and made the price go up instead. They raised the price one-eighth of a cent after the Code expired.

This is Exhibit 191, written by Mr. Lakin, an officer of the Shell Company, to the President, Mr. Fraser. He talks about tank car markets. This is dated June 14th, 1935:

> "The vigorous manner in which major marketers entered the gasoline tank car market after the Tank Car Stabilization Price Committee ceased to function, buying all surplus gasoline offered, led to further advances of ⅛¢ in the Group 3 gasoline price." 4377

They will tell you that allocations made that price go up. What made the price go up? Further increased purchases by the major companies buying surplus gasoline; so that when the Code was over, and there were no allocations and you would normally expect the price to go down, the major company buying pools not only prevented the price from going down, but they raised it another eighth of a cent.

This report here of a high official of the Shell Company to the President of that Company.

Oh, yes, I want to say something about retail price wars. There has been a lot said in this case about retail price wars and how terrible they are. I told you this morning that retail price wars were being dealt with by the Stabilization Committee under specific authority from the Secretary, under that letter of July 20th, 1934. They raged, not only in 1935, but in 1934. And those exhibits both show how low the price went in 1934,—retail prices were under that situation, which didn't exist at all after this conspiracy started. The retail price wars were practically cleaned 4378 up in December of 1934. So Mr. McDowell testified.
So Mr. Shatford testified. So Dr. Frey testified.

And then we have again this document, which tells what the real situation was with respect to price wars at the time this buying program started. I want to read you a letter from Mr. Marcell, General Manager of the White Eagle Division of Socony-Vacuum, to Mr. Arnott.

I will read Exhibit 311 first. I want you to note particularly what he said about retail price wars, to see whether this buying program had anything to do with retail price wars. He first has some social comments, which I won't bother to read.

> "On returning to my office, I find that you had a meeting here in Kansas City of the Mid-Continent refiners' group on March 1st; and I am sorry indeed that I happened to be away. Mr. Irwin reported that you had a very interesting meeting, and I believe the accomplishment was also quite good.
>
> "Mr. Arnott, I had a conference with our Marketing people yesterday about retail prices throughout our territory, and they reported that they are holding remarkably well, so this stabilization program has stood the test of the weak tank car price, and I > 4379 believe we are over the worst of the winter season condition."

In mid-winter, when conditions were bad, the retail prices have stayed up. There were no price wars through his whole territory, and he thought they were now safe because the bad conditions were over and they are coming into a better consuming season.

And then, on March 27th, 1935, Mr. Marcell again wrote to Mr. Arnott. Another meeting with his marketing people.

> "They complained a great deal about competitors selling Power Distillate and Kerosene at cut prices. Both of these products are sold in large quantities for tractor use. They seemed to think that nearly all of these lower prices were made by distributors suppplied by the Class B. refiners. They stated that the Stabilization Committees in the different states were working on the problem but as I understood it, they were not succeeding very well in stopping it to any great extent."
>
> "Last week we had all of our district sales managers throughout our territory in a meeting here at Kansas City. I had quite a conference with them > 4380 about prices, and they had practically no complaint about gasoline prices."

Gentlemen, this was March 27th, 1935.

> "except in the territory where there was trouble with the elevators. I do not remember when we had a meeting like this, where there was so little complaint about competitive prices on gasoline; so it shows that the market is quite well stabilized on this product."

The retail situation, gentlemen, just as the hot oil situation was taken care of and the crude oil situation was taken care of before these defendants started operating their buying program. They didn't operate this buying program to take care of hot oil. They didn't operate it to take care of retail price wars. Those things had been done successfully and under lawful authority. What was it that did make the price wars? I will skip over a few of these exhibits.

Buckley to Brandli. "Accumulation of this quantity of material, which otherwise would have been distress gasoline, is in considerable measure responsible for the difference between the price of three and one-eighth cents early in February and the low price of four and one-half cents f. o. b. refinery, which today prevails."

4381 In other words, Buckley says to his boss, Brandli, that the buying program is in considerable measure responsible for that price going up from three and an eighth to four and a half.

Van Eeghen, of Shell, to Fraser. "With improved seasonal demand in view today." They are hoping that the seasonal demand will improve, and a continuance of the buying movement and it is anticipated that prices will strengthen by approximately one-half cent over the next thirty to forty-five days. Both increased consumer demand and continuation of the buying movement to boost the price will go up half a cent.

Warner to Collins. The improvement in the market in the last few days is considered directly due to the cooperative efforts of major companies participating in the movement.

These gentlemen were not kidding themselves. These gentlemen were watching at the time the factors that made that price go up, and they are attributing it, in large part, to the activities of the buying program.

I could go on and read you countless of these. I don't think it is necessary. You have heard them so many times in this case. You heard these documents read 4382 as they were offered here.

The people who were closest to the situation at the time, they believed that their activities in these buying programs were what was making that price go up. And are you going to sit by and let a man like Van Covern, an expert, come on the stand and say that he didn't think they had anything to do with it,—they were temporary and incidental?

Another factor. They just didn't buy this gasoline, each of them acting independently, or as a group, at any price, that they could buy, as they would have you believe. Jacobi testified about his price recommendation, and I want to take a minute to deal with this,—there has been so much said about it. You remember that letter in which Jacobi said we agreed on a price of four and three-quarters cents for next week? He sent that to his boss. And Mr. Thomas reads that letter to you. He is worried about it. A serious charge against his people. Jacobi said, "We agreed." He was talking about the tank car committee. They agreed on a price of four and three-quarters cents the next week. What he meant was that was one of his recommendations. All the other companies participating with them should pay that, for gasoline, under the buying program. Mr. Thomas waved that 4383 letter before you and said, "Now Jacobi is entitled to tell us, in effect, what his opinion was about the price. He was reporting that they agreed together that this was the price that the purchasing companies were paying."

4384 And let us see how that works, and I have another document here that I want to refer to on that. (Examining exhibits.)

I am sorry, gentlemen. I can't find it—never mind. Here is the way that price recommendation worked—

(Exhibit produced by Mr. Lewin and handed to Mr. Chaffetz.)

That is it, thank you.

This committee met each week, some times more often, during this period. They decided, you remember, they had a survey supplied by Mr. Bourque, of all the surplus gasoline there was available, all of it throughout that whole territory; and they divided it up among themselves. And they then called the companies that weren't present, and told them which company's surplus they were to buy. You remember that. And they discussed the price. And then Jacobi would call the companies whom he reported to regularly, and would tell them what the recommended price was.

Now, gentlemen, not only did the major companies know what that recommended price was, but the independent refiners knew it too. They were in on this plan. You remember, at the March 5th meeting, Mr. Winget was present, Mr. Simmons was present, Mr. Boggs was 4385 present, and Mr. Cocanower was present—all independent refiners. They were working together on this thing. And they were told what these price recommendations were, and they knew, the moment that price recommendation was made, on Thursday of any week, that during the following week any gasoline that they couldn't sell at that price, the major companies would take off their hands.

Now, suppose you were an independent refiner, and you were in that position, selling gasoline on the open market; and you knew that any of your gasoline that you couldn't sell at four and three-quarters cents, these major companies would take from you—what price would you fix on the open market in your sales to jobbers? Would you sell to them for less than that? No. What you would do is, you would sell for more than that if you could, knowing always that if you didn't get away with it, if you couldn't get that price, the major companies would take it.

I want to read this document, Exhibit 176:

> "I have been in touch—"

this is written by Mr. Lakin of Shell, a high official of the Shell Company:

> "I have been in touch with Mr. Winget of Cushing Refining and Gasoline Company—"

4386 Mr. Winget is the man who was at that meeting on March 5th. This is dated March 8th:

> "—who tells me he feels that prices should move faster—that prices discussed should be reached by the 11th, and is quoting today, three and five-eighths and four and five-eighths cents on low and middle octane respectively."

Now, what does that mean? That means this: That at that meeting, they sat down there and they decided what price they were going to reach in the immediate future, what price they were aiming for. And they had a particular price in mind. We don't know what it is—we have never been told. Mr. Winget was never called to tell us what actually took place there. We do know that a price was discussed, that should be reached in the immediate future.

And then what happened? Mr. Winget thought that the prices ought to move up even faster than they discussed at the meeting. Suppose they said the price should be four and five-eighths on March 20th. He thought that was waiting too long; he thought they ought to move up faster, and so he is quoting, he is quoting a higher price today.

And that, gentlemen, is the cue to why prices
4387 by independent refiners to jobbers were some times higher on the same day that the recommendations were made by the major companies. The major companies agreed on a recommended price. The independent refiners knew what that price was. They might try to get an even higher price—they always knew they could get that price, because if they didn't get that price, the major companies would take it. So, what difference does it make where the dots are on that chart with respect to jobbers and consumers? The prices that the independent refiners who were in this conspiracy were charging to jobbers and consumers, they were determining by reference to what the major companies would pay them on these buying programs. So you always come back, when you want to find out what made that price, any price paid by any jobber on that market, you always come back to the major company prices, the prices paid by the major companies in the buying program.

I think I have said enough to convince you how this thing worked, and how the major companies worked together to make that price go up. I will mention one or two other factors.

As the price goes up, other people in the industry can see the price is going up, and they may suspect, or they may know what makes the price go up; and they may 4388 be invited into the market to buy gasoline, because they see the price is going up—as anybody would see who is interested in speculation, when you see a speculative market. And so the price may well have gone up on some days quicker than the major companies had hoped, because they were raising the price. Brokers—you remember, brokers have to make about an eighth or a quarter of a cent profit in order to sell gasoline; but if they can buy on a rising market, and buy today at three and an eighth, and sell next week at three and a half, they will come in and buy gasoline which they wouldn't otherwise buy, to keep for speculation so they can resell it at a higher price. And so a rising market feeds on itself.

Jobbers—there are letters here that indicate that the jobbers came in while this price was going up, and they bought additional gasoline, some times, perhaps, paying above the market. So that it may very well be that many of those jobbers who paid higher than the market during this time were paying it because they saw that the market was going up. Perhaps they knew that the major companies were running a buying program, and they knew if they buy it now, even at above the market, they would be able to sell it at still higher prices if the market continues to go up.

4389 And what does the evidence show on that? The evidence was read to you yesterday, that there was a large volume of gasoline bought by brokers in this area during 1935, you were told. And, as you look at those exhibits, to find out when those brokers bought that gasoline, you will find they bought the greater part of it, nearly all of it during this period (indicating). That exhibit was offered to show that brokers were able to get gasoline at any time; but when they bought it was right in here (indicating), because they could afford to pay the market, or they could afford to pay above the market, if necessary, to get it, because they saw the market going up and they were willing to take a chance, to speculate.

The thing for you gentlemen to keep in mind is that through that period from the first of March up until the first of June, Jacobi made six or seven or eight or nine price recommendations, and that is roughly the way the market went. For each time he made a price recommendation, that price went up. And it doesn't make any difference what other factors contributed to make that price go up—because brokers came in and bought, or jobbers came in and bought, or because independent re-4390 finers, anticipating a rise in price, went out ahead and sold at higher prices than the recommended prices, before the recommendation took effect.

He made those recommendations only during the period when the price was going up. He stopped making his recommendations when they reached the last stage—there were no recommendations at all during all of this period (indicating). That is a strange coincidence. And then, when did he make his only other recommendation? The only other time the price went up, and that was when there was a crude rise in January. The price went up a half a cent, and what was his recommendation? A half a cent.

I think, gentlemen, there is the complete answer, there is the complete story told to you for the first time, of exactly how this thing worked, and what were the real factors that entered into it. And you can only conclude that what made that price go up or controlled that price throughout that period was the concerted activity of these companies.

I want to refer to one other thing. You remember, when Mr. Shatford was on the stand, I was talking about the price in through here (indicating). He had said to you gentlemen on his direct examination that crude was level, retail prices were stable, and that would make any price stable. You remember, I said to him: "Suppose 4391 you were an independent refiner, and you had gasoline to sell. The market price was four and three-quarters cents, and you could sell it to a broker at one-eighth below that, for four and five-eighths cents; and you had a major company buying program in back of you, that would take all of your surplus gasoline, anything you couldn't sell somewhere else, for four and three-quarters cents, they would take it from you at four and three-quarters." I said to him, "What would you sell your gasoline for?" And he said, "Well, obviously, four and three-quarters cents."

So that all during this period, gentlemen, not only these defendants named in the indictment—but you have the testimony here of Jacobi, of McDowell, and all those documents to show that any independent refiner throughout the entire area who had any gasoline to sell, and which he couldn't sell at four and three-quarters cents, they came and took it from him. And not only did they take it from the independent refiners, whom they say they were trying to help, but even the brokers. If a broker had fifty cars of gasoline that he couldn't sell at the market price, they bought it from him. And why did they do it? To keep that market at that level of four and three-quarters cents.

And that, gentlemen, is why we say to you that this is not a normal, competitive market. We say 4392 to you that that was a rigged market, an artificial market; and that the price was rigged, artificial and arbitrary. It is the price that they were keeping there by their concerted combination of buying up any gasoline that was available below that price. They did it through that whole year, and I say again, in 1936, after the crude rise, they put it at a higher level, until the grand jury began to investigate this case.

And that brings me to the next consideration. It brings me to the question of what the Government likes. I said to you this morning this, gentlemen: That if there was free and fair competition, if these big companies were acting in competition with each other, I don't care whether the price is at that level (indicating), whether it is up here (indicating), or whether it is down here (indicating). The only thing that it is my duty to do as a law enforcement officer is to see that the law is complied with, and that whatever price is made is made in the course of fair competition among these large companies. They have got to compete fairly; they can't act in combination.

I think this: I don't think the price would have stayed here (indicating), if they didn't engage in this com-4393 bination. I think the price might have gone up some. But what would have happened if there was competition instead of monopoly? The price might have gone up during the high consuming season, and then when you get bad weather, when the consuming season is over with, the price would have gone down a little. You would have the normal fluctuations that you would find in any business where the volume of business depends upon changes in weather conditions and other changes in conditions.

It might be that in the peak of the summer demand, they might be making a high profit, a large profit because of the great demand. You can always raise your price if there is a demand for it. I don't care how much profit they made, if they made millions, if they made it legally, as long as they acted independently. And I wouldn't care if the price went up like this (indicating), and then came down, and maybe during the winter season they would lose a little money, when the price went down. And that is what you would expect to find. But, gentlemen, when you find a straight plateau like this, through good season and bad season, regardless of whether there was any demand for gasoline, any normal demand for gasoline or not—4394 gentlemen, then you know there is a monopolistic control of that price, and not what the defense refers to as the operation of free and fair competition. It just couldn't happen. And it never did happen in the history of the oil business.

While we talk about this price up here, which I say is the arbitrary and rigged price, and which they say is the reasonable price, let's see just what that price means to these companies. You remember this: When one of the defense witnesses was on the stand, I think it was Swensrud, Colonel Donovan asked him just what it costs an independent refiner to manufacture gasoline. And I objected—

Mr. Lewin: Franklin.

Mr. Chaffetz: It was Mr. Franklin, I am told.

I objected. I said this: "If we are going into any costs, we ought to have the costs of all companies." The independent refiner sells about ten or fifteen per cent of all the gasoline that is sold up here; the major companies sell eighty-five per cent. And if I am a consumer, buying gasoline, I don't want to pay what it costs the little fellow, the inefficient man to produce the gasoline. I want to pay the price that it costs to produce the great bulk of all the gasoline that is sold up here.

4395 And the Court agreed with me. The Court said, "Yes, you are right. If we are going to go into costs, we ought to have them all."

And Colonel Donovan, and I think the record will bear me out on this—Colonel Donovan said: "If the Court please, we are proceeding in our own way. We will prove the independent refiner's costs now, and we will prove the major company's costs later."

And did he ever do it? Did he ever do it? Not on your life. You won't find a suggestion in this record of what it costs the defendants to manufacture gasoline—except one, not offered by the defense, but offered by the Government, and I am going to refer to that.

First, let me tell you this: What Franklin said was this: He said it costs an independent refiner five and a half cents to manufacture a gallon of gasoline.

There is in the record a statement by Mr. Buckley, a letter written to his boss, in which he says:

> "The line between profit and loss on running dollar East Texas crude through a skimming plant is at present between four and a half and four and five-eighths cents per gallon."

Now, gentlemen, if you know what a skimming plant is, it is the smallest, the most inefficient type of plant.

4396 The man who runs his crude through a skimming plant has to waste valuable parts of the crude oil, which he never uses at all, because he doesn't have the efficient kind of plant to use it. And he can buy all his crude at a dollar and sell it at a profit, if he can get more than four and a half cents at this time, the time when Buckley wrote this letter—and that was April 20th, 1935.

But, gentlemen, do you want to pay for gasoline at the rate of what it costs that skimming plant operator, down in East Texas, to produce his gasoline, when the major companies, with their efficient plants, producing great varieties of products, hundreds of products—they use up crude oil now, you know, the way the meat packers use up the pig, everything but the squeal. They use it all up, and they get some return from every one of those by-products, and they make as much gasoline as possibly can be made from crude oil. And I say that is the way that the great bulk of the gasoline sold up here is made. I say we don't know what it costs them to manufacture that gasoline, except this: You remember this letter I had from Mr. Marcell to Mr. Arnott, and this is very, very significant, gentlemen—this is significant for many reasons.

Do you believe for a minute that Mr. Ickes was 4397 told what was in this letter, as to what it really costs to manufacture gasoline? Do you suppose they ever said to Mr. Ickes, "We don't need a price in parity. We know there is something about parity in the Code, but we can make quite a substantial profit, we can make quite a substantial profit if we never reach parity, even if we are a quarter of a cent or half a cent below parity"—did they ever tell him that? I say, not on your life.

This is what Mr. Marcell wrote to Mr. Arnott—this is March 27th, 1935:

> "It is almost too good to believe, the way tank car gasoline prices have been acting lately."

Almost too good to believe.

> "Our third grade price to jobbers is now four and an eighth cents, which is up almost a cent from the low point a few weeks ago. Mobilgas grade is strong at four and seven-eighths cents. The present prices are just about cost of manufacture by our plants"—

Let's see when that was. That was March 27th, 1935; that was away back here, at this point (indicating on chart). They were recovering their costs right there.

4398 > "So, if these prices can be strengthened a half a cent per gallon additional, it will mean quite a substantial profit for us."

Quite a profit for us if the price will go up a half a cent. Add a half a cent to four and seven-eighths, and what do you get? You get five and three-eighths cents. All right, when did the price reach five and three-eighths cents? This is regular gasoline—five and three-eighths cents, right here (indicating), here we are, about April 13th, at this level, gentlemen—

Mr. Lewin: The high.

Mr. Chaffetz: That is right. It is the low, which is at this point—no, it is the average, really. You remember, I asked Mr. Arnott whether it isn't the average that the jobbers pay for regular gasoline; they pay the average of the high and the low. So you really have to take the point where five and three-eighths is the average price, that would be right in here, about April 15th (indicating), five and three-eighths is the average price of regular gasoline. So, right in here (indicating), they were making quite a substantial profit on their gasoline. He was tickled to death with it—a half a cent for every gallon of gasoline his company was selling.

4399 Do you realize what a half a cent a gallon is to a major company refiner, when you consider the millions and millions of gallons of gasoline they are selling? Consider that a broker gets an eighth of a cent for his gross margin; he has to pay all his expenses out of that, and makes his living only on the difference between what he pays, between his cost and that eighth of a cent. The jobber gets two cents gross margin for doing everything he does; maintaining his bulk plant, paying his help, running his trucks, paying his insurance and his taxes and his losses, credit losses, all that sort of thing. And here, this company was making a half a cent clear profit on every gallon that was sold at this time (indicating), in April. And he says himself, he says, "It will mean quite a substantial profit for us."

And then what happened? Did the price stop there? No, it went away up here (indicating), gentlemen. And if he was making quite a substantial profit here (indicating), how many more millions of dollars, how many more millions of dollars was his company making when they got the price up to here (indicating), where they stopped after the Code went out, and kept it there throughout all that year?

Did they tell the Government that? Did they tell 4400 the Government that "we were making quite a substantial profit long before the price ever reached that point?"

And then there is another significant fact in this letter. I want to say this to you, gentlemen, in all fairness. This is a letter written by one company. It is a big company, it is the White Eagle Division of the Socony-Vacuum Company. They haven't offered any evidence as to costs of other companies; we don't know what they are. There is no reason from this record to believe that this company is in any different position from any of the other major companies. If they thought they were, when I asked Arnott that question, they would have asked him on redirect examination. They would have said to him, "Is there any reason why your company is in a better position than any other company?" They never asked that question. So, all we can assume is that there is no reason to believe that any one of these other major companies wasn't in exactly this same position.

But this is the significant fact, the additional significant fact that I want to refer to:

"The set margin of five and a half cents will not 4401 let our marketing department make any profit."

He is referring there to the five and a half cents that I referred to, between the tank car price and the retail price. You remember, I told you the retail price is usually five and a half cents above the tank car price. That five and a half cents, gentlemen, is all the jobber gets, out of which he keeps two cents, and turns three and a half cents over to the retail dealer. With that whole spread of five and a half cents, his marketing department can't make any profit.

> "But, if we can collect this full five and a half cent margin, I believe the department will just about break even. Therefore, if we can collect a profit on refinery sales, it will be a satisfactory showing."

And he made a very satisfactory showing; he collected a very handsome profit on his refinery sales, much more than he ever hoped for. All he hoped for was a half a cent increase, and it increased nearly a cent.

But the jobber, meanwhile, gentlemen, what was 4402 happening to the jobber? He had a maximum of five and a half cents to operate on. And this company, this company, with all its efficiency, competing with the jobber on that same five and a half cent margin in the marketing department, could just about break even if they got the whole five and a half cents. And what did the jobbers come in here and testify? They told you that when this price was going up, they weren't even getting the full five and a half cents; they were getting less than that, because of the way the provisions of their contracts operated.

I want to contract that situation of the true facts with the long-winded argument that Mr. Thomas held before you yesterday, when he said to you, "Gentlemen, do you realize that these contracts guaranteed the jobber a full five and a half cents?" he said, "Would you ever find another industry where the jobber was guaranteed a margin?" And he would have you to believe that the whole five and a half cents was some gross profit to the jobber. What they were guaranteed—and it was a maximum that they ever got—was the least, the least that they could possibly live on. And they couldn't get any more than that. Usually, when you think of a guarantee, you think that 4403 during some times that is the minimum of what they get, and that at other times, they could get more; so that during bad times they were guaranteed at least not any losses, and at other times they could make a profit. But that is all they could get, good times or bad; that was the most they could get. And that was just enough to break even on.

And, when this buying program was operative and making those prices go up, they didn't even get that. And that is why those gentlemen came here before you; that is why those gentlemen came here before you, to tell you that they didn't like the treatment the major companies were giving them. And that is why the defendants couldn't put on a single jobber to tell you a contrary story.

4404 Mr. Brazeau had the nerve to tell you, gentlemen, that we were trying to prejudice your minds; we were trying to poison you against them by bringing jobbers from Wisconsin to put them on the stand.

Well, if that is prejudice, I wish we had more of it. The reason we brought Wisconsin jobbers was because they were a type of men whom you know. You could judge them best. You could judge their sincerity. Mr. Bill O'Brien of Superior. Mr. Teige, from I think down here at Stoughton. They took that stand and told you that they were dissatisfied with the treatment the major oil companies were giving them. Will you believe them? Will you believe that they were crying out to you for help, or will you believe Mr. Thomas when he stands up before you and says, "Gentlemen, we didn't put jobbers on because jobbers are friends of ours. We are helping them. We work together. We look out for their interests and they have no complaint."

The Court: We will take a recess.

(Whereupon, at 3:25 o'clock P. M. a short recess was taken.)

4405 (Following the recess the Court resumed its session at 4:00 o'clock P. M., and the following proceedings were had:)

Mr. Chaffetz: May it please the Court, and gentlemen of the jury.

Counsel for the Phillips Petroleum Company called my attention to what I see was an error in the statement I made to you, and I am glad to correct it. You remember I said they bought natural gasoline from these same independent refiners. I did not mean to say, and I should not have said, the same ones mentioned in the indictment that sold regular gasoline; but I meant the same type. If I misled you on that I do want to correct it.

I want to conclude my argument about parity by leaving this thought with you; and it is the government's position in this case:

If they had gotten authority under the code to run buying programs to raise the price to parity, and they had acted in their authority, then we would not be concerned with whether they were making too much money, or not enough, or what they were making. That would have been the responsibility of the government officer who gave them the authority to do it.

What we say is, not having obtained the authority, acting without any authority, and taking the law into their own hands, they do not have the right to come before you and say "We raised the price only up to parity", which 4406 is referred to in the code. If they wanted to contend that the price to which they raised the level was reasonable—and that is not material in this case as the Judge is going to charge you; you do not have to find out how much they raised the price as long as you find out there was a conspiracy to raise it and they did raise it. That is all you are concerned with. But if they want to go outside the law and what is proper in this case, and make an appeal to you on the ground that at any rate if we did technically violate the law we only raised the price to a reasonable level—I say to you they cannot make claims about parity.

I say the way to do that is to come in and prove to you what it costs them to make gasoline, and say "We did not make any profit during this year", or "Our product was reasonable." That is the only way, if they wanted to do it, in which they could make any claim as to the reasonableness of the price.

They made no attempt to do it. They said they were going to do it, and they made no effort to show what their profits were, and I don't think they would want you to know in this case.

Now, there is only one other feature I want to deal with before I am going to say to you that we have proved 4407 our case beyond any question of doubt, and that is the question of power.

I would think, and I would think any reasonable man would think, that all you knew was the Standard of Indiana, and the Socony-Vacuum, and the Shell Company, and the Pure, and the Mid-Continent, and the Tide Water, and the Sinclair, Continental, Globe, Deep Rock—all those make oil companies, having together more than seventy five per cent of all the gasoline sold, have combined together—I would assume that any man on the street using his ordinary judgment would say that those companies, all of them acting together, for one purpose, had the power to raise the price, and I did not suppose that anybody would have disputed it. We never dreamed that the defense would try to dispute it in this case. More than seventy five per cent of all the business, acting together to try to get the price up, and they say they could not do it, they could not raise the price!

Not only that, gentlemen; the evidence is that in addition to those they had working with them all of the independent refiners who were the only competition they had outside themselves to speak of, and they were all working together with this group.

And that is important because, gentlemen, as you probably gather from this case, the only real competition 4408 that the major companies have is from the independents. The independent is the man who usually walks along his own path; he is hard to control, and that is what the big companies did not like. Ordinarily they are the ones that make the competition. The major companies can follow the leader, as they do; they can hold meetings as they do; they are a small group, and they can stabilize prices ordinarily if they have a mind to, and they do.

But it is the independent who supplies the competition. And so what did Mr. Arnott want to do before he was assured that they would have the power to raise the price?

He had to call a meeting on the 1st of March before this thing started, at Kansas City I think it was, and at that meeting he had the independent refiners represented from Oklahoma, Kansas, Louisiana, Arkansas, North Texas and West Texas, the entire Mid-Continent area. And he talked to them at that meeting and told them what he was going to do, and without one dissenting voice they all said, "We will go along"; and you remember the letter that he wrote to Mr. Marcell. I think I had it here; I won't take the time to read it.

He wrote to Marcell and he said, "Yes, we had the meeting, and it was a very good meeting; we are promised unanimous support, support of all of them there; we 4409 know they will all work together."

And he says,

> "If they will keep their promises"— something to that effect—

> "if they will all keep their promises then I think we can be assured of a real improvement in the tank car refining price."

Here it is; he is writing to Marcell. He says:

"Mr. Irwin"—who was at the meeting—"prob> ably gave you full particulars. Each company present agreed to join in our efforts"—

All of them—

> "and also to support the Executive Committee of their own choosing"—

Do you remember who that executive committee was, headed by Boggs?

> "who will sit in our major group meetings representing independent refiners. In this way we will have one group"—

They would have all of them sit together in one group—

> "and I think will be able to move forward even more definitely and constructively than we have in the past where this group was depending on Messrs. O'Shaughnessy and Majewski to keep them informed and represent them."

And so I say to you that practically not only all of the principal major companies doing business in this area, 4410 nearly all of them—there is Sun which does a little business on the Eastern end of the area in Michigan, and National which is a smaller company—all of them working together, and they have the cooperation not only of the fifteen refiners named in the indictment, but also of a large number of refiners who did not have any surplus gasoline, like the Kanotex Refining Company of which Mr. Boggs is the head; but they were cooperating.

Now, how do you cooperate in this scheme, which was not just a scheme to purchase distress gasoline? They cooperated by not producing more than they could sell at the going market price, and by keeping that price; and that, gentlemen, is what Mr. Arnott meant when he said they all agreed to cooperate. And that, gentlemen, is the clue, as I said this morning, when I said we are not talking about the right of any particular company to purchase distress gasoline. Any company that wants to can buy as much distress gasoline as they want to buy.

If they want to they can appoint a committee. Mr. Bourque's organization could do it, so that any independent refiner who has some excess gasoline that he cannot find a market for, can say to the association, "We have got some gasoline we would like to move", and anybody can buy that gasoline that wants to.

But that is not what we have here. That is not what 4411 they told the government they were going to do. All they told the government they were going to do was to have this committee locate where the distress gasoline was, and then each company would decide for itself, each major company stating, "We are buying any way, and we might as well buy this."

Well, they could have bought this distress gasoline, and it would have been no violation of law. But that is not what they want. They do not want to try to find a way of putting the independent refiner in touch with the major. They want more than that.

4412 If they had more than that, if they were to make that price—because, gentlemen, when the price was at this level (indicating) and when those independent refiners didn't cooperate with any substantial amount of gasoline being sold by them at below that price, not dumping on the market, this price would have stayed that way.

They had to have the full cooperation of the independent refiner, and they had it and Mr. Marcell said they got all the independent refiners' cooperation and each one of them agreed they would cooperate.

Cooperate in what? The independent refiners didn't have to cooperate in selling distressed gasoline. They were trying to get rid of it. They didn't need their cooperation. They were supposed to be getting help and supposed to help them.

Their cooperation was in working together with the major companies and raising the price and keeping the price to where the major companies thought the price should be.

I think that is the answer to the testimony of Mr. Swensrud, who is the only witness the defendants offered, a theoretical witness, as Mr. Lewin called him. Talk about 4413 capacity outside of the area! Which would come in and upset the price when it got to a high arbitrary and artificial level. This other gasoline would flow in here and cut the price down.

I don't know whether you remember Mr. Swensrud, but he is the man who was trying to tell us in answer to my question that when we buy gasoline we don't buy Shell or Phillips or Red Crown; we would buy gasoline where they have the best rest rooms. That may be the way he buys his gasoline, but I don't think any of us buy gasoline that way.

I mention that merely to have you remember him. You remember how long I questioned him. And the court took him on that. The court didn't believe that testimony and the court took him on that question and tried to get him to tell me the true facts.

But that witness came to the stand and expressed the opinion, and all you have in this record on that question is his opinion, that these defendants didn't have the power.

I say that it stands to reason that the mere fact of their size and the fact that they were working together and 4414 that they had the cooperation of the independent refiners in this area to keep this price up—I say, there can't be any question but they had the power.

Gentlemen, under Mr. Swensrud's theory when the White Eagle Division was giving the price up here (indicating) where they were making more than quite a substantial profit—you remember they were making more than quite a substantial profit here (indicating)—they were making more than that here under his theory, that company would go out and cut prices in order to increase their business. Did they do it. If they had done that that price wouldn't have stayed that way. But, no, they didn't do that. They were cooperating with the plan, and the plan called for maintaining that price and keeping those profits for themselves.

They talk about people outside the area, and Mr. Swensrud made much of that, people not in their territory at all, but coming in—he tried to tell us that his company could come into Madison and establish its reputation over night. If the price was high and arbitrary.

You remember when I asked Mr. Arnott, whether the Root Company was represented at that meeting, and he said he didn't know the company by name, but if they 4415 were in that territory, which they were, he was sure they were represented at that meeting.

There is another answer to Mr. Swensrud that was supplied by Mr. Arnott and that it wasn't a question of raising the price in the Standard of Indiana territory. He told us that what they were doing they were doing to the whole United States east of the Rockies.

So he said, "So, gentlemen, I am presenting to you a national picture."

And he described another pool down on the Gulf of Mexico, taking gasoline from New Orleans and the coast of the Gulf of Mexico which normally comes around and moves east, and they were buying that up and rigging the price in the east in the same way they were doing it here.

So any company that is getting the rigged price in the East in the form of another scheme, do you suppose that some other company is going to come out here and compete in the Indiana territory and try to break down the scheme here? Not a chance!

The answer to the whole question of power is the 4416 fact they did it.

If you were trying to decide whether they were doing it in the future, you might have to speculate. But if you look at that graph and all the facts I called to your attention, is there any question in your mind that they did it? If they did it, they must have had the power to do it.

And so, gentlemen, we have concluded what we think are the material facts for your consideration.

The law says, and I am sure that His Honor is going to instruct you accordingly, that where a group of companies control a substantial part of the business or where they have the power to raise the price and where they combine together for that purpose, it is illegal. If a company acts alone it isn't a violation of the law, but if they act together, they combine together, and if they have the power, and they raise that price, that is a violation of the Sherman Act.

Gentlemen, I have shown you that they have the power. I have shown you how they combined together, not only these defendants among themselves, but with the help of the little fellows, the independents. And I have shown you how they have raised that price and how they did it under the code, after the code, irrespective of any code.

4417 That is all we started out to prove when we came before you, and that is all we said we were going to prove, and we have proven it beyond a shadow of a doubt.

The defense tries to raise some other issues and issues which are not really legal issues. If you violate the law, you are not entitled to come in and say, "Well, we didn't know what the law was. We were acting in good faith. We thought the law was otherwise."

No, gentlemen, every man is presumed to know the law, and if he violates the law—as the court is going to instruct you—and it is your sworn duty—that is the oath you took when you were selected as jurors in this case—your oath was that you would apply the law as laid down to you by His Honor. And if we prove to you the facts which constitute a violation of the law, and if the court instructs you that those facts do constitute a violation of the law, then it is your sworn duty to bring in a verdict of guilty.

But, I say, they have tried to raise other issues. They have tried to persuade you, irrespective of the law, to find them not guilty on the question of good faith.

4418 And they say, "What we did, we did openly and we thought honestly and we thought legally."

I want to deal with that subject. It wasn't a legal question at all, but since they have raised it, I want to discuss it with you. And perhaps we were the ones that raised the issue because in our opening statement to you we said to you that what they did they did secretly and it took the Department of Justice months and months to find out what the facts were, and we thought we had them for the first time when we commenced to present them to you, and I say what I say to you in our opening statement is just as true now as it was then.

Consider, gentlemen, not one bit of evidence that anything that was done after the code was reported to anyone! Now, if you were in the Department of Justice and Mr. Beroth came to you to complain about a combination on the part of these companies, and you looked at the graph and you saw that level of prices (indicating) after the code—if you saw it during the code, the first thing you would think was perhaps the code had something to do with it. And you look at the provisions of the code to find out whether anything under the code authorized it, but, gentlemen, when we investigated the case, this is what we were looking 4419 at (indicating), and there was no code. It couldn't have been the code that did it.

And it wasn't until the grand jury investigated the facts in this case that it was discovered that without any authority, without any color of authority, without any possible claim of authority, these people were carrying on these activities all through the year 1935 and into the year 1936. Not only that, but when you go beyond and trace its origin to see how it started, what do you find?

You find in the records of the Interior Department or in the minds of any of the Interior department personnel knowledge of what these people were doing? I tell you what you will find. It is this that I refer to, gentlemen, when I say to you that these gentlemen when they started this thing knew what the law was, and they knew what they were authorized to do; they knew what they could safely tell the government what they were doing as being lawful and as things that Mr. Arnott told the allocators committee on March 15, and you remember he said that was exactly what he told Fahy.

And here is what he said, Exhibit 69:

> "Therefore, the question in all this is: If this is all put to work there are going to be no agreements,—"

Now, you see he knew there musn't be agreements.

> "—there are going to be no contracts with regard to prices or other conditions—"

4420 That is what he told him.

> "—There is going to be no group buying. It is going to be a matter in the stabilization work of individual companies looking at what there is in the way of surplus gasoline, and a company will have an opportunity to buy from a refinery that has some of that surplus gasoline, whatever it might choose to buy. It is designed that if they should decide to buy they would do it not spasmodically, but regularly, and so as to bring about, after having heard the condition and the proposals of these refineries, an established, well organized, current, dependable product made and bought."

Why did Mr. Arnott tell the allocators that this was his plan? Because he knew that if there was any other plan—he knew if there was an agreement to work together with commitments, with quotas, with allocations, or shares, where each one was committed or obligated to take its share, he knew that the only way that he could work a program like that was to submit it for approval. Under the refinery amendment of the code, under this amendment (indicating).

Section 6 of Article IV of the Code:

> "In order that the provisions of this article may not operate in such manner as to discriminate against small refining enterprises and in order to assist in > 4421 orderly liquidation of excessive gasoline inventories, the Planning and Coordination Committee may, with the approval of the President authorize suitable arrangements for the purchase of gasoline from non-integrated and/or semi-integrated refiners and the resale of same through orderly channels."

So, I say he was familiar with this. That was in the code. He knew if he was going to have a program that he had to get authority. Everybody knew it. I tell you why. Because the government had approved a program in the fall of 1934 and Mr. Ickes had suspended it because he thought that it was a program, even though it was approved by him, which was being operated in an illegal manner, and he suspended it.

That, gentlemen, is the history of what was really in Mr. Arnott's mind at the time that he started this program. Colonel Donovan, with great appeal, I thought, said to you this morning, he wanted you to place yourselves in the position those men were in at the time and tried to get you to think what you would do if you were in their positions. I submit the same question to you: What would you do? If Secretary Ickes on November 14, 1934, had said, "no more buying programs. The present program that is going on is suspended. It is illegal." I think he would—the record shows this—I will take that statement back.

4422 I said he said that there would be no more buying programs and the record shows he said, "The present buying program is illegal and it is suspended."

And Mr. Arnott, you remember,—I asked him that—I said, "Didn't you know Mr. Ickes said that to the public press, Mr. Ickes said that that particular program was illegal?"

He said, "Yes, I knew," and, of course, he did. Everybody in the oil industry must have known about it. And so Mr. Arnott thought he could get approval for that kind of a program, the kind he wanted. He said he goes through the form of saying, as he did, at the allocators meeting that "We are not going to have a pool or program. We are not going to have quotas. We are not going to have allocations. But it is going to be a matter for each company individually to try to state what it wants, what it needs and how much it wants to buy, and there will be a committee available, so that any major company who needs gasoline, who wants it, can find out where it is."

If that is all they did, there would have been no violation of the law.

I want to contrast that with what they told themselves what they were doing. Don't forget, gentlemen, that the conference with the government was on March 12 and 4423 the meeting of the allocators was on March 13 where he shows he knows, and he has testified to it that these gentlemen who were there, of telling them what the law is. He knew what the law is.

But when these companies get together in this meeting of February 11 reported by Mr. Sus—gentlemen, thanks to the subpoena power of the court, we have got the document here—if not, we would have to depend on Mr. McDowell's testimony as to what took place at that meeting.

I say, thank heavens, we have a copy of it, and I am going to read it again, because it does show what was really in the minds of these people, what they were really trying to do.

He says: "A committee at a previous Stabilization Meeting had been appointed of which Mr. Bob McDowell was Chairman to consider ways and means of establishing and maintaining an active and strong tank car market on gasoline.

"This committee rendered a report to the effect > that a movement is under way which will take the East Texas surplus gasoline off the market so that it will not be a disturbing influence in the Standard of Indiana territory."

That is what was stated in the argument of Mr. Brazeau that there was a program. He again referred to 4424 the small East Texas Association and said they were just selling gasoline to major companies.

There is a lot of testimony in the record where he referred to Arnott and Carnes—you remember what Arnott said in the telegram to these people. He said, "This plan must be finalized tomorrow."

This jury isn't going to believe this man didn't know of the plan of the East Texas Refiners. The scheme was to keep the East Texas gasoline off this market so as to enable this program in this market to work.

> (Reading) "A survey by the committee then indicated that the surplus gasoline, which would affect the Standard of Indiana territory only, amounted to 600 cars per month involving fifteen refining companies.
>
> "A report is attached which lists the refineries in the Mid-Continent Field who will have surplus gasoline. This report shows their capacity, their crude runs, their allocation, etc."

He meant at that time the allocation of production under the Code.

> "The program of the committee involves fourteen major companies, each selecting one or more of these fifteen small refining companies, and the major company obligating itself to take * * *."

4425 Obligated to take, mind you! You remember Mr. Arnott's statement before the allocators' meeting? "No obligation. It would be a matter for each company to buy what it wanted."

> (Reading) "—each selecting one or more of these fifteen small refining companies, and the major company obligating itself to take whatever surplus gasoline this small refining unit will have from time to time. In other words, a major company would select from among the fifteen small refineries some company whose surplus or distress gasoline it could advantageously move, and in that way by dividing up these fifteen companies and these estimated 600 cars per month of distress gasoline no great burden would fall upon any one."

Did Arnott speak of the fact at the allocators meeting, speak about the burden falling on any one? Did he say that "We are going to take so much and it won't burden us; we are going to be obligated to take a certain amount?"

> (Reading) "A steering committee would guide and control, periodically, the prices to be paid for this surplus gasoline by the major company to the small refinery."

And there you have them, the Jacobi price recommendations periodically, yes. Every time that price went up (indicating on chart)—

4426 "There was considerable discussion to the effect that this new program had more chance of success than any previous program because of the way the steering committee would function and the fact they would be buying on an ascending market, * * *."

They knew the market was going to go up!

> "—thereby keeping the market both active and strong, rather than buying on a descending market as previous buying movements had been and which previous movements had failed of any substantial success.
> "It was estimated that the absorption of these 600 cars per month by fourteen major refiners would only be equivalent to curtailing their own crude runs 2%. In other words, it was intended to point out that the absorption of this gasoline by the major would not seriously affect that major's own runs."

And that is the thing we have alleged in the indictment. That is the thing we point out, gentlemen, again and again, how little they had to buy, what a small investment they had to make in order to get that price up and to affect the price on all the gasoline they sold! Two per cent they had to buy, two per cent of the output in order to affect the price of the other ninety-eight per cent they were selling.

4427 "Each purchase of a car, from time to time, by these majors of this distress gasoline, would be recorded in the Journal of Commerce as an individual sale, and the number of these sales recorded would indicate an active market, and buying on an ascending market would tend to create a strong market."

The question was very important.

> "The meeting in question was attended by all major companies, including such companies as Globe, Skelly, Mid-Continent,—"

And all of them were there and you remember Mr.

Thomas saying that if there were a conspiracy they would all be in there.

> "* * * all of whom * * *"

Listen to this!

> "* * * all of whom indicated a willingness to select one of the companies shown on the attached statement and assume responsibility for their surplus."

There is your graph (indicating). Mr. Arnott said to the allocators three weeks later, "And assume responsibility for it."

> (Reading) "The writer had no knowledge and did not participate in this discussion. Mr. Dippel, however,—" who was his associate—you remember Mr. Sus and Mr. Dippel—"* * * because of his knowledge of some of the purchasing—"

4428 Both Sus and Dippel, you remember, representing Sinclair were at the meeting.

> "Mr. Dippel, however, because of his knowledge of some of the purchasing we were doing in the West, tentatively stated that we might consider taking the output of, say, the Wilcox plant. Mr. Dippel indicated he would report this matter to Mr. Carnes and handle to a conclusion as to our participation in this movement."

Mr. Dippel, had to get authority from the defendant, Mr. Carnes, before his company would agree to participate.

And, gentlemen, the evidence supplementing this shows they did even more. They had an advanced price recommendation. They divided up dancing partners at the March 5th meeting. But in addition to that, this steering committee working day in and day out, continually through this period not only took care of these independent refiners but watched every gallon of gasoline that might appear in that Mid-Continent area, and if they thought it might be sold at the low gas price that they were pegging, that they were maintaining, they would buy it. They not only bought distressed gasoline from the independent refiners who had gasoline they wanted to sell, but if they found it in the hands of a broker, if they found it anywhere, if it was interfering with that price which they were maintaining they bought it.

4429 Now, gentlemen, does that sound like an informal plan where major companies needed gasoline? "We knew they were going to need gasoline. We told them where they could buy in order to meet their needs." Jacobi, McDowell and Arnott. Does this sound like a plan, where any company who needed gasoline could find it and buy, or is it an air-tight agreement, just as cold and firm and fast as if it was written in longhand and sealed as an agreement? Every company said that they would buy it, and they did it, as the evidence shows, throughout this whole period.

And was that Sus memorandum ever shown to any government official? Did the Government ever know about it, until we got it, as I say, under subpoena from this Court, when we were before the Grand Jury?

And now, gentlemen, in the light of that, I want to discuss with you again the letter of April 2nd. You remember I said to you this morning, and I meant every word of it, that I have no quarrel with any word that Mr. Ickes ever uttered and that is in this record. I think none of it has anything to do with this. You take these documents to your jury room with you and read them, one by one, and you will find what Mr. Ickes was talking about was the activities of the Stabilization Committee, about retail 4430 prices, which we knew about, and which he authorized, and he said they did good work. No indication in this record that Ickes knew about it. Certainly no indication that he ever approved this. This is what rigged the price. I say it rigged the price to a high, arbitrary and artificial level, and it was done by agreement. It was done without any authority under the Code.

Keep in mind the testimony of Dr. Frey. I ask you to bear in mind Dr. Frey's testimony, it was stated to Mr. Arnott, in the presence of all of them, at the May 8th meeting, that whatever he was doing, he was not doing under the letter of July 20th; he was not doing it under the Code; he was doing it on his own responsibility.

Mr. Fahy said to him, "Are you sure about the anti-trust laws?" And he said, "I looked into that." At the May 8th meeting again Mr. Fahy raised the question of the anti-trust laws. Mr. Arnott said, "I am doing it on my own responsibility." And all Mr. Fahy had any reason to believe was that they were doing the kind of thing that they talked about, as I referred to, in the Allocators' meeting; that each of them knew they were buying distress gasoline and the government knew that they were buying distress gasoline and the newspaper report showed to them that the major companies were buying gasoline; and 4431 that was nothing new.

Witness after witness testified the majors always bought gasoline, and they bought it from independent refiners; and there is nothing wrong about that. They can buy all they want, so long as they don't do it pursuant to an agreement, and pursuant to an agreement to raise the price, where they take control of the price, and there is no government agency that can inquire to find out whether the price they charge is a fair price to the consumer.

Now, this letter of April 2nd, as I have said, refers to the moratorium in the City of Chicago. I told you before what a moratorium is. The moratorium was an agreement by these companies that they would not take over a customer,—a dealer customer, from another company. If you were an independent retail dealer in Chicago, during the period of this moratorium, if you had a contract with Shell, and you wanted to do business with the Standard of Indiana, the Standard of Indiana agreed, under this moratorium, not to do business with you. You had to stay with Shell.

And here is what the Secretary said about it. I don't want to read the letter again. He said, "If you have such an agreement, I think it is illegal."
4432 If you are purporting to act under the authority of my letter, you have to get authority. You have got to have specific approval, after we have had a chance to give consideration to all facts.

I say to you that if the Secretary thought that this moratorium for a temporary period of time in Chicago, might be illegal, what would the Secretary have thought if Mr. Arnott had come to him with the Sus memorandum, stating that they had an agreement here which covered the entire Mid-Continent and entire Standard of Indiana territory and this air-tight agreement, and we are going to buy every gallon of distress gasoline that appears there and we are going to raise that price, and we are going to keep that price at that plateau?

I know what Mr. Ickes would have said. He would have said, "Gentlemen," he would not have jumped up, but he would have said, "Well, I don't know whether this is good or bad. I would like you to submit your plan to me. We will hold hearings, and we will decide whether it will be approved." Perhaps he would have said, "I will submit it to the Attorney General."

They should have submitted the agreement to Mr. Ickes but they never did. They never told Mr. Ickes, so far as this record shows, anything about any agreement 4433 among them to do this thing. But here is what Mr.
Ickes said without knowing anything about any agreement. He said to them, this. "I understand that the temporary character"—he is not talking about moratorium, he is talking generally—"I understand that the temporary character of a number of situations and the need for immediate action has made formalized agreements impracticable and in a number of instances they may be unnecessary."

That is an attempt to raise the price in a local area. That is not this kind of thing.

> "However, when the understandings arrived at a basis of solution of price wars affecting the industry over a considerable area are intended to operate over a definite period of time," * * * and that is what we have here—

> "affecting the industry over a considerable area are intended to operate over a definite period of time or involve substantial changes in the policy of the various supplying companies made only in consideration of similar action on the part of other companies".

That is not where you have a definite agreement but where you have an agreement that we will do something if the others do it. You remember the testimony in this record about each doing their share. That is the kind 4434 of thing Mr. Ickes is referring to.

> "it is necessary that the procedure required by the Recovery Act be followed in order that the arrangement be legal. If any such agreements have been made I should like a report as to them. If they require—".

Did Mr. Arnott report that he had such an agreement here?

> "approval to be effective, as my information leads me to believe is the case with respect to the moratorium, I should be glad to give consideration to them under the provisions of the Act."

Let me read that last paragraph.

"I appreciate greatly * * *" and this shows the high-minded, fair attitude of Mr. Ickes throughout this thing. He is not quarreling with Mr. Arnott. He thinks that Mr. Arnott has done something that he didn't have authority to do. Does he spank him? Does he write him a nasty letter? No; he writes him a decent, high-toned letter like this. He said, while telling him that he thinks he is doing something illegal, he said, "I appreciate greatly your cooperation with the Administration in taking on the difficult work of directing a program of stabilization and I know that you will understand that this action is necessary in order to comply with the requirements of law with which I am charged with administrative responsibility." 4435

Mr. Ickes said, in order that I may discharge my duties as a public officer I must ask you to report to me any such agreements that you have, so that we may consider them under the provisions of the Act and decide whether they are lawful.

Did Mr. Arnott ever come in and say this is distress gasoline we are buying? I should have told you, I want to tell you now, we are doing this pursuant to an agreement. Not one word of it.

The May 8th meeting followed this. There was a discussion about it. Mr. Fahy raised the question of the antitrust laws. What did Mr. Arnott say? "You don't have to worry about that, I am doing that on my own responsibility."

That is all, I think, I have to say on the question of the part that the government played in this and the attempt of these defendants, after doing all of these things, doing them secretly, as I have shown you, to attempt to come before this jury and place the responsibility on the government, is an outrage and unfair, say, to those in the government who did cooperate with them, and did all the the things you have heard testified that were done by the government to help this industry during that time.

4436 Gentlemen, there is only one other thing I want to mention to you, and I am through. A detail I omitted to mention when I was passing. Mr. Brazeau told you that the Government proved that there were only two companies left who were participating in the East Texas buying program, that the others had been dismissed by the Government.

> Mr. Brazeau: I don't think you are stating that accurately. I said there were four left, and then I eliminated two of them because the Cities Service never bought anything, and the other one only bought fifty cars in the whole length of that program. That left two substantially.

Mr. Chaffetz: But the point I want to make is this,—I don't mind being corrected—there were some companies that were dismissed, at the conclusion of the government's case. You heard me when I stated to the Court the reasons why we were voluntarily dismissing those companies; not because they didn't participate; not because they were not as guilty as anybody else, but because they had been dissolved and didn't exist at the time that this case was brought.

The Tide Water Associated Oil Company was 4437 named in the indictment. Also the Tide Water Oil Company. The Tide Water Associated Oil Company is the parent company of the Tide Water Oil Company,—was at that time. By the time we came to trial the Tide Water Oil Company had been dissolved or merged with the parent company. We couldn't show that the parent company had done this. The evidence showed it was the Tide Water Oil Company that did this. There was no Tide Water Oil Company left at the time we went to trial.

The law is peculiar in many ways. The law is that if a company merges it avoids the penalty of the law. If all the companies here had merged and passed out of existence we wouldn't have had any corporation to charge with the crime. Of course the individuals remained responsible; and so, although the Tide Water Oil Company is dissolved you do have the individual officers of that company who participated in this thing, whom the evidence shows participated, three of them, Edward L. Shea, Noel Robinson, and Warner. The evidence shows that they specifically participated in the thing on behalf of their company. The company was dismissed because it does not exist any more.

I mentioned Mr. Robinson. His counsel asked me to say this to you, and I am glad to do it. I referred to 4438 his being present at the allocators' meetings. He asked me to point out that he was at the allocators' meetings as an allocator. He was one of the allocators. From my standpoint, it doesn't make any difference why he was there. He was there. He heard what was going on. He knew the facts and he participated. I am glad to make that statement to you at the request of counsel.

Now, take the Cities Service Export Company. It also was merged with another.

Mr. Webster: Mr. Warner was connected with the company, worked with the company that was never indicted.

Mr. Chaffetz: I will tell you what the evidence was on that. Mr. Warner was connected with the Tide Water Oil Company of Oklahoma. That company was not indicted, but the evidence in this case shows that he made the purchases in East Texas with which he is charged here on behalf of the company that was dissolved, acting under the specific direction of Mr. Shea and Mr. Robinson, who were the chief executive officers of that company, and he is charged in this indictment with participating in the interests of that company that was dissolved.

So far as the Cities Service Export Company is concerned, you remember that was the company that went 4439 into the East Texas at the beginning of this program, and bought up all the surplus gasoline that was available there.

And, gentlemen, I call this to your attention. You heard all of this talk of how low the prices were at that time and how these people wanted to pay the independent refiners a fair price. When this company went in and cleaned up the situation so the program could start to work, it didn't even pay the low price that was prevailing at that time, it paid a lower price. And that is the explanation for all those dots below the low, that the Cities Service Export Company purchased when the program began. They were so good-hearted to these independent refiners when they were buying gasoline from them, and they found the price too low, they bought it at a lower price.

Cities Service Export Company was merged with another Cities Service Company, and under the law we can't hold them here. They were none the less co-conspirators during the entire period they were in existence.

Buckley was their employee and Buckley was acting on the specific authority and direction of the defendant Brandli, as the evidence shows.

4440 Louisiana Oil Refining Company. Another company that was dissolved. There was no such company at the time we went to trial, the evidence shows; so at the end of our case we dismissed as to them. In fact the evidence itself showed that they were implicated and they were just as much parties to this thing as the others were. They just can't be held guilty now, because they don't exist.

Also the Gulf Companies. You remember they were not dismissed by the government. We thought we had made out a case against them. The Court differed with us. The Court didn't think that as to the Gulf there was enough evidence to hold them at the time we closed our case. You remember the Judge dismissed as to the Gulf.

But now, gentlemen, Mr. Arnott has been on the stand. You heard what I asked him about Mr. Hartmann and his participation in this thing, and it turns out now, the evidence that the Judge didn't have at his disposal when he considered whether there was enough evidence against all of these companies to go to the jury, and when he thought there was not enough as to Gulf, now it turns out that Gulf was really one of the most active participants in the East Texas buying program.

4441 I mention this to you because, in considering this question of power, Mr. Brazeau told you that there were only two companies buying down there. I say you have to consider all the companies that actually participated, irrespective of whether they themselves are before you on the question of their guilt or innocence.

And the same is true of the Deep Rock Company. That company was dismissed for technical reasons, which did not concern whether or not the Deep Rock Company was a party to this conspiracy. And you heard Mr. Arnott again state on the stand that Mr. Majewski, an officer of that company, and who is a defendant but not on trial, told him that the Deep Rock Company was participating in the Mid-Continent buying program.

I say you have got to consider, if there is any question about it, all the companies that actually did participate, that you find from the evidence did participate, whether or not defendants here—consider them in conjunction with the defendants and with all the independent refiners that I referred to, and decide whether all those companies, all together, had the power to raise this price.

I thank you.

4442 Thereafter, on January 21, 1938, the Court made and entered an Order granting the Motion for a Directed Verdict at the close of all the evidence of the defendant Fred L. Koopman.

(Said Order is printed at page 2478 of the Record.)

Mr. Thomas: One moment, your Honor. (Mr. Thomas spoke to the Court out of the hearing of the reporter.)

Thereafter, on January 21, 1938, Mr. W. P. Crawford, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, on behalf of the plaintiff, the United States, made the final closing argument to the jury. Such argument is as follows:

4443

ARGUMENT.

By Mr. Crawford.

Mr. Crawford: May it please the Court, and gentlemen of the jury.

I suppose that there is a saturation point in almost everything, and if there is in a lawsuit we certainly have reached or passed the point at this time.

It is difficult to talk to the jury in this atmosphere. For a long time it has been charged to a very high degree, it seems to me unnecessarily so, with a tension which has affected us all; and I am sure it has affected you as much or more than it has any of us.

We of course must remember that the audience consists largely in defendants and officers and important officials of these corporations and their friends. Perhaps you have noticed that as we have gone along. We have heard a chuckle now and then, and an "Ah," and an "Oh" and an "Oh" every now and then, and that I think is what is the matter with me in trying to talk to you in the presence of this audience. But I wish you would forget all about that.

I am not going to talk to you long; you would not want me to. For very good reasons, unimportant to you, I could not.

I am not going to wish you a "Happy New Year." Probably it would be more appropriate to wish you a 4444 Happy Birthday which you all have once a year.

But I do want to congratulate you, gentlemen of the jury, on having survived as well as you have the terrific ordeal to which you have been subjected here.

And I want to congratulate the Marshal, Jack Comeford, who has so well and so carefully looked after you in the circumstances in which you have been placed, by the good judgment and decisions of the Court about which no lawyer has had anything to do; and Jack Comeford's able and popular assistant, Charlie Steele, whom probably you have seen a lot of. You have gone through this so far, and you have finished apparently in good health and apparently in good spirits although you do not show very much in your faces, which has been the subject of discussion and wonder among a lot of the lawyers.

I am sure you would not think well of me if I should now undertake to carry you through a series of figures, computations, charts, maps, and so forth. All that you are ever going to know about that, except what you might work out in your own jury room, you know now, and you are not going to get very much of it from me.

The most I am going to try to do is here and there touch upon a few of the high spots of the case.

4445 We have all been unusually favored here in the personnel and the personality of the Judge who has presided here in this very difficult case, a most difficult situation for any Judge to be placed in.

I do not take much to this idea of having something good to say about a fellow and waiting until he is dead to say it—"Say It With Flowers".

I want to compliment the Judge publicly personally for the way in which he has handled the trial of this case. He is imbued with just one idea, and that is to administer the law, and consideration only for the justice of the case. He altogether, as it seems to me, has so conducted himself in the trial of this case as to be entitled to the declaration that he very signally typifies the ideal Judge.

I am just going to chat with you,—I am not going to make any argument—if you will let me do it; and take it easy.

Now, we do not think, I do not think, none of us think on the part of the government that all these defendants are gangsters, cut-throats, or anything of that kind. We do not think that. They are just about the average run-of-mine people placed in the positions in which they have been placed and occupied for some time.

4446 I was very glad that Colonel Donovan in the highly dramatic way in which he did it introduced us to all of them yesterday. Some of them I did not know at all, most of them I did not know at all, had never seen except as they were around the courtroom here. When they stood up and answered to the roll call, as they probably did back in 1935 when they began to form this conspiracy to violate the law, and I kind of glanced them over, I did not quite agree with my friend John who said to you before that that they were very good looking, very handsome men and very well dressed. I do not think any of them buy their clothes from Sears-Roebuck. Neither do I. So I think they are just the average ordinary class of people.

Two of them we saw closely and had some close contact with upon the witness stand here, Bob McDowell and Mr. Arnott.

A few more of them I have met; and, gentlemen of the jury, those people when you get to know them, know even a little about them, why, they are a very nice kind of people; you like them. They have charm and personality; they are smart, careful, and they are generous.

I know Mr. Brandli very well. I want him to stand up and take a bow. (Mr. Brandli stood up).

I really think he is the only one of the defendants that I met and chatted with a good deal and got to know 4447 very well, and and got to like him of course.

Now, we do not think these defendants' lawyers are a bad lot either.

4448 You know, the profession of the law is a little different than most any other of the professions. We get up here and battle with each other, and you would think, looking on, that there must be bitter hatred in our hearts, and a willingness to do each other harm. There isn't anything of that kind about it at all. Each fellow is here, trying to do the very best that he can for the cause that he represents.

And I got to meet quite a few of the lawyers on the defense—not all of them; I don't know all of them yet; I only know a few of them. You see, we were out in that hall for a long, long time, and you didn't know anything about it, because you were upstairs, or some place like that. And we smoked a lot of cigarettes; we naturally chat and talk with people, and get to know them pretty well. And during the hot spell in November, I think it was, at a good many of the drinking fountains downtown, I got to know some of the lawyers pretty well. I like them all. Charley Francis, Fred Wood—I don't see Fred here this morning—

Mr. Thomas: Yes, he is here.

Mr. Crawford: And Charley Gateley, sitting immediately next to Colonel Donovan, with the face of a cherub—and, of course, McInerney, who looks like 4449 Mayor Kelly of Chicago, and I understand when the Mayor is busy, that Mac does a lot of his work. So I got to know some of these men pretty well. I got to know Colonel Donovan, not very well. He didn't seem to be where I met the others—I think he would have liked to have been there.

Well, let's see if there are any more. You don't mind if I take a little time, do you? (Looking around the court room). Well, now, there is Mr. Stanford over there (indicating). He is really a very wonderful person, a very wonderful lawyer, a nice fellow—you would like to know him.

Something has been said about how good looking a lot of these people are. The Colonel, of course, is in a class all by himself, so far as that is concerned. I think he takes the best picture for the newspapers of anybody that I ever knew, and the last one seems to be better than the others. But alongside of Stanford, why, I will take Stanford every time. Would you stand up, Mr. Stanford?

(Mr. Stanford rose).

He is one of the very capable and very high-salaried lawyers for Sinclair.

4450 Now, that is about the kind of an atmosphere that there is. Well, I just haven't got enough bouquets to go around this morning. There are a lot more that I would like to pay a little attention to.

And I want to tell you something about our little crowd here. A good deal has been said about them. John Lewin, Hammond Chaffetz; Watson Snyder, the golden-haired gentleman sitting over here (indicating), who knows more about the oil business and more about the business of these big oil companies than they do themselves. He is just a storehouse of knowledge and information of the oil business. And he has been in that kind of work for a long, long time; and the Anti-Trust Division of the Department of Justice, I don't think, could get along without him very well. And then young Grant Kelleher, this boy here (indicating); twenty-six years old, just a marvel, that is all, he is just a marvel, that man. If there is any law in any of the books and you would like to get it, all you have got to do is to tell Grant about it, and he comes back with the law. And that boy is going places, I think. Then we have Nelson Scharfman here (indicating), who is in a class all by himself in the kind of work that he does.

4451 Then, of course, we haven't had the services of John Boyle and Harold Hanson as much as we would like to, and as much as they would like to have given them to us; but you know the Western District of Wisconsin is a big district, and there is a lot of business here, and business must go on just the same; so they have had a lot of work to do of their own.

And I will tell you something about a couple of other fellows too. You see that good-looking baldheaded man in the light suit back there (indicating)—Glen Paulson. He is with the Federal Bureau of Investigation; he works under J. Edgar Hoover in the Accounting Division. He is an associate of Bill Miller, this young man who has been upon the stand, you remember, and who was so frank and so honest that he just won the hearts of all of us, I think.

And that is about what we have had to work with here, besides myself. Some times I felt that I was a load to carry, rather than a help.

The work and the strain, as you probably know, of preparing this case to present to you, and of presenting it to you after it was prepared, has been something tremendous. These boys and myself have come in here morning after morning, eyes heavy for want of sleep, 4452 brains fagged almost; working through the long hours of the nights; and being without the comfort and the consolation which the defendants' lawyers received from the people personally present, for whom they were working.

When you are working for the Government of the United States, or when you are working for the State of Wisconsin, they are a long, long way away from you. There isn't anybody to come along and pat you on the back and say, "You did a good job there. Boy, you did well." We haven't had any of that. We have just had to go along. And I think that no private person, no private corporation has ever received for the money it paid what the Government of the United States has received here for the money that it has paid, in the staff who has presented this case to you. And I mustn't forget the four girls that are here, tapping away on these typewriters at all hours of the day and night, something nearly every day. You never heard about them, but they were helping us, too.

It is very difficult for me, it has been, to sit silently by and hear some of the remarks that were leveled at my colleagues here, especially Mr. Lewin and Mr. Chaffetz, 4453 who have been so close to me for all these months, knowing them as I do, and knowing the job that they were trying to perform well. The strong, stalwart, learned, agreeable personality of John Lewin has throughout this case been one of the most gratifying things that I have known. Hammond Chaffetz, you have seen him here. You have never seen his like before, and you will never see it again. When those black eyes sparkle with fire, it seems something—and they sparkle most of the time.

Now, if anybody doubts, if anybody has the least shadow of a doubt about the fact that these men believe to the bottom of their hearts in the justice of the cause that they espouse here, I can disabuse their minds of that doubt at any time. They have been aggressive, and they have been forceful; their movements here have been intelligent, well-timed; and, as I said, they have come into this court room morning after morning, worn and tired almost to the breaking point. And it seemed to me that, I some times got the feeling, coming as they did then before you to present this evidence and this case, they were something like the Crusaders of old, saying, "God wills it, God wills it."

I worked with them as well as I could, coming into the case so late as I did, and then working under a 4454 terrible handicap, a personal one with which you are not concerned at all.

That brings me to chat with you a little bit about what was so carelessly said, I think, by Mr. Brazeau, that we did things to poison the mind of the jury. Now let us stop and analyze that for just a minute.

You don't think any of these boys—I call them boys—would have any such a thought as that in their minds, do you? Because they are fully conscious of the position that they occupy here, that their duty is not only to prosecute this case with the vigor and the courage and the fearlessness and the honesty which it demands so as to bring the guilty to justice and release the innocent, but it has been also the consideration of the defendants as well. Now, you don't think there is any of these men that would deliberately put anything into the case hurtful, with the thought in mind that this would poison the minds of the jury or prejudice them against these defendants. And I hope you don't think that I would do that. I have been trying lawsuits too long for that—before juries for so many years that it seems ages. And you don't 4455 think now, do you, having arrived where I am, that I would so far forget what the profession of the law requires, which I love, as to deliberately try to prejudice you against any of these defendants? I think that remark of Mr. Brazeau's was rather a careless one.

But in the trial of a lawsuit, you find that there are many remarks of that kind made by people on all sides of the case. You say things that, the minute you say them, you are sorry you did; and you have left unsaid things that you are sorry that you didn't say. It is always bound to be so. It is a quick, snappy-triggered business when you are trying to get testimony, especially out of witnesses who are hostile and opposed, and all of whose interests are against you. We have that, of course, to contend with.

Well, I think I don't need to say anything more to you, and maybe I didn't need to say what I did, but you will absolve us from any intentional purpose to prejudice your minds against anybody here.

4456 Where something wants to be denounced and condemned and criticized and torn to pieces as it was done here, we have done as well as we could. We have done it like lawyers and like gentlemen, and for that we have no apology and nobody has asked us to make one.

It has been a rather difficult and trying trial for me because it has been unusual in so many of its respects, because of the entire lack of opportunity to relax. There weren't any jokes. There wasn't much laughter. That is entirely contrary to my style. We did start out very well, trying to be free about that, but in the very early stages of the case some one of the defense lawyers called attention to the fact that they thought there was a little too much levity on the part of counsel for the government, and so there wasn't very much more of that.

Well, now, that really doesn't mean that the government counsel aren't serious, just because once in a while they see something funny and give expression to it. Remember Bill Dougherty, who was here, and got away from us, I am sorry to say? Well, he and I used to try lawsuits against each other when he was government counsel. We battled each other day after day. He would 4457 have me down one day and about to gouge my eyes out, and the next day I would get him down, and so we ran along, but whenever there was anything funny about the case, anything humorous, Bill grabbed it and ate it up, and so did I. We came through all that turmoil and strife being very good friends, as good as we were before.

And so I don't think it is necessary that you change yourselves constitutionally or emotionally to take part in the trial of a case, either as jurors or as lawyers.

Well, I hope, gentlemen of the jury, that when you came in here and took your place in this jury box to do your duty under the law that you didn't leave your emotions and your human feelings checked at the door as you came in; that you are just the same fellows now as you were in the beginning.

That reminds me—I am not going to try to tell a story, because there aren't any new ones. These radio fellows have just got them all, except the kind that you just don't tell, and you don't get them on the radio. So there is no use. I haven't any new story. I did the other day. I got some from Mr. McInerney. But I have forgotten 4458 them now. I have been so busy. He is a grand storyteller, that fellow, and a great lawyer.

Well, I want to talk a little more about one of these defendants. I got to know him a little and like him very much. I heard him on the witness stand. He spun a yarn that would do credit to the man who wrote Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea. But he was a nice follow,—and that is Bob McDowell. Of the whole crowd I think he is the best looking and the most handsome of the whole crowd of these defendants. Will you stand up, Bob? (Whereupon the defendant, McDowell, arose to his feet.)

Well, I am not going to clown around here all morning. Don't think I am going to do that. I intend to deliver a few socks here and there, and when I sock them, boy, they stay socked. There won't be many of them.

But before I get to doing that I would like to say something more to you about taking things so seriously. Sometimes we do,—just over-do it. You can't do good work when you do that. We found that out in the preparation of the trial of the case. Get yourself worked up to such a pitch you don't do the work well. And it is perfectly human for men to give way now and then to a little laughter.

4459 I was thinking last night when I came home to prepare some notes to talk to you from, at two o'clock this morning, a whole flock of them,—I looked over a few of them, but I tore the whole business up and threw them in the waste-basket. There isn't any starting or stopping place in this kind of lawsuit.

You remember McGuffey's Third Reader, or aren't any of you old enough for that? We used to have it and we used to read it in the old schools, thirty or forty of us in one room, you know; and the water pail, and a great big dipper in the corner. You remember. And the big broom to sweep out once in a while, and the big box stove that held chunks of wood that long (indicating) and the children would be sent out by the teacher to bring in an armful of wood, once in a while. Those were great days. They are no more. And in McGuffey's Third Reader I learned this very touching little thing about Abraham Lincoln. The old library was almost full of literature of the life and anecdotes of Abraham Lincoln. I think 4460 you have learned a little about him, too. During the War—he was a great story-teller, by the way. I think you have all heard that. One of the greatest of his time. During the War it seemed that the issue was extremely doubtful whether this country should be a country of slave owners or not. Men were being slaughtered. One day he was asked to see an old lady and her daughter. He was very much crowded for time, he didn't have a lot of time, but did see her. He was told the story about the son of the old lady and the brother of the little girl who was to appear before a firing squad for having gone to sleep at his post. Some of you may remember that. The President listened to the story; had some confirmation of it, and wrote a pardon and handed it to that mother to take the officer in charge. Very soon after that a cabinet meeting was held. And as you remember, too, probably, from history, the members of President Lincoln's cabinet were not all sympathetic with him. There was very strong opposition there.

The President came into the cabinet meeting and he 4461 started in by telling some very funny jokes. Pretty soon his attention was called by one of his cabinet members to the fact—what he thought was a fact, that,

"Mr. President, this is no time to be humorous." And the composure and the stolidity, and the heart of that great man was almost broken, and he cried out, "My God, gentlemen, my God, if I couldn't laugh once in a while I could not survive another day."

So you will find that pretty much to be so as you go along through life. I said I am going to talk to you in general terms.

You have heard a good deal here about the injustice,—I think that was the word that was used,—of the government of the United States, or those who represent it here, in bringing these defendants to trial. I would like to talk about that term, "What they were doing" after while,—what they were doing being what the government wanted them to do, especially the Department of the Interior.

Now, just between yourselves, do you honestly think that these boys here (indicating counsel at government table) fired with the enthusiasm of crusaders, as I say, and 4462 having given to this case every ounce of mental and physical strength they have, and I myself have contributed, also, would be trying to convict these men unless that was the wish and the desire of the highest officials in the government of the United States?

Mr. Brazeau: May it please the Court; I want to take an exception to the remarks of counsel on that as highly prejudicial and improper.

Mr. Crawford: I don't think it is, if the Court please. That was referred to many times in the trial of this case.

Mr. Brazeau: He is referring to the wishes of the highest officers of the United States. The highest officers who are available to them to come here and testify. I want an exception to those remarks.

The Court: I don't see that there is anything objectionable—there is nothing objectionable in those remarks.

Mr. Brazeau: I would like an exception.

Mr. Crawford: I don't expect to get away here without being called a few times. I am going to try to do what I am going to do here without any justification for being called. 4463

Now, just what do you think about it? Do you think these are three or four or five of these young fellows, as they have been calling them, just starting out on their own, running hog-wild? These are important men. I presume you all know they are engaged in a very important business, a business, the operation of which is almost a necessity in this country today. You don't think the government of the United States would allow four or five lawyers to come out here and prosecute this case against them, against their wishes, or that the Secretary of the Department of the Interior would allow us to do it, if he didn't want it done? And if he wanted it done it was because he believed, as did the other men in Washington, that there was a violation of law here, so outstanding and so withering and far-reaching in its effect that something ought to be done to stop it; and by that to tell the people of this country that you can't do these things and get away with it.

Mr. Brazeau: May it please the Court, we can't sit here and let those kind of remarks to be made to the jury, and have this prosecution backed up by 4464 what counsel is representing to be the opinion of somebody in a higher place, without a syllable of evidence to support it.

Mr. Crawford: I am satisfied you should make an objection, but I am not satisfied to have you break in on the argument.

Mr. Brazeau: I am giving my reasons for objecting, and I ask the court to instruct the jury to disregard those remarks of counsel.

The Court: What remarks?

Mr. Brazeau: The remarks that the prosecution is backed up by the opinion of someone that it should be brought, somebody outside of the—

The Court: I suppose we have a right to assume that they are here under the instructions of the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. Dorr: Not of the Secretary of the Interior; that is not proper.

The Court: Just a minute. These men are here as government employees, sent here undoubtedly by the Attorney General.

Mr. Crawford: In addition to that, if the Court please—

Mr. Thomas: My objection is this: that counsel is making a statement to the jury that is not sup- 4465 ported by the testimony, to the affect that the Secretary of the Interior, as he spoke, is sanctioning this proceeding. Now, that is not in this case. For that reason I object to it, and I ask the court to instruct the jury to disregard it.

Mr. Crawford: Nobody claims that anybody testified, in so many words, to that, but it is a proper inference to be drawn and a proper argument to be made, where it is claimed here by all the defendants' counsel who spoke that what was done here that is now charged to be a violation of law, was done with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Interior. And I am saying now to the jury that it wasn't so done, the very situation that we are in was a proper one for consideration.

Mr. Thomas: I take further exception to the statement that counsel just made.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Thomas: I would like an exception, Your Honor.

The Court: You may have an exception.

Mr. Crawford: One of the very things that Mr. Thomas has been doing here from the start to the finish, except the delivery of his oration, from this pulpit, has been to 4466 stride up here once in a while and ask the Court to instruct the jury to disregard the remarks made by my associates and myself.

Now, let's go on from there. The conspiracy to fix prices of a commodity is condemned by the Sherman Anti-Trust Law. Those who engaged in the conspiracy are declared by the law itself to be guilty of a misdemeanor. At some time or another somebody in Washington found a situation, either by complaints of individuals, or groups of individuals, which it seemed to the Department of Justice, which was charged with the obligation of enforcing the law, required some investigation of a part of this group of defendants, individual and corporate, as to what they were doing with reference to the price of gasoline.

The conspiracy began, as you have been told here over and over again, as early as March of 1935. Some of defendants' counsel have placed the circumstances earlier. Some time during the trial of this case it was said by somebody for the defense that the government acquiesced, consented, in other words, to the carrying out of the program, 4467 we say is declared illegal by the law.

Now, the government didn't wait very long. You know it is 1938 now. They didn't wait very long. Silent acquiescence and consent can't be spelled out of that period of waiting. Because we find that in May of 1936, down here in the city of Madison, there was brought before a Grand Jury a large number of witnesses and tons of documents, for the purpose of giving the Grand Jury an opportunity to determine whether an indictment should be returned and these men brought to trial. That was not a very long period of time to wait.

I told you the very first time I stood before you here, that the road from the time that the complaint was made and the Department of Justice began its investigation, down to the time of this trial, was a long really crooked trail, and that had to be followed by the Department of Justice which is headed by J. Edgar Hoover; and you can get some idea from what you have seen and heard here, of the length of time that would be necessary to find out, and the way it was necessary to find out for a legal prosecution, just exactly, or nearly exactly what it was 4468 that these men were trying to do.

So when you get to March, 1935, until May, 1936, when this Grand Jury sat here, and allow something for the time necessary by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, under the guidance of the Department of Justice, you really would be amazed at how rapidly the government moved.

But, so far as acquiescence and consent on the part of the government is concerned, to these men doing what they did, there is absolutely nothing in this case.

Colonel Donovan, when he first appeared before you, shortly after Mr. Chaffetz and myself did, stood there and read from a manuscript, many, many, many pages; and he told you that he did that because he wanted to be accurate. At the close of the case, in the last argument upon the part of the defense he came before you here, somewhere around where I am, and he talked to you about this case, without a single note. He evidently had changed his plan from the one he had in the beginning, of wanting to be accurate to one where he was not so much concerned about it;
4469 and his argument showed that to be true, because his inaccuracies in what he said to you with respect to the evidence in this case and with respect to the facts in the case, and many of the facts outside of the case, were so many and so glaring and so obvious, that Mr. Chaffetz felt obliged to take some time out from the program of argument he had prepared in which to answer him.

I told you in the beginning, in a rambling kind of way, we were all under terrific pressure at that time, I believe—it seemed to me a rambling kind of a way—what this case was about, and what the Government intended to prove. Really, honestly, I was afraid to read it afterwards, I thought it would be so bad, and I had missed the mark so many times. And as they say on the street, boy, was I glad to hear Mr. Thomas read that the other day. It was just full of music. It actually sounded like a prophesy, because we seem to have followed it sentence after sentence, and line after line, and word after word.

I think not very much criticism can be leveled at the statement of Mr. Chaffetz, because he is so careful and he 4470 doesn't ramble, and he doesn't take many chances.

Whenever that boy's attention was called by any of the defendants' lawyers to some inaccuracy about what he said, you heard him stand up frankly and freely and say, "I think you are right" and that is the kind of a lawyer he is.

Well, if I am going to do anything more but just go along like this,—I don't know whether you like it or not.

Another funny thing about these juries, you just are kind of ham-strung. You can't do anything about it. You just got to sit there and take it. That is pretty difficult. Just like we do, over here, when the lawyers on the other side are pounding away and pounding away, you want to get up and do something or run away. You have to sit there and take it. So, with them, they have to sit there and take this.

You probably haven't been reading the newspapers. I heard you weren't. I am not going to try to bring you down to date. But a lot of things have happened since. I 4471 don't know whether you last knew of it when the newspaper was taken away from you,—for instance, Ireland is now a free and independent Republic, and all of those centuries and centuries of prosecution by the English Government brings them to that end.

I hope that they have saved at home for you some of the files of these newspaper reports of this case. They will be interesting for you to read. You will learn there a lot that you learned here and some that you didn't.

I want to say what I forgot to say at the beginning,—I had so many bouquets to throw around,—I had some for the press. There is a crowd of fellows sitting over there (indicating the press section) really very grand boys, all of them. I met a few of them down at the drinking fountain during the hot spell, and they are regular fellows; and they have done a marvelous job here in reporting this case.

Colonel Donovan said it was a case in which the whole nation is interested. I agree with him on that. And I don't want to make your task any more difficult than 4472 it is going to be anyhow. Henry Lewin and Hammond Chaffetz said to you anyhow this is a simple case. It wouldn't be any more difficult for you to solve than if the Government had charged somebody with assault and battery.

Its far, far-reaching effects upon this country, the formation and the prosecution of its policy and the enforcement of the law, is going to be one of the very important things that is going to grow out of your verdict here.

4473 The law—of course, I might say, as I started to say when I spoke about the newspapers, that governments, empires, dynasties have been shattered and broken to the ground—and this country of ours, gentlemen of the jury, is now being shaken to its very foundations by the kind of thing that is alike to what is represented in this lawsuit. Whether we survive or perish is going to depend very largely upon whether or not, in the language, I think, of one of the greatest statesmen that ever lived, "Malefactors of great wealth"—

Mr. Thomas: Now, if the Court please—

Mr. Crawford: (Continuing) —people with great power—

Mr. Thomas: I except to the statement of counsel, for the reason that it is improper and prejudicial. I ask the Court to rebuke the counsel, and I ask the Court to instruct the jury to disregard it. This case is not to be decided upon the principles of malefactors of great wealth—

Mr. Crawford: I don't ask it to be. The Court, I think, cautioned the jury right at the beginning of the trial of this case against being influenced by such statements.

4474 The Court: Yes, and I shall later in my instructions.

Mr. Thomas: And may I have an exception?

The Court: Yes, you may have. I will cover that matter in my instructions.

Mr. Crawford: When combinations or corporations having the financial and the money power that these corporations have here, go out and take the law into their own hands and operate their business regardless of the desire of the Government, and without any consideration for the under-dog or the poor man, then we can do one thing or another. We are going to stop it, as our forefathers stopped it before us and left this country with us as it is now, or we are going down into ruin as did the Roman Empire—

Mr. Thomas: I object to the statement just made by counsel,—

Mr. Crawford: I don't know why you should object to that.

Mr. Thomas: (Continuing) —for the reason that it is prejudicial; it is not legitimate argument, and I ask the Court to rebuke counsel and instruct the jury to disregard it.

The Court: Objection overruled. Proceed with 4475 your argument.

Mr. Thomas: I wish an exception.

The Court: You may have an exception.

Mr. Crawford: Now, that is one reason why, as Colonel Donovan well said, that the eyes of the people of this nation are upon you today. And the eyes of the people in Washington who are administering the affairs of this Government are on you today, too.

I don't say that to make your task more difficult than it is. Your duty is just the same as though the case were perfectly simple, and as though there were only two or three people involved. If the defendants violated this law, if they did, you will say so, and that they are guilty; that is all you have got to do. If they didn't, it is for you to say that they are not, and that is all you have got to do about that.

But if you should say they are not guilty—I am going to be perfectly frank with you, just like I would if I was talking to you out on a street corner. If you are going to say they are not guilty on this evidence, which is so overwhelming and overpowering that it doesn't even leave the trace or the shadow of a doubt—if you are going to say they are not guilty on this evidence, then you take 4476 the responsibility I won't; you get an alibi; I won't.

I am very frank and very bold in talking to you like that, am I not? I am that way, because I think that is the right way to look at it. Do you want to say that the vast sum of money that has been spent by the Government here—and not in payment of lawyers, either—running into hundreds of thousands of dollars, in trying to get before you the facts in this case, should be thrown to the winds and these men should go clear, and the world and the nation should be told that these combinations of capital can go out and take the law into their own hands, and they can rig any market they please? If you do—why, all right. I will get along. If you can afford to pay thirty cents or forty cents or fifty cents a gallon for gasoline, why, I will get a little once in a while, too.

Now, let's not fool ourselves about what this case is about. The viciousness, gentlemen of the jury, the viciousness and the horror and the potential possibilities of destruction in what these defendants did is that of taking over the power, the power and the right and the might to rig and fix a market of gasoline. Now, that is the thing that the law condemns. That is the thing that the Government is prosecuting them for here. That is the thing 4477 that we have spent all these weary months—it seems like to me, days, weeks, and months, these men and myself, in trying to get evidence before you about.

I, as you see, just kind of amble along in talking to you here—I have no notes to go by, even—I had some last night. And I don't want to forget one very good friend of mine, that I never saw before this trial began, but that I probably will see again—I hope so. That is the lawyer for the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, Weymouth Kirkland. I got to know him very well—oh, no, that is all right, Kirk. He is really a grand—in the words of the man on the street, he is a grand guy. And you would think the same, if you knew the rest of these fellows as well as I know some of them, they are just grand fellows.

But, gentlemen of the jury, those are the kind of fellows I expected to see here. I didn't expect to see the Standard Oil Company of Indiana or Socony-Vacuum or Cities Service or the Shell Corporation coming in here, going to be represented by any under-rated lawyers. I expect to see the tops here—and I have seen them.

And I didn't expect that the officials of these corporations were going to look like truck drivers in here, or 4478 that they were going to act like it. I expected them to be just the kind of men that they are: Able, smart, intelligent, affable, likeable—all the qualities, really, that you and I admire in men, and that it is necessary for them to have to do the kind of work that they are doing.

Now, let's see if I have forgotten somebody else—I don't want to do that. That doesn't mean that I am through—I want to have them all here.

Now, let us go back and look at the situation as it existed in 1935, just before the formation of this conspiracy. Unless the Government is misinformed, unless its investigation has failed to go deep enough, before 1935 we had a fairly open, competitive, regular, hand to hand market for gasoline.

Now, these fellows, what they really did was to see an opportunity to go out and make a killing, and clean up. We had all gone through 1929, '28, and lost plenty of money. But they are not the only fellows that lost money in '28 and '29. You and I did, so did everybody else. And we didn't think that because of that we had a license to go out and take it away from somebody else to make up our loss, did we? We just took it on the chin.

But these fellows saw an opportunity in 1935 to go 4479 out and make a killing, and clean up. And that market was in the condition it was in, so that on the push of a button by the master mind Arnott, that the market would begin to move up and up and up. And that is what he did.

You heard the story, and heard it talked about, and you listened to it and know it well, I am sure. How, down there along in early 1935, Bob McDowell and Walter Paul Jacobi and O. J. Tuttle and a few others got together—I am coming now, I am passing by the meeting in St. Louis and the meeting in Kansas City. They had all been held, and these men were pretty generally agreed on what was going to be done. And these three men had imposed upon them the obligation of doing their part in running that market up. And so they got together. And they went so far as to decide on the prices that were to be paid for the gasoline by the jobbers in this Indiana territory, including the City of Madison, which affected the price to be paid by the dealer, and affected the price that you and I had to pay.

Now, right there, I contend—and without covering all of the evidence—right there, I contend there was a 4480 taking of the law right into their own hands. And that activity was directed by Mr. Arnott, who had occupied a position under the favor, under the favor of the Secretary of the Interior, imposing confidence in him; that was directed by him, who was on the Administration Board of the P. and C. Committee, I think.

But you will remember—and this is really important—now, I am only touching upon the high spots in this case, and I am sure that is all you want me to do, but I am not going to touch them all. You will remember that the program, the plan, the scheme, the conspiracy was well worked out, when Mr. Arnott said,

> "Wait a minute, wait a minute, wait a minute, now. The Connally Act, you know, which shut out hot oil, has been killed by the Supreme Court; but there is another bill in Congress which I think is going to be passed, that will shut out this hot oil. And there won't be but very little for us to buy. And I will let you know when to go."

And so the Connally Bill was passed, and became a law on the 22nd of February, 1935. And this conspiracy and its progress began at that time. And somebody, some of them began the ascent of these golden stairs we have talked so much about. The market went up one-eighth of 4481 a cent at a time, and finally got to the point in June, 1935, where it was as high as they thought they dared to go, that is all. It was just so high that they were afraid that somebody in the Department of Justice might be asked to look into it—which they were. And they held it there, rigid and firm, for the balance of that year and on into 1936, and then sent it up a little more.

Now, what do you think of that? Is that a combination, is that a conspiracy, is that a violation of the anti-trust law?

Listen to what his Honor, the Court, is going to tell you the law is in a case of this kind. That is going to be important. He is going to tell you what the law is, and he is going to tell you the law as it is, too, because he looks neither to the right nor the left; he looks straight ahead. I don't know what he is going to charge you, but I have an idea,—whatever became of that little volume I brought in here this morning? (Examining files.)

All right. He is going to tell you first, I think, or early in his charge, what the anti-trust law is. He may read it to you from the statute. And he is going to tell you, contrary to what counsel on the other side, counsel for the defendant implied, at least, that it is not necessary 4482 in order that people may be found guilty of entering into an illegal combination to violate the anti-trust laws, that they be found sitting together, nor that they make a contract in writing, nor even is it necessary that they may all know each other. If they all have a common purpose and understanding and work together in carrying out the understanding, that is sufficient—together with some other provisions.

Now, you heard from the evidence, and you heard from counsel and from my able colleagues here, what that situation was as a matter of fact, in the Mid-Continent field and in East Texas in 1935. I think they made it fairly clear to you that it was necessary only for these defendants to manipulate, just manipulate a very small part of the gasoline that was manufactured and sold in the Standard of Indiana territory. And there wasn't very much, which was reported by the journals, which governed the price that the jobber paid in this territory; and the jobber's price accordingly governed the price which the dealer paid, and which you and I paid.

The conditions were ripe; the opportunity was there; it didn't cost them a lot of money, if any, to go out and 4483 pick up this little bit of surplus, excess, distress gasoline, as they call it, and take it out of the hands of the independent refiner, who was liable to throw it on the market and reduce the price. It didn't take very much. The opportunity was there, and the temptation, gentlemen of the jury, was too great for these combinations or corporations and their individuals to resist—and they didn't try to resist it.

Now, you have been told a whole lot about the Government, particularly the Secretary of the Interior, favoring—Colonel Donovan said, and a couple of his associates said, "The doing of the things that they were doing." But, every time he used that expression, I wanted to know, "By doing the things that we did, do you mean engaging in this conspiracy? Do you mean that, that they favored that? And if you didn't, what did you mean? And if you meant something else, why didn't you tell us what you did mean?

4484 Doing the things that they did, whatever they were, unless they were in violation of law, would never have called down upon their heads the Department of Justice and the Secretary of the Interior and his staff in trying to enforce the law.

Now, what was it that they did do?

Mr. Brazeau: Now, may it please the Court, counsel has again referred to the fact as a fact that they brought down on their heads the prosecution by the Department of Justice and the Secretary of the Interior. We ask the Court—

Mr. Crawford: Well, I will take back what I said about the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. Brazeau: Well, I think the Court ought to caution the jury.

The Court: The jury may disregard that. This prosecution was commenced at the instigation of the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. Crawford: I am glad of a chance to talk about you, Mr. Brazeau. I want to say something about you.

Mr. Brazeau: That's all right.

Mr. Crawford: He has been to the front pretty well of late. I know him pretty well, and I know all about him; oh, I know a lot about him. He knows something about Wisconsin jurors. Well, I know a little about 4485 Wisconsin jurors too. Sometimes they beat me to death, and sometimes I win. I win most of the time up there where I live because I am most always on the side of the under dog.

He loses most of the time where he is because he is on the other side. So we both get our different notions about Wisconsin jurors.

Gentlemen of the jury, I have been knocking around this territory here for a long time, in Minnesota and Illinois and Michigan and Iowa and North and South Dakota—almost the entire Standard of Indiana territory; I cover about as much ground as the Standard of Indiana Oil Company does, only I don't get as much for what I do as they get.

And I have found that the jurors average about the same wherever you go. Of course in the State Courts, you know, we have the women jurors now. It makes quite a lot of difference to us old-timers; it is kind of hard to take, but we get along. They average up just about like you do. It is surprising to know when you come to something that involves the emotions, when you think they are going to go hog wild, why, they don't. They are level headed about it, and my hat is off to them.

4486 I said it was kind of hard to talk here. You remember the time, or do you? When they had the old courthouse, the old frame courthouse, and a great big stove in the back, in the middle of it. I hope all of you haven't forgotten that since we have got ritzy and built these modern courthouses.

The inspiration that makes a lawyer out of a blacksmith—as I listened to them, I used to think as I sat there and heard those lawyers battling, sometimes calling each other names, and the Judge rapping the gavel, and the jury sitting there, and the lawyers hitting the cuspidor about once out of two times—I thought that was a grand life, that is the life for me.

And so I say to you, jurors are pretty much the same the world over. They are all human. Most all are actuated by the same motives that I am. You laugh at the same things I laugh at, most of you, and you cry at about the same things I do; so we are all very much alike. It is a good thing we are alike. We would not be different.

I am not going to make any more remarks at all about that.

I don't know whether you got your religion out of a catechism or out of a Sunday School; it don't make any difference to me. That don't affect people sitting as 4487 jurors.

Telling you, as Colonel Donovan did, "Well, if I make mistakes here don't charge it up to my poor clients, charge it to me."

That is one of the oldest rackets of the game. I heard about it the first year when I started practicing law. I picked it up, and I used to see it all the time, and I figured what it amounted to and just how it works. We are not going to charge the mistakes up to the men on trial, but charge them up to me. You can't do anything to me, can you? That is just the logic of it—just a lot of bunk, just a part of the racket. I am protected, I am safe; I didn't do anything wrong.

I wonder if I can grab fifty or a hundred of those documents, and keep going a little while.

I wonder if the Court could give us a recess?

The Court: We will take a recess.

(Whereupon at 11:00 o'clock A.M., a recess was taken.)

4488 Gentlemen of the jury, I am going to take but a very few minutes to conclude.

I was quite concerned yesterday about Col. Donovan's argument in which he placed all of you in the shoes of all of the defendants in your reviewing of this case. I don't think that is quite fair. The people of this country are entitled to a place in that array, also. Jobbers, four thousand of them, are entitled to some consideration from you. The danger, the danger, the great danger of allowing this sort of thing to go on should receive a lot of consideration from you.

I wouldn't take the time if I did have the time to talk to you about how much money is to be made out of this. A little simple arithmetic like Hammond told you about and John told you about. You can figure it out for yourselves.

I don't know—I think it was in the beginning when I first appeared before you that I said that I didn't want you to get the idea that you have to understand fully all of the intricate and complicated, difficult statistics that were going to be set before you. I told you, too, that I didn't think many of the lawyers in the case understood them well. I was confirmed in that idea by Mr.
4489 Brazeau yesterday. He didn't seem to understand, really, what many of these figures are about. Now, if he didn't, a smart lawyer as he is, with all these weeks and months, don't be bothered about it yourselves at all.

You see that row of charts there? (Indicating) They haven't referred to them since they have been put up. If you are going to be hot and bothered about that sort of thing, we aren't going to be able to do anything. Don't do it. It just doesn't mean a thing.

These people have an idea that if they wanted to show that there was one hundred gallons of gasoline some place and that there was fifty of them that were bought by the major companies, they had to put it on a chart up there so you could see that fifty gallons taken away from one hundred left fifty. So they come out with what I called yesterday when I struggled here from a sick bed a lot of flashes. But don't be concerned about that sort of thing. You will find, yourselves, that there are so many of those figures and computations and charts here that it is impossible for the defendants to make for you a showing about them—to make any use of them before the trial was closed.

Just keep your mind on the highlights of just what this lawsuit is all about. These fellows are 4490 charged with having gone out and violated the law and rigged this market, and if the proof here doesn't establish that, then there is no such thing as establishing anything by a jury.

Don't you be too concerned, either, about this dictum—I shouldn't call it that—about the law that you must find beyond a reasonable doubt. Of course, you must find beyond a reasonable doubt the guilt of these defendants before you find them guilty. But that doesn't mean that you have to find that beyond any fanciful, possible doubt. It is "reasonable" doubt, a doubt before which, if it were inquired of you, you could give a good, substantial reason. Don't let that bother you very much either.

4491 So you found, I think, you saw, as I told you you would see, and as I see now, that it is just not humanly possible for any one of you, or any one of us who have had this training of years and years, to understand fully and completely the meaning of a lot of this evidence that has gone in here by way of statistics and charts. I do not want to charge that they did what they did carelessly or intentionally. It is just one of the things that lawyers do in a case of this kind when attempting to prove their side. Keep your minds on the high spots.

This responsibility that is talked about of jurors in the case—after all, you are simply the judges of the facts, to pass upon the facts. Your minds do not need to be concerned at all about what the punishment for this offense is. That is a matter for his Honor, the Judge. It is not a matter that you have to deal with at all.

I think you have seen here, too, indications and expressions from him of a great heart and a great conscience, and the great mind that he has, not to coldly and cruelly apply the law to the destruction of every one who might come within its condemnation, but to apply it tempered with justice.

4492 I was puzzled about the rather sudden appeal that was made by Colonel Donovan here to your sympathies. Well now, gentlemen of the jury, I do not think this is that kind of a case. In fact, it looked to me for a little while as if he was going to pull the old gag. You know there isn't anything new in a business like this at all, even through a trial like this, even with all these great lawyers; and they are great.

I thought he was going to pull the old racket we used to pull years and years ago when a fellow was being tried for an offense—getting his partner when he came down from the woods those terrible nights, getting him drunk and taking his money away from him—I thought he was going to pull that old gag that they used to pull in those cases—"Daddy, dear daddy, come home with me now." That was the big cry before the jury.

He did not go that far. Almost.

Don't forget, gentlemen of the jury, that this is a cold, calculating, intelligent procedure for you to determine upon the facts developed in Court, and no place else, whether or not these defendants are guilty of what they are charged with.

But I want to talk about my friend Brazeau. I forgot that. I don't want to let him get away without saying something about him.

4493 He came here in the early stages of the case, and part of the time I could not find him, and the last few days he has been in the front row.

Well, you know these fellows haven't overlooked anything, not anything. And we haven't overlooked very much.

But down there at Wisconsin Rapids where Ted lives you know, there are lots of politics. And you remember that Ted was the boy they always used to send out to bring in the farmers' votes. If the election was close they always fell back on Ted, and he usually went out among the farmers, got on the soapbox or sugar barrel, and made those wonderful, appealing talks, and he usually came home with the bacon.

And so they looked you over, and they thought, Well, it's a pretty good place for Ted to get some votes again from the farmers, and so he did.

He made a very good job, a rather appealing one. He got to doing so much of it, you know, that really his voice has become such that it is almost like baby talk.

I am not criticising, I am not making fun of him at all; but it is a very soft, mellow, appealing kind of a voice, such as a fellow would get, you know, from going around the country and asking a farmer and his wife to vote for somebody; and he might see Susie, the baby 4494 around there, and he would pick up Susie and give her a nice kiss.

So Ted was a pretty good man to put up here for you. He did a little clowning around here I thought; he clowned around here a little bit in the beginning, and he was going to talk to you about the indictment, and he reached over and pulled out a book about as big as the Bible. He thought that was the indictment, and somebody told him no, that was not the indictment. He didn't even read it.

Now, you know how many ideas there are. If there is any doubt in the mind of anybody as to what that indictment charges, I don't understand it.

He said there was not any evidence of price fixing. He said we did not claim—he said John Lewin did not claim it was a price fixing case.

Well, if John Lewin did not claim that, he did not claim anything. I think he made it as plain as English language can make it that that is just what this is.

I think Ted has gone a little ritzy on getting into the company of all these millions, you know, and he did not quite understand John when he said this is a case of rigging the market. Ted apparently thought he ought to say "Adjusting it", "adjusting it", or "stabilizing", or something like that. And so he said John did not say it was a price-fixing case, but it was a rigging of the 4495 market. Ted did not seem to know what he was talking about.

It would be surprising in New York, if I ever get there, to see him coming out of a ritzy hotel, with a high hat on, a white scarf, and tie and tails, and all that sort of thing. He has just got a little ritzy, but he will come out all right in the end. They all do.

Now, I am not going to try to continue this kind of argument, or talk to you very much longer.

My friend Lewin reminded me during the recess that after all what this jury is concerned about and what they ought to be reminded of is the fact that the people of this country, the people of this whole nation are entitled to just exactly what you are going to give them, and that is notwithstanding all the efforts that have been made here, and the tremendous energy that has been expended in trying to shut out testimony here, that you are going to give us a square deal, and that is the American philosophy.

And if you give us a square deal here—I hope this is not offensive to you at all, talking about giving us a square deal—I know you will do it—if you give us a square deal here there is just one thing for you to do, just as pointed out, to give to these defendants—and I trust that you won't spend very much time in trying to analyze how deep is the guilt of one individual as 4496 compared with the other, because they are all just alike—everybody,—if you are going to consider that, he is in this conspiracy up to his neck.

You have seen how careful his Honor was to cull out and take away from your consideration certain men against whom his Honor felt there was not sufficient evidence to go to you, and some of the counsel who argued this case to you talked about that with reference to the trade journals, the fact that they had been released by the government on their own motion—made some kind of an argument to you that you ought to release them all.

Well, I think it was a very improper presentation of that feature of the situation to you, and since it was, it may be perfectly proper for me to call your attention to the other angle of it.

If his Honor kept these people in whom he has kept in, and took the other people out, he took them out because in his judgment there is ample and sufficient legal testimony here upon which you could find them guilty.

Mr. Brazeau: May it please the Court, I—

Mr. Crawford: I am just about to make—

Mr. Brazeau: I want to, before you get through, except to that statement or any inference from that statement that the Court in not dismissing the 4497 remainder of the defendants left any impression that there was any guilt.

Mr. Chaffetz: I think the statement made was a statement of law, your Honor, and there cannot possibly be any doubt about it.

Mr. Crawford: I am very certain they made that kind of an argument.

Mr. Brazeau: No.

The Court: I will make it plain to the jury that some of the defendants have been dismissed because the Court in its opinion was inclined to think there was not sufficient evidence to sustain a finding of guilty if it had been submitted to the jury. Now, that is the reason why some of the defendants have been dismissed.

Mr. Crawford: That is correct.

The Court: Go ahead.

Mr. Brazeau: Your Honor, from the fact of not dismissing the others there is no inference of guilt before the jury—

Mr. Lewin: Mr. Crawford did not say so.

The Court: No, he did not. That is a correct statement of the law that Mr. Brazeau has given, and the jury may so consider it.

Mr. Crawford: Now, gentlemen of the jury, in speaking this morning about certain men here, I forgot 4498 one fellow to talk to you about. It was that fellow sitting over there (indicating). He is what they call a G-Man. That is M. B. Rhodes. He has been working on evidence for years and years and years; and again I say he is a great guy, takes care of his own business, does not look into anybody else's, and he has been with us and has contributed in a large measure to what we have been able to do in arranging these documents.

I was surprised to find in the first place how all that anyone of these defendants' lawyers had to do was to make some suggestion or hint about some paper or document, and it was immediately placed in his hands. It was a great piece of work. But I was comforted to find that we were able to do very nearly the same thing.

I want to refer in a moment to something that made an impression on me.

4499 You know, we lawyers have to depend—most of us are kind of tough guys. We have our own way of talking about witnesses. And one thing that we very often say and talk about is the three classes of liars. There is the plain liar, the damn liar, and the expert witness. And of all of them, the expert witness is the worst.

There were a few of them here. There was Swensrud, the representative of the Standard of Ohio; there was Van Covern, and I think there was another one.

But I just didn't think much of Swensrud's whole testimony, especially after I found out that he was giving testimony that they could ship gasoline in 1935 and in 1936 up the Mississippi River to St. Paul. I happen to be around the Mississippi River quite a little, and know quite a lot about it. In 1935 and 1936, you couldn't get a rowboat up the Mississippi River, north of Winona—because the Government was putting in these dams for the purpose of creating the nine-foot channel that you have read so much about. They had concrete clear across the river, spaced in so many ways, that, as I say, you just couldn't get a rowboat up there. When Swensrud talked about gasoline going up that river, where I knew, 4500 because I lived there and was around there, that it couldn't be done, I just thought—

Mr. Thomas: I object to the remark of counsel, stating what he knew to the jury. It isn't his province to testify here. And I ask that the counsel be rebuked, and that the Court instruct the jury to disregard it.

Mr. Crawford: Oh, well—

Mr. Lewin: That was in the evidence.

Mr. Crawford: Anyhow, I will withdraw the statement.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Thomas: What was the ruling?

The Court: The jury may disregard it. I didn't hear it. I was thinking about something else.

Mr. Chaffetz: He was talking about the Mississippi River.

Mr. Crawford: Now, if you will let me alone a few minutes, I will be through. If you don't, like "Old Man River", I will just keep rolling along. I don't want to do that.

Now, I was referring to these witnesses who knew so much. There was Van Covern, Swensrud, and a fellow named J. D. Miller. He was the fellow who never looked at anybody, so you could catch his eye. They knew 4501 so much, in the way they were telling it to you, that it is impossible, just impossible to believe that they could know as much as they said they did about it. They just covered too much territory. I think all history, sacred and profane, gives us but one single example of a person who knew everything—and he was not only a man, but he was God. And He gave up His life in a shameful death, upon the cross, between two thieves.

Now, I have one other reference, a rather personal one. I guess you think—well, I called for a lot of these documents awhile ago, but I changed my mind about it. Maybe it is because I don't know which ones I wanted them to pick out—most of them that are important have been read to you.

From my association with these gentlemen from Washington—oh, by the way, now. You know, when we started in the trial of this case, the way the defendants' lawyers referred to us. They referred to this, our side of the case, as "the prosecutors"—do you remember? They called us the prosecutors; they called our side of the case the prosecutors, as if it were we individually, and not the Government, who was on that side of the case. Pretty soon they found that didn't go over quite so good, so they began referring to us as "counsel for the 4502 prosecution." They would never dignify us by the title to which we had a proper claim. And finally, I think they found that didn't go over so good with you either, so they finally came down to where they should have started, and they correctly referred to us as "Government counsel."

As I said to you, they haven't overlooked anything, little or big, by which they might reach some responsive emotion in your minds, that would get them the results that they are striving for here. And the battle that they have made here, of course, has been a magnificent one. And my hat is off to Colonel Donovan for the fight that he put up here, against tremendous, insurmountable odds, shooting testimony in this case which could have about the same effect as shooting paper balls at the Rock of Gibraltar.

I want to refer again, if I may, if you will just pardon me, to rather a personal matter—to these men who worked with me, who have done most of the work, through all this long trial and troublous time. And there has arisen in my heart and in my mind a regard and an affection for them that, as I am stumbling down the western slope of life toward the setting sun, I hope to get 4503 a morsel of comfort and consolation out of the hope and belief that I have engendered in their hearts and in their minds a similar feeling.

Now, I thank you gentlemen for your kind attention. It has been very gratifying, very helpful to me to notice the attention you have given me. I shall not undertake to throw any more bouquets towards the bench. I have taken a lot of liberties here with his Honor, Judge Stone, in busting in once in a while, as you noticed; but he knows me so well that he thought it was all right.

I don't think it ought to take you very long to decide this case. I don't think it is necessary for you to give out the impression that you have labored hard and long at it. I think you ought to go out to your jury room and you ought to make up your minds—after listening to what you are going to get from his Honor, the Judge; he is going to tell you the law. And after listening to that, I think it ought to be easy for you to make up your minds, and that you ought to be able to do it quickly.

I thank you again.

4504 Thereafter, on January 21, 1938, the Court made and entered an Order granting the Motion for Directed Verdict at the close of all the evidence of the defendant L. T. Cramer.

(Said Order is printed at page 2477 of the Record.)

DEFENDANTS' REQUESTED INSTRUCTIONS.

4505 The defendants, by their attorneys, prior to the charge to the jury by Honorable Patrick T. Stone, Judge of the above Court, and prior to the conclusion of the arguments of counsel to the jury, presented to the Court and requested the Court to give to the jury a number of Requested Instructions. Only those Requested Instructions which form the basis of the Assignment of Errors are inserted in this Bill of Exceptions.

Defendants' Requested Instruction No. 88.

> There is much uncontradicted evidence in the case concerning the condition of the oil industry and its various branches before and after February 1, 1935, at which date the indictment charges that the alleged combination, conspiracy and agreement was entered into by defendants, as to the history of the buying activities of defendants in the Mid-Continent and East Texas fields, as to the evils or abuses believed to exist in the oil industry, hindering the conservation of the limited crude oil supplies in the United States and standing in the way of the stabilization of gasoline markets. There is also evidence in the case as to the reasons of defendants for engaging in a so-called buying program or programs to remedy, as they claim, these abuses, if they did so engage, and as to the effect upon market prices of such buying, taken in conjunction with many other factors affecting supply and demand and tending to increase price but not within the control of defendants.
>
> If you find and believe from the evidence as a whole, after taking into consideration the foregoing evidence, or if you have a reasonable doubt > 4506 as to whether it is not the fact, that the only combination or agreement entered into by the defendants, or some of them, or with others, was that referred to by some of the witnesses as a "buying program", under which the parties participating therein agreed that they would distribute a portion of their purchases of gasoline among certain independent refiners, who produced somewhat less than 50% of the gasoline produced by independent refiners in said fields, for the purpose of affording to such independent refiners a market outlet at going market prices for the orderly distribution of their distress or surplus gasoline, amounting to less than 25% of the total gasoline production of said independent refiners, and which otherwise would have been sold at forced sale or sacrifice prices, and under which combination, agreement or "buying program" no party thereto agreed to buy any particular amount of gasoline at any particular price, but did agree that as to such purchases as said party might make said party would pay for the gasoline thus purchased at or about the "going market price", I instruct you that such combination or agreement or "buying program" would not be an unreasonable combination or agreement or conspiracy such as is forbidden by the Sherman Act, and in such an event it would be your duty to acquit the defendants and return a verdict of "not guilty" as to all the defendants.

Defendants' Requested Instruction No. 92.

It is not the purpose of the Sherman Anti-trust Act to make impossible the normal and fair conduct of interstate commerce through the adoption of reasonable measures to protect interstate commerce from injurious and destructive practices and thus to promote competition on a sound basis. The evidence in this case is such as to justify you in finding and concluding that injurious and destructive practices existed in the oil industry in connection with the marketing of tank car gasoline.

If, from the evidence as a whole you conclude that a reasonable theory or explanation of the conduct of defendants is that they adopted and carried 4507 out a buying program or programs consisting of reasonable measures to protect interstate commerce from injurious and destructive practices and thus to promote competition on a sound basis, you must find the defendants not guilty even though you should conclude that an incidental result of defendants' activities was to contribute to the rise of the tank car and retail prices for gasoline, shown by the evidence.

In this connection you are instructed that you may find that the dumping of surplus gasoline by independent refiners at distress or sacrifice prices under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence in this case was an injurious and destructive competitive practice, in that, you may find from the evidence that:

(1) It hindered federal and state efforts to conserve the limited supplies of crude oil in the United States;

(2) It hindered and stood in the way of the reasonable stabilization of the oil industry;

(3) It tended to eliminate the independent refiners as a competitive element in the industry;

(4) It hindered the attainment of the objectives of the National Industrial Recovery Act, including relief of unemployment and maintenance of wages at fair levels.

Defendants' Requested Instruction No. 89.

Proof beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty that the defendants, or some of them, entered into an agreement among themselves, or with others, is an essential fact which must be proved by the prosecution, failing which you must acquit all of the defendants. If, however, you find and conclude beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty that such an agreement was made, you must then determine whether the restraint of interstate commerce contemplated there-4508 by was reasonable or unreasonable, that is, whether or not it was calculated, by reason of its intent, purpose and effect, to injuriously and unduly affect the public interest in the freedom of competition in interstate commerce which it is the purpose of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act to preserve.

The legality of a combination or agreement or of a buying program or programs among business competitors cannot be determined by so simple a test as whether they restrain competition. Every agreement concerning trade, every regulation of trade, restrains. To combine, to restrain, is of their very essence. The true test of legality in this case is whether the combination, agreement, or buying program, if any existed, was such as merely regulated and perhaps thereby promoted competition, or whether it was such as might suppress or even destroy competition.

To determine this question, you must consider the facts peculiar to the oil industry: its condition before and after the alleged combination was entered into, or the alleged agreement made, the nature of the agreement or combination, and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the agreement or combination, the evils or abuses believed to exist, the reasons for adopting the particular remedy and the purposes or ends sought to be attained are all relevant in your consideration. A close and careful scrutiny of these particular conditions and purposes is necessary. Realities must dominate your judgment. The mere fact that the parties to an agreement or combination eliminate competition between themselves is not enough to condemn it. The question of the application of the Sherman Act is one of intent and effect, and is not to be determined by arbitrary assumptions.

You should, therefore, consider in this case the economic and geologic conditions peculiar to the oil industry in all its various branches, and their relation to the condition of business in general in the United States during the period with which the indictment is concerned, and for a reasonable period prior thereto; the nature and character of the oil business in all its various branches, the state and 4509 federal laws relating thereto and the manner in which they were administered, the customary means and methods of carrying on the business, the nature and character of the relationships between the various interests engaged in the various parts of the business, such as the producers of crude oil, refiners of crude oil, jobbers of gasoline and retail sellers of gasoline, the nature of the defendants' combination or agreement, or buying program or programs, if there were any, the reasons which led to its or their adoption, and the probable consequences of carrying it or them out in relation to market prices, the policy of the United States at the time the alleged conspiracy is charged to have been entered into, as embodied in the National Industrial Recovery Act, the objectives of said Act and the Petroleum Code adopted thereunder, the activities with respect to the oil industry of state, governmental and Petroleum Code authorities, the prohibition in said Code against selling below cost, the evidence that at the time the alleged conspiracy is charged to have been entered into, the price of crude oil was being maintained at $1 a barrel at the insistence of the Secretary of the Interior who was also Administrator of the Petroleum Code, the inability to maintain dollar crude unless said tank car prices of gasoline were in proper parity with the price of crude, the evidence that at the time the alleged conspiracy is charged to have been entered into, the tank car prices of gasoline in the spot markets in the Mid-Continent and East Texas fields were far below such parity, the evidence that the prices reached in the spring and summer of 1935 were prices in parity with dollar crude, the evidence that the Government desired that parity, and the evidence concerning the relation between the price of crude oil and conservation, of the necessity of maintaining an adequate price of crude oil in this connection, of the condition of the independent refiners, of the effect upon stabilization of dumping distress gasoline on the market, and of other matters affecting the public interest in interstate commerce in the products of crude oil.

The evidence is such that you may conclude therefrom that abuses and destructive practices in con-4510 nection with the marketing of gasoline existed, to the elimination of which the defendants claim that any agreement or combination made or entered into by them was aimed. You may also conclude therefrom that the independent refiners in the East Texas and Mid-Continent fields were in distress. You may also conclude from the evidence that serious retail price wars throughout the Mid-Western area were common both before and after February 1, 1935, and that distress gasoline is a contributing cause to retail price wars, and that the industry in respect of the production of crude oil and of gasoline therefrom had suffered from overproduction. There is evidence from which you may conclude that the industry was afflicted with injurious practices within itself which demanded correction, and that if such evil conditions could not be entirely cured they at least might be alleviated.

There is nothing in the Sherman Anti-Trust Act to prevent defendants from entering into an agreement or combination or buying program or programs having as its or their intent, purpose and effect an honest effort to remove abuses, to make competition fairer, and thus promote the essential interests of commerce. The interests of producers and consumers are interlinked. When industry is grievously hurt, when producing concerns fail, when unemployment mounts and communities dependent upon profitable production are prostrated the wells of commerce go dry.

It is proper for you to consider whether the actual purpose and intent of defendants in this case was to engage in a fair and open endeavor to aid the oil industry in a measurable recovery from its plight. Voluntary action to end abuses and to foster fair competitive opportunities in the public interest may be more effective than legal processes. Nor does the fact that the correction of abuses may tend to stabilize or to produce fairer price levels require that abuses should go uncorrected or that an effort to correct them should for that reason alone be stamped as an unreasonable restraint of trade. It is thus entirely legal to affect a change in market conditions where the change would be in mitigation of recognized evils, and would not impair but rather foster fair competitive opportunities.

4511 Consequently, even though you should find and believe beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty that the defendants, or some of them, entered into a combination or agreement among themselves or with others, you must acquit all of the defendants and return a verdict of "Not Guilty" as to each of them unless, after taking into account all the evidence in the case and considering it in the light of the principles I have called to your attention, you also find and believe beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty and have an abiding conviction that the restraint imposed was unreasonable, and unless you further find beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty and have an abiding conviction that the combination and agreement entered into has been proved to be in all essential and material respects the one alleged in the indictment, concerning which I have previously instructed you.

4512 Defendants' Requested Instruction No. 90.

The defendants claim that the evidence shows that their activities in purchasing gasoline were directed to the providing of a market outlet for the orderly distribution at going market prices of surplus gasoline manufactured by independent refiners which would make unnecessary its dumping on the market at distress or sacrifice prices. They further claim that the evidence shows that if such dumping of surplus gasoline, had it been allowed to continue, would have injuriously affected the public interest and competitive conditions in interstate commerce, in that (1) it would have hindered Federal and State efforts to conserve the limited supplies of crude oil in the United States; (2) it would have hindered the reasonable stabilization of the oil industry; (3) it would have tended to eliminate the independent refiners as a competitive element in the industry; and (4) it would have hindered the attainment of the objectives of the National Industrial Recovery Act, including the relieving of unemployment and maintaining wages at fair levels.

You must therefore determine from the evidence (First); whether or not the true objectives of defendants were those aforesaid; and (Second); whether or not the activities of the defendants were reasonably calculated to attain said objectives. If you should so find, or if you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that these were not the objectives of defendants, then you should acquit said defendants by returning a verdict of not guilty, as in such event defendants' activities would not be illegal, as such would not be the unreasonable combination and conspiracy alleged in the indictment. In determining whether such were the objectives of the defendants, and whether or not the activities of the defendants were reasonably calculated to attain said objectives, you should give due consideration to the evidence relating to the following claims of the defendants:

([illegible]) That for some time prior to the period of the indictment there had been overproduction of crude oil in the United States.

4513 (2) That the Government of the United States and the oil producing states including the States of Texas and Oklahoma, were engaged in an effort to control in the public interest this overproduction of crude oil.

(3) That the principal means being employed to control said overproduction of crude oil was the enforcement of production quotas beyond which it was made illegal to produce.

(4) That at the time the alleged conspiracy is alleged to have been entered into the Federal Government regarded it as essential in the public interest both from the standpoint of conservation of crude oil and reasonable stabilization of the oil industry, that the price of crude oil should not be less than $1 a barrel.

(5) That the price of crude oil could not remain at approximately $1 a barrel unless the tank car price of gasoline was at a parity, or in a normal and proper relation thereto.

(6) That the tank car price of gasoline at the time the alleged conspiracy is alleged to have been entered into was far below parity with the price of crude oil.

(7) That the level of tank car prices reached in the spring of 1935 and existing in the summer of 1935 was at parity with dollar crude, and recognized by the Government to be in parity, and to be the parity desired by it.

(8) That any combination or agreement entered into or made by defendants, or any buying program engaged in by them, with respect to the purchasing of distress gasoline from independent refiners, did not contemplate any increase in the tank car price of gasoline, whether as its primary or incidental purpose, to a level above parity with the price of crude oil.

(9) That the tank car price of gasoline did not, at any time during the period of the alleged conspiracy, rise to a figure above parity with the price

4514 of crude oil.

(10) That the production of surplus gasoline by independent refiners for which they had no regular trade outlets was unavoidable if their operations were to be conducted on an economic and competitive basis.

(11) That by reason of lack of storage facilities and operating capital independent refiners by and large had to dispose promptly of surplus gasoline at practically any price it would bring.

(12) That at the time the defendants are alleged to have engaged in their buying programs the oil industry was operating under emergency conditions and that the Federal Government, through the Petroleum Code, was endeavoring to stabilize the industry on a profitable basis in order to increase purchasing power, to relieve unemployment and to bring about and maintain the payment of fair wages in the industry.

(13) That at the time the defendants are alleged to have embarked upon their buying programs, to-wit, March 1, 1935, the tank car price of gasoline was far below parity with crude oil.

(14) That Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes, Oil Administrator under the Petroleum Code, desired and urged the achievement of parity between the tank car price of gasoline and the price of crude oil and was gratified when late in the spring of 1935 such parity was attained.

(15) That under the Petroleum Code the gasoline production of refineries throughout the United States was restricted by allocations which would necessarily result in decreasing the supply of gasoline and increasing the price thereof.

(16) That on July 20, 1934, Harold L. Ickes, Oil Administrator under the Petroleum Code, authorized the defendant Arnott to take action to settle retail price wars and to eliminate destructive price-cutting in connection therewith.

4515 (17) That elimination or control of retail price wars and of destructive price-cutting was impossible with the tank car price of gasoline below parity with crude oil and below cost of recovery levels.

(18) That because of the availability of competing sources of supply it would have been impossible to fix the tank car price of gasoline at high, arbitrary and non-competitive levels.

(19) That, for the first time, in the summer of 1935 the objective of the Government of obtaining a proper balance in the supply and demand was attained in the oil industry.

(20) That in June, 1935, the industry attained the best statistical position it had had for years and that the summer of 1935 was the highest consuming season that the industry had had for many years.

If from all the evidence in the case you conclude that any buying programs engaged in by defendants were reasonable and not unreasonable restraints of commerce, or if you cannot conclude beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty and have an abiding conviction that the activities of defendants did not constitute a reasonable restraint of interstate commerce, then you will find the defendants not guilty.

4516 Defendants' Requested Instruction No. 40.

You cannot find the defendants guilty unless the prosecution proves each and all of the material and essential allegations of the indictment beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty. The first material and essential allegation of the indictment which the prosecution must so prove is that the defendants and other persons combined and conspired together for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing the tank car prices of gasoline in the spot markets in the East Texas and Mid-Continent fields, and in an alleged spot market at Chicago, Illinois. It is absolutely essential that the prosecution prove beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty the foregoing charge in the indictment. Otherwise, you must acquit all of the defendants and you must return a verdict of not guilty as to each of them.

I further charge you that proof, beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty, of an agreement, the purpose of which was to remove the depressing influences of the dumping of distress gasoline upon said tank car prices of gasoline and to permit said prices to advance, unimpeded by said depressing influences, to whatever level they might naturally reach, through the play of economic forces, by purchasing, distress or surplus gasoline from independent refiners at going market prices, is entirely insufficient to prove said charge in the indictment. Consequently, even though you should find and believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty that the defendants or some of them combined and conspired together or with others for such limited purpose you must acquit all of the defendants and return a verdict of not guilty as to each of them.

4517 Defendants' Requested Instruction No. 122.

The Government of the United States is administered by many different officials, departments, bureaus and agencies. The Department of Justice, which is the law department of the United States Government, is prosecuting this case, and therefore, represents and is referred to as "the Government" or "the United States" herein. In administering the National Industrial Recovery Act and the Petroleum Code, and in governmental activities carried on for the conservation of the limited oil resources of the United States, however, the governmental agencies consisted, among others, of the President of the United States, Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior and Oil Administrator, the Petroleum Administrative Board, and the National Recovery Administration.

The court instructs the jury that the indictment herein alleges that the defendants combined and conspired together for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing the tank car prices of gasoline, and that said alleged combination and conspiracy was effectuated or carried out by means of two concerted gasoline buying programs, to wit, the East Texas Buying Program and the Mid-Continent Buying Program, as defined in the indictment. As one of their defenses, the defendants, and each of them, claim: That, if they did engage in such concerted buying programs, or either of them, they were instigated and induced to engage and participate in said alleged buying programs by Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior and the Petroleum Administrator, duly appointed by the President of the United States under Section 2(b) of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and by virtue of certain provisions of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum

Industry duly signed by the President on August 19, 1933, and amendments thereto; and that they would not have engaged or participated in said buying programs, or either of them, if it had not been for the instigation and inducement of said Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior and Petroleum Administrator, and the provisions of said Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry and amendments thereto. In this connection, I instruct 4518 you that if you find from the evidence herein that the defendants were instigated and induced by said Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior and the Petroleum Administrator, and by the provisions of said Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry and the amendments thereto, to engage and participate in said buying programs, and that they would not have engaged or participated in said buying programs but for such instigation and inducement, then you should return a verdict of "Not Guilty" as to all the defendants in this case.

4519 Defendants' Requested Instruction No. 121.

The Government of the United States is administered by many different officials, departments, bureaus and agencies. The Department of Justice, which is the law department of the United States Government, is prosecuting this case and, therefore, represents and is referred to as "the Government" or "the United States" herein. In administering the National Industrial Recovery Act and the Petroleum Code, and in governmental activities carried on for the conservation of the limited oil resources of the United States, however, the governmental agencies consisted, among others, of the President of the United States, Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior and Oil Administrator, the Petroleum Administrative Board, and the National Recovery Administration.

The court instructs the jury that the indictment herein alleges that the defendants combined and conspired together for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing the tank car prices of gasoline; and that said alleged combination and conspiracy was effectuated or carried out by means of two concerted buying programs, to wit, the East Texas Buying Program and the Mid-Continent Buying Program, as defined in the indictment. As one of their defenses, the defendants, and each of them claim: That, if they did engage in such concerted buying programs or either of them, they were instigated and induced to engage and participate in said alleged buying programs by Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior and the Petroleum Administrator, duly appointed by the President of the United States under Section 2(b) of the National Industrial Recovery Act; and that they would not have engaged or participated in said alleged buying programs, or either of them, if it had not been for the instigation and inducement of said Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior and Petroleum Administrator. In this connection, I instruct you that if you find from the evidence herein that the defendants were instigated and induced by the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior and Petroleum Administrator, to engage and participate in said buying programs, and that they would not have engaged or participated in said buying programs but for such instigation and inducement, then you should return a verdict of "not guilty" as to all the defendants in this case. 4520

Defendants' Requested Instruction No. 131.

If you find that the defendants, or some of them, had reason to believe and in fact did believe that Administrator Ickes or the Petroleum Administrative Board, or both, felt that the buying activities of the defendants were constructive and proper efforts to aid the independent refiner and to stabilize the tank car and retail markets, and if you find that the defendants would not have engaged in these activities if they had not believed that they met with the approval of the Administrator or the Petroleum Administrative Board, and if you further find that the defendants were induced to continue their activities after the expiration of the Petroleum Code by statements made by responsible Government officials urging them to hold on to the advantages that had been gained under the Code, then you will take such facts into consideration in determining whether or not such defendants contemplated a reasonable or unreasonable restraint of interstate commerce.

Defendants' Requested Instruction No. 140.

Even if you should find and believe beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty that the defendants, or some of them, entered into an agreement to purchase gasoline from independent refiners in the Mid-Continent and East Texas fields or either of them, and made purchases thereunder, you shall, nevertheless acquit the defendants and return a verdict of "Not Guilty" if you find and believe that they were induced to enter into said agreement, or to carry it out by reason of any action the Secretary of the Interior may have taken, or by the acts of the Petroleum Administrative Board, or any of its members, or if you have a reasonable doubt as to whether said defendants were not so induced. In determin-
4521 ing this question you shall take into account the fact that at the time said agreement is alleged to have been entered into the oil industry was operating under the Petroleum Code adopted under the National Industrial Recovery Act, that the Secretary of the Interior was the Administrator of said Code, that the Petroleum Administrative Board were government officials or employees acting in an advisory capacity to the Secretary of the Interior and themselves possessed with considerable discretionary authority, the machinery set up under the Code, the manner in which such machinery operated, the nature of the contacts between members of the industry and the Administrator, and the Petroleum Administrative Board and its members, respectively, the objectives of the National Industrial Recovery Act and of the Petroleum Code, the objectives of the Oil Administrator as communicated to members of the industry, the extent to which Government representatives knew of or acquiesced in said agreement or plan. If upon all the evidence you find and believe that the defendants were induced to enter into said plan or to carry the same out thereafter by acts of the Secretary of the Interior, said Board or its members, and would have refrained from carrying out the same except for such inducement, or if you have a reasonable doubt in respect of the existence or non-existence of such inducement, you must acquit the defendants and return a verdict of "Not Guilty."

Defendants' Requested Instruction No. 130.

If you find from the evidence that the defendants, or some of them, had reason to believe and in good faith did believe that the defendant Arnott was authorized by the letter of July 20, 1934, written to him by Harold L. Ickes in his official capacity as Administrator for the petroleum industry, to deal with the tank car market in a voluntary, cooperative manner in order to stabilize the retail market and to prevent price wars, and if you find that the defendants, or some of them, were induced to continue their activities after the expiration of the Petroleum Code by statements made by responsible Government officials urging them to hold on to the advantages that had been gained under the Code, you will take such 4522 facts into consideration in determining whether or not such defendants contemplated a reasonable or unreasonable restraint of interstate commerce.

Defendants' Requested Instruction No. 110.

If you find that the Administrator or the Petroleum Administrative Board, or both, were kept advised of the buying activities of the defendants, and if you further find that the Administrator or the Petroleum Administrative Board, or both, were of the opinion that such buying activities were constructive and proper efforts in order to relieve the depression or to aid the independent refiners, or to stabilize the tank car and retail markets and relieve conditions causing price wars, sales below cost and unemployment, then you are instructed that such opinion of the Administrator or the Petroleum Administrative Board, or both, is entitled to great weight and respect in considering the question now presented as to whether or not such buying activities were an unreasonable restraint of trade.

Defendants' Requested Instruction No. 160.

You are instructed that there is no charge in this indictment that these defendants, or any of them, entered into any agreement, combination or understanding with any independent refiner as to the price to be charged by such independent refiner for gasoline in tank car lots in sales to jobbers or consumers.

You are, therefore, instructed to disregard any claims by counsel for the prosecution in their closing arguments that such an agreement, combination or understanding existed.

Defendants' Requested Instruction No. 161.

You are instructed that there is not sufficient evidence in this record from which you could 4523 properly find that these defendants, or any of them, entered into any agreement, combination or understanding with any independent refiner as to the price to be charged by such independent refiner for gasoline in tank car lots in sales to jobbers or consumers. You are, therefore, further instructed to disregard any claims by counsel for the prosecution in their closing arguments that such an agreement, combination or understanding existed.

Defendants' Requested Instruction No. 151.

There has been reference made by counsel for the prosecution in argument to the rise in the price of crude in January, 1936, and a claim that this rise was caused by the conduct of the defendants. There is no such allegation in the indictment, there is no evidence as to the causes of such price rise, and there is no sufficient evidence to support such charge now made by the prosecution, and you are instructed to disregard the statements made on this point by counsel for the prosecution.

Defendants' Requested Instruction No. 116.

A letter of Mr. Ickes to Mr. Arnott under date of April 2, 1935, has been received in evidence. In that letter the following language is used:

> "* * * I know you will appreciate that agreements between supplying companies which might be in conflict with the anti-trust laws of the United States require specific approval after due consideration if companies are to receive the protection afforded by Sections 4 and 5 of the National Industrial Recovery Act.
> "I understand that the temporary character of a number of situations and the need for immediate action has made formalized agreements impracticable and in a number of instances they > 4524 may be unnecessary. However, when the understandings arrived at as bases of solution of price wars affecting the industry over a considerable area are intended to operate over a definite period of time or involve substantial changes in the policy of the various supplying companies made only in consideration of similar action on the part of other companies, it is necessary that the procedure required by the Recovery Act be followed in order that the arrangement be legal."

You must not misunderstand or misapply this language. There was no legal obligation on the part of these defendants to submit any of their activities to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval. If those activities were otherwise lawful under the Anti-Trust Laws, they would not be illegal, because they were not submitted to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval and did not receive his approval. If this letter of April 2nd, Exhibit 980, was intended to state that activities or an agreement among the defendants otherwise lawful under the Anti-Trust Laws would be legal only if submitted to and approved by the Secretary, then this letter of Mr. Ickes does not state the law and you should disregard any such statement in this letter and comment of counsel, if any, to that effect. Whether the activities of the defendants as shown by the evidence were legal or illegal is for you to determine under the instructions I give you. If you find them to be otherwise legal under those instructions, it doesn't make any difference whether they were or were not submitted to the Secretary and whether they did or did not have his approval.

Thereupon, on January 21, 1938, the Honorable Patrick T. Stone, Judge of the above Court, read his instructions to the jury and charged the jury in this cause as follows:

INSTRUCTIONS TO THE JURY.

4525 The Court: Gentlemen of the Jury:

This case, which has engrossed our attention for nearly four months, is drawing to a close. Counsel for the respective parties have completed the presentation of the testimony and the evidence, and they have concluded their arguments. The case is now ready for your determination.

It is my duty to instruct you upon the law applicable to the case in any view you may take of the evidence. It is your duty to consider and weigh the evidence, consisting of the spoken words and the records and the documents and other exhibits received in evidence, and, in the light of the instructions I am about to give you, to determine the guilt or innocence of each defendant.

The defendants have entered, all of the defendants have entered pleas of Not Guilty to the indictment. Those pleas put the Government to the proof of all the essential facts necessary to determine their guilt.

This is an important case, and invites your most earnest and conscientious consideration. Both the United 4526 States and the defendants are vitally interested in a just verdict.

No more serious or important duty could be undertaken by a citizen than that which rests upon you today. To courageously, honestly and fearlessly determine the facts upon which guilt or innocence depends is a responsibility and a duty which should invoke your worthiest effort. I expect you to squarely meet your responsibility and to earnestly and fearlessly determine the issues. I will be satisfied with nothing short of such efforts on your part.

Jury duty is always a very responsible and a grave duty, which calls for the exercise of the most conscientious and painstaking examination of the facts by the jury, in order that no injustice may be done to any of the defendants, who are deeply concerned, or to the cause of good government, which is of equal importance. You should approach the consideration of this case with your oaths as jurors steadfastly in mind, to try this case according to the evidence; and you should let no motive other than a conscientious purpose to do justice have any bearing with you in reaching your verdict.

You are by law made the responsible judges of the credibility and effect of the evidence, and your verdict 4527 should reflect the truth as you find the same to be from the evidence given here in court, considered in the light of the Court's instructions. If you have learned elsewhere anything about this case, it is your duty to lay aside all such outside knowledge and base your verdict only on the evidence presented on this trial.

The burden of proof in this case is upon the Government. The defendants entered on this trial presumed by the law to be innocent of any crime. They are not required to prove their innocence. They are presumed to be innocent until proven guilty, and that presumption remains with them throughout this trial and in your jury room, and until you have cast your last ballot. It is your duty to attempt to reconcile the evidence with this presumption. Before you may find any defendant guilty of any offense charged in the indictment, you must be convinced beyond all reasonable doubt that he is guilty.

If the material facts may be fairly reconciled with innocence, a reasonable doubt does then exist. In short, if the evidence and the proper inferences be found by you to be as consistent with innocence as with guilt, the defendants are entitled to acquittal.

4528 But a reasonable doubt which forbids conviction must be real and not imaginary. It must be an honest and substantial misgiving for which a good reason may be given based upon the nature of the evidence or lack of evidence in the case. Guilt is proved beyond a reasonable doubt when all the evidence in the case, impartially and reasonably considered, is sufficient to impress the judgment of ordinary reasonable and prudent jurors with a conviction upon which they would act without hesitation in the most important affairs of life.

4529 It is your duty to scrutinize the evidence with the utmost care and caution; and to bring to that duty the reason and prudence which you would exercise in the most important affairs of life; in fact, all the judgment, caution, and discrimination that you possess, and then, unless you can say from that standpoint that you are satisfied of the guilt of a defendant beyond a reasonable doubt, you should acquit such defendant, whether it be an individual or a corporation, for, when a juror has a reasonable doubt of the guilt of a defendant in a criminal case, he cannot, without great violence to his conscience and sense of right, agree upon a verdict of conviction.

In considering the testimony, you should, as to each witness, consider his age, appearance, and manner of testifying, his interest in the result of the trial, if any appears, any temptation to testify falsely appearing in the evidence, his intelligence and opportunity to know the facts, or the lack thereof, and the probability or improbability of the testimony given, and all other like circumstances appearing by the evidence, and from all these you should determine upon the weight and credit you will give to the testimony of each witness.

4530 Some of the defendants have testified in their own behalf. Each is a competent witness; and you should not discredit him merely because he is charged with crime. Each defendant, however, is deeply interested in the result of the trial; and you are entitled to take that into consideration, and consider the temptation which arises under such circumstances to testify to a state of facts favorable to himself. Other witnesses on this trial may, by reason of their relations to the persons concerned, be deemed to be interested in the result. You should take into consideration all such interest of every witness, so far as it appears by the evidence. The same tests that you apply to determine the credibility of the defendants, you should apply to every other witness.

Other defendants have not testified in this case, and you are instructed that the failure of a defendant to testify does not justify the jury in drawing an inference hostile to him. Under the criminal law, a defendant has the right to testify or not. If he testifies, he becomes liable to all the tests that all other witnesses are liable to be subjected to. If he does not testify, the jury has no right, in determining the question of guilt or innocence, to draw any inference hostile to the defendant because of his failure to testify.

4531 In case you become satisfied from the evidence that any witness has on this trial wilfully testified falsely as to any material fact, you are at liberty, in your discretion, to disregard all the testimony of such witness, unless it is supported by other credible evidence in the case.

These defendants are charged with a violation of what is known as the Sherman Act, a statute enacted by Congress.

The section of the Sherman Act under which the indictment in this case has been returned is as follows:

> "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor."

At the outset of the trial you heard the charge contained in the indictment described. In substance, the indictment charges that, beginning on or about the first of March, 1935, and continuing to the date of the return of the indictment in December, 1936, the defendants and 4532 others referred to in the indictment have combined and conspired together for the purpose of raising and fixing the price of gasoline sold to jobbers and consumers in the ten states which you have heard described as the Mid-Western area, or the Standard of Indiana territory. The indictment alleges that the prices to jobbers and also to consumers in these ten Mid-Western states are determined by the prices paid for gasoline in certain spot markets. In the case of jobbers, it is alleged that many of their contracts with the defendant major oil companies expressly provide that the basic prices which they are required to pay for the gasoline shall be determined by the spot market prices as published in Platt's Oilgram and the Chicago Journal of Commerce. In the case of consumers, the indictment alleges that the retail prices of gasoline are directly influenced by the spot market prices and that when the spot market prices move up, the retail prices also move up. The indictment alleges that in order to raise the price of gasoline to jobbers and consumers, the defendants combined together, and also combined with a large number of so-called independent refiners, to raise the spot market prices. The indictment alleges that the spot market prices consist of prices charged in day-to-day sales by small independent refiners located in the 4533 Mid-Continent fields and in East Texas. It is alleged that the major companies sell mostly on contracts and do not sell gasoline to any extent on the spot markets, and that these sales on the spot markets consist almost entirely of sales made by independent refiners.

The indictment further alleges that the amount of gasoline sold on the spot markets is very small compared to all the gasoline sold in the ten Mid-Western states. The allegation of the indictment is that it constitutes only 5% of all the gasoline sold in those states, and, therefore, the indictment alleges that in order to raise the price of the large amount of gasoline sold mostly by the defendants to jobbers and consumers in this area, it was necessary only to raise the price of the relatively small amount of gasoline sold by the independent refiners on the spot markets. And then the indictment alleges that the defendants, beginning on or about the first of March, 1935, as I have stated, organized two buying programs, one in the Mid-Continent fields, the other in East Texas, for the purpose of buying up gasoline from the independent refiners in the spot markets in order to raise the spot market prices, and thereby to raise the prices of gasoline sold by the defendants to jobbers under contract and to consumers in the ten Middle Western states.

4534 This, as I have said, is what the indictment alleges and what the Government has undertaken to prove. There are further allegations in the indictment, but I have referred to the material and essential ones which the Government must prove beyond a reasonable doubt before you may find any of the defendants guilty.

In brief, the indictment charges that the defendants unlawfully combined and conspired together for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing the spot market tank car price of gasoline in the East Texas field, the Mid-Continent fields, and in an alleged spot market at Chicago, Illinois, and maintaining said prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels and at levels agreed upon among themselves, for the ultimate purpose of intentionally increasing and fixing thereby the wholesale or tank car prices of gasoline contracted to be sold, which was sold in the ten states of the so-called Mid-Western area, including the Western District of Wisconsin, and, in turn, of intentionally raising the general levels of retail prices prevailing in said Mid-Western area, including the Western District of Wisconsin.

You will be permitted to take the indictment with you to the jury room, but I want you to understand that the indictment is no proof whatsoever of the guilt of 4535 these defendants. The indictment in this case is of itself a mere formal accusation, and you are not to be influenced by the mere fact that an indictment was returned against these defendants. The indictment creates no presumption whatever against these defendants, nor is it to be considered by you as evidence proving any fact concerning the offenses charged.

The indictment charges that the trade journals, to which I have referred, cooperated in the conspiracy alleged, but, in the opinion of the court, the evidence presented by the Government failed to prove that the trade journals did so cooperate in a manner which would render them guilty of participating in an illegal conspiracy, and therefore the journals were dismissed at the close of the presentation of the Government's evidence. Certain other defendants have also been dismissed from this case. The allegations in the indictment that the defendants who have been dismissed combined and conspired with the other defendants herein must be ignored by you as if such allegations had never been contained in the indictment.

I shall now indicate to you what the Sherman Act means. There is nothing in that Act which prevents an individual, if he acts alone and not in combination or concert with others, from buying or selling goods at any price that 4536 he chooses. This applies equally to a corporation.

The Sherman law places no restriction of any kind upon any individual or corporation as to the manner in which it may conduct its business, so long as it acts alone, and not in combination with others.

Also, the law does not prevent individuals or corporations from acting together, provided their joint action is for a lawful purpose. Persons engaged in commerce may join together to improve trade conditions so long as they do it in a manner that is not prohibited by law. And so it is necessary to consider just what cooperative or concerted activity is rendered illegal by the Sherman Act.

A conspiracy means a combination for an illegal purpose, and, therefore, you will first consider whether the defendants have acted together, and if you so find, then you will consider whether their concerted or joint activity was for an illegal purpose within the meaning of the Sherman Act.

You will understand that a group of persons acting together may at the same time be engaged in lawful as well as in unlawful activities, but the fact that some of the activities may be lawful and may be authorized by law does not protect them, if at the same time they also engage 4537 in unlawful activities.

To be more specific, if you should find that the defendants, or some of them, were engaged together in lawful Code activities during the first few months of the time covered by the alleged conspiracy, this would not necessarily indicate that other activities carried on by them at the same time, in those same months, may not be illegal. In other words, persons in a combination may engage in a number of lawful activities, but if a single one of their concerted activities is an unlawful restraint of trade, then the fact that at the same time they were also engaged in a number of lawful activities will not save them from the provisions of the Sherman Act. And so it is not necessary in this case for the Government to establish that all of the activities of the defendants, or of the various committees referred to in the testimony were all illegal. A committee may be constituted for a lawful purpose, but if its members go beyond what the law permits and undertake to engage in activities which violate the law, they would be guilty regardless of the purposes for which the committee met together at the start.

Now, how are you to decide whether the activities of a combination, assuming that you find that a combination or common understanding existed, were legal or illegal? You should consider the testimony, including the declara-4538 tions made by the defendants who were in the combination or by their agents, whether made orally or in written documents, and from the testimony, and from these documents, and from all the evidence in this case, you may find that the defendants, or some of them, had a common understanding or cooperated together to carry out an illegal purpose, in which event I instruct you the combination would be an illegal combination under the law.

You must remember that the real nature of a combination or conspiracy cannot be judged by viewing its parts separately, but only by looking at it as a whole, as an entirety. You should consider all the evidence in the case bearing on the question, and from that you will determine whether these defendants combined to restrain trade as charged in the indictment.

You will bear in mind that men who combine for illegal purposes will normally not tell openly everything about their purposes. Thus it is often impossible to prove the existence of an illegal agreement by what is known as direct evidence. Very often, particularly in conspiracy cases, there cannot be direct proof of the making or existence of an illegal understanding. The acts of the parties over a period of time, their course of conduct and declara-4539 tions, either written or oral, and all the surrounding circumstances may then be considered by you for the purpose of determining whether or not an illegal understanding was entered into.

There are two kinds of evidence—direct and circumstantial evidence. Direct evidence is that sort of evidence by which a fact is proved directly and without inference from other facts, and is usually given by witnesses who saw, heard, or otherwise observed some particular fact or occurrence. Circumstantial evidence is that sort of evidence by which an inference of an unknown fact is drawn from the existence of known facts. In determining whether any defendant or defendants, individual or corporate, now on trial, agreed or consented to or participated in any conspiracy as charged in the indictment, you will consider all of the evidence bearing on that question. In determining the weight to be given to circumstantial evidence bearing on this issue, you will bear in mind that to warrant a conviction on circumstantial evidence, each fact necessary to prove the guilt of a defendant must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, and all of the facts so proved must be consistent with each other and with the main fact sought to be proved, and the circumstances, taken all together, 4540 must be of a conclusive nature and producing in effect a reasonable and moral certainty that the defendant whose guilt or innocence is under consideration became a party to the alleged conspiracy. The mere union of a limited number of independent circumstances, each of an imperfect and inconclusive character, will not justify a conviction. They must be such as to create and justify full belief according to the standard rules of certainty. It is not sufficient that they coincide with and render probable the guilt of the accused. The facts so proved must be incompatible with innocence and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable theory than that of guilt.

In your deliberations, you are not at liberty to indulge in or give any weight to conjecture or suspicion. Conjecture or suspicion cannot establish any fact. Whenever circumstantial evidence is relied upon to prove a fact, the circumstances must be proved, and not themselves presumed.

Nor is it every fact or circumstance that the law admits as possessing the force of evidence and from which an ingenious or imaginative mind might infer, by some mental process or other, the existence of the main fact in issue, that can justify such inference. In attempting to prove the fact by circumstantial evidence, there are certain legal 4541 rules to be observed that reason and experience have found essential to the discovery of truth and the protection of innocence. The circumstances themselves must be established by a direct proof, and cannot be left to rest upon conjecture or suspicion, and the inference which may be based upon the facts and circumstances proved, must be a clear and strong logical inference. When a criminal charge is sought to be sustained by circumstantial evidence, the proof must meet two requirements. First, all the facts and circumstances proved must be consistent with the commission of the offense charged in the indictment. If you find any fact proved which in your judgment is inconsistent with the existence of the offense charged, you will find the defendants not guilty. Second, you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty that the facts and circumstances proved can have no reasonable interpretation but that of the commission of the offense charged, excluding every reasonable theory but that of guilt, and are inconsistent with innocence.

Whenever a circumstance, relied upon as evidence of criminal guilt, is susceptible of two reasonable inferences, one of which is in favor of innocence, such circumstance is robbed of all probative value, even though from the 4542 other inference guilt may be fairly deduced; and with respect to any such circumstance, you must accept that inference which is in favor of innocence.

Now, what must you find before you may conclude that the Sherman Act has been violated? It is illegal and a violation of the Sherman law for a group of individuals or corporations, or both, to act together to raise the prices to be charged for the commodity which they manufacture, where they control a substantial part of the interstate trade and commerce in that commodity.

If you find that the defendants, and those acting in concert with them, controlled the greater part of the gasoline sold in the ten Middle Western States, and had the power to raise the price of that gasoline, and that the defendants and these other persons acting with them have knowingly engaged in a combination to raise or fix the price to be charged for gasoline to jobbers or consumers in the Mid-Western area as charged in the indictment, then you will understand that these defendants have violated the Sherman Act and are guilty as charged in the indictment.

You will understand also that if you find such a combination and conspiracy as I have just stated, then such combination and conspiracy is illegal, regardless of whether the prices fixed or brought about by the combination were high prices or not, or were reasonable or unreason-4543 able. If you find that a combination existed and that such combination had the power to raise the price, the amount by which prices may have been affected by the combination is not important under the law.

You will also understand that if you find an illegal combination to have existed among all or some of the defendants, having for its purpose the raising of prices, it does not matter that there may have been also other factors which contributed to the raising of the prices, as, for example, the existence of the Connally Act, allocations or voluntary curtailment under the Code, or increased consumer demand, improvement in the economic conditions generally, and the like.

As circumstantial evidence of an unlawful agreement, among other circumstances, the Government points to the rise in the tank car prices of gasoline between March and June of 1935, and the uniform level tank car price from June 1935 throughout the year. The defendants have offered testimony of other existing elements and factors having an influence upon the spot market tank car price of gasoline and claim that the rise in the tank car price of gasoline between March and June, 1935, was caused by:

4544 (1) Adoption of the Connally Act of February 22, 1935, and the setting up of the Federal Tender Board in the East Texas field thereunder on or about March 1, 1935;

(2) Refinery allocations under the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry and in addition thereto, the voluntary curtailment by defendants and others of their gasoline production in the month of March 1935, at the insistence and request of the National Coordinator for the Petroleum Industry, under the Code, which request for curtailment was sanctioned by the Petroleum Administrator;

(3) An increased consumptive demand in gasoline between March and June of 1935 in excess of 3,000,000 barrels over the consumptive demand forecast by the Petroleum Administrative Board;

(4) Control of Inventory withdrawal by the Oil Administrator;

(5) A buying program on the part of defendants which obligated no defendant to purchase any particular quantity of gasoline at any particular price; but pursuant to which the defendant companies distributed a portion of their necessary gasoline purchases among independent refiners in order to give 4545 such refiners an orderly market outlet for their distress gasoline at no more than the going market price;

(6) The improvement in economic conditions generally;

(7) A constant cost for crude oil which was $1 per barrel in the field plus transportation cost to the refinery;

And that the stable condition prevailing in the gasoline tank car market between June of 1935 and January of 1936 was caused by:

(1) A stable crude price of $1 per barrel brought about by more efficient State regulation of production of crude oil to conform to the consumptive demand for gasoline, aided by the machinery provided in the Interstate Oil Compact adopted in February of 1935 and becoming effective in August of 1935;

(2) A stable retail market;

(3) A buying program on the part of defendants which obligated no defendant to purchase any particular quantity of gasoline at any particular price; but pursuant to which the defendant companies distributed a portion of their necessary gasoline purchases among independent refiners in order to give such refiners an orderly market outlet for their dis-
4546 tress gasoline at no more than the going market price;

Now, unless you find from the testimony and believe beyond a reasonable doubt that the said price increased, and its continuance at the level shown by the evidence was caused by an unlawful agreement or combination of the defendants, as alleged in the indictment, and as heretofore defined and explained to you, and not caused by the factors aforesaid, then it is your duty to acquit the defendants and to return verdicts of "not guilty".

Furthermore, if you find that the defendants combined and conspired to raise the sale prices of their gasoline, any good intentions which they might have had in what they did will not make their understanding or combination legal, or excuse them from the consequences of their acts, and it does not matter how helpful or beneficial such illegal activities may have been to the defendants or to the independent refiners or to any other class of persons. By way of illustration: If you should find such combination and conspiracy as I have described, then if you should also find that such combination and conspiracy was beneficial to the independent refiners, that will not make the combination and conspiracy a lawful one.

4547 An understanding on the part of the members of a combination controlling a substantial part of an industry to raise the price which the members are to charge for their commodity is, in and of itself, an undue and unreasonable restraint of trade and commerce, provided only that the members of the combination are engaged in interstate trade and commerce.

Price fixing in interstate commerce by a combination or group of refiners controlling the substantial part of an industry is an undue and unreasonable restraint under the Sherman Act without regard to the question of how high or how low the prices fixed may be. It is not a question as to what extent prices were affected, nor is it a question of how reasonable or unreasonable the prices may have been. What the law condemns is the power on the part of such a group controlling a substantial part of an industry to raise the price if it chooses to do so, and for that reason it condemns and brands as illegal all attempts at price fixing by a group such as I have described. The law condemns the exercise by any combination of the power to raise prices, and so, as I have stated, if you find a combination and that the members of the combination had the power to raise the price, and acted together for that purpose, then I charge you that the combination is illegal, and your verdict should be guilty as to each defendant whom you find to have 4548 knowingly participated therein.

In deciding whether such a combination as I have described existed, you must consider all the facts and circumstances and all of the elements of the case as a whole. If you are satisfied from all of the evidence that any of the defendants acted together for the purpose of raising the price and that they had the power to raise the price, and did in fact affect the level of prices for gasoline in the ten Middle Western states, including the Western District of Wisconsin, as charged in the indictment, then you may return a verdict of guilty against such defendants.

In order to find that an illegal conspiracy existed, it is not necessary for you to find that there was a written or formal agreement among the defendants, or that any participant in the combination was bound to the other to perform any portion thereof. It is sufficient to establish an illegal conspiracy if it be shown that persons acted together in order to carry out a common illegal purpose. In order for you to find that there was an illegal conspiracy, it is not necessary that you find that the trade journals knowingly cooperated; and it is not necessary for you to find that the amounts to be purchased were agreed upon or that there was any agreement or understanding as to 4549 amounts to be purchased by the several defendants.
Nor does it matter that the amounts purchased by them may have been small, provided that the amounts purchased were sufficient to enable the defendants to carry out the illegal purpose charged.

And if you find that the independent refiners cooperated with the defendant major oil companies to raise the price, it does not matter which group led the prices upward. In other words, it does not matter whether the independent refiners or the defendant companies raised the price first, provided that they were all acting together in pursuance of the common purpose of raising prices.

The Congress of the United States has determined that the public interest is best protected by the maintenance of competition. The benefits to be gained by unrestrained trade between the states were deemed by Congress to be greater than any benefits that would result from the arbitrary control by the refiners over price.

I have stated to you that the burden is upon the Government to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, a combination and conspiracy as alleged in the indictment. You will understand also that once the combination or con-4550 spiracy is shown, thereafter the acts of any one of the conspirators is binding upon all the rest who participated therein. In other words, the existence of an unlawful combination must first be shown by the Government. Evidence has been adduced in behalf of the Government to the effect that the defendants acted together. Now this in itself would not make any illegal combination as I have stated, and would not be what is known in the law as a conspiracy. You are to examine the acts of the defendants, their declarations, all the circumstances, and all of the evidence, in determining whether there was the purpose charged in the indictment of unlawfully raising and fixing the price of gasoline to be sold in the ten Mid-Western states. If you find that that purpose existed, then the combination would be illegal. The declarations contained in the correspondence between the various defendants or between defendants and their respective companies, as shown in the exhibits received in evidence, may be considered in determining the purposes and effects of the concerted activity, and are to be considered by you in determining whether the concerted activity was a combination and conspiracy to restrain trade and commerce in gasoline as charged in the indictment.

4551 If you come to the conclusion from the evidence in this case that these defendants possessed the power to raise the price of gasoline to be sold in the ten Middle Western states, and that there was the purpose to exert that power, then the combination became, from the time that this purpose appeared, an illegal one, and a conspiracy in restraint of trade, and the defendants participating therein are guilty of the offense charged in the indictment.

If from all the evidence before you, you find not only that there was concerted action, that is, action together, of the defendants, but that it sought to accomplish the illegal purpose of raising the price of gasoline to any extent, then it would follow that the acts and declarations of any one or more of the conspirators in furtherance of the conspiracy are binding upon all the others, and this would be true even though any one or more of the co-conspirators were not informed and did not know of the acts of the other co-conspirators. While a particular defendant must be shown to be a member of the conspiracy by acts and declarations independent of declarations of the other conspirators, just as soon as he becomes a member of the conspiracy he becomes bound by all the acts and declarations of the other members furthering the conspiracy, whether he is aware of them or not.

4552 To illustrate, you will find certain telegrams and letters passing between a witness and a defendant. It may be true that a number of the other defendants did not know about these letters and telegrams, but, if you find that the alleged combination and conspiracy existed and that such letters and telegrams were intended to advance and carry out the illegal agreement or combination, then those letters and declarations are binding upon all who are shown to have joined the combination, even upon those who did not know such letters and telegrams were written or in existence.

It results from what I have said that, if you find from all the evidence in the case that any defendants joined in an illegal combination or conspiracy, then the acts and declarations of all the other conspirators in furtherance of the conspiracy are binding on each of them.

If you find an illegal understanding such as I have described existed, it is not necessary for you to consider the extent to which the illegal understanding was carried out, but before you may find any of the defendants guilty, it is necessary that you find, not merely that an illegal understanding was entered into, but also that some overt 4553 acts were done in the Western District of Wisconsin
by some of the defendants or their agents to carry out in part or to further the carrying out of the understanding. The Government has presented evidence that prices of gasoline in the ten Mid-Western states, including the Western District of Wisconsin, were affected by the defendants in the manner charged in the indictment and that some of the defendants sold gasoline to jobbers and consumers in this District during the period covered by the indictment at those prices. If, from the evidence, you are satisfied that this is true, you will understand that such sales by any of the members of the combination are overt acts such as I have referred to, and it is immaterial whether at the time the acts were committed, or at any other time, any of the individual defendants lived here or held meetings here, or were present in this District.

It is not necessary in the formation of the conspiracy that all of the parties thereto shall actually meet together at one and the same time and place, or all discuss its purpose or the means of carrying its objectives into effect, or draw up any written or formal agreement upon the methods to be pursued in accomplishing such design. A con-4554 spiracy may be, and frequently is, formed and carried out without the express declaration of its purpose by any of those concerned, which in itself would tend to show the existence of a concerted purpose; and yet when their declarations are considered in connection with the acts of the parties, or when the acts themselves are considered independently of any such declarations, the existence of such a conspiracy and its object may be made clearly to appear. It is sufficient that the circumstances shown satisfy you to the extent I have indicated, that the parties thereto were acting together toward a common end, and that that end was the raising of prices charged as the object of the alleged conspiracy.

It is not necessary that it shall appear that all of the defendants combined together at the start or that each was an original member of the conspiracy. If it is shown that a conspiracy was entered into between two or more of the defendants, and that at any later time during its existence new or additional parties, aware of its existence, united with them for the purpose of aiding in the accomplishment of the scheme, they are from that moment fellow-conspirators and equally responsible for all the consequences which flow from such participation. For example, it appears defendant in this case, was not organized until three or four months after the alleged conspiracy is claimed to have commenced to operate. Nevertheless, if you shall find that an illegal conspiracy existed, and if you shall find that the Barnsdall Refining Corporation later knowingly participated in such conspiracy subsequent to the date of its organization, then that defendant will be responsible in the same manner as each of the other defendants whom you may find to have participated at any time.

A man who knowingly joins a conspiracy after its formation, and thereafter does some act that contributes to the carrying out of the conspiracy, is also a conspirator, but he cannot be held liable unless prior to the time he joins the conspiracy or does some act that furthers its purpose, he knows that what is going on is a criminal conspiracy and knows its general scope and intent. So as to the defendants here involved, and each of them, the burden of proof is on the Government to show beyond a reasonable doubt that these men, or any of them, joined a conspiracy to violate the law as charged in the indictment, and that they joined such conspiracy knowing of its
and that they then did certain acts in furtherance of it. Unless you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt from the evidence that was the situation in this case, you must acquit the defendants.

It is not necessary that each member shall know the exact part which every other member took in the conspiracy. It is enough that the defendant be shown to have had knowledge that the parties whom he was assisting were engaged in a common and unlawful design. Such knowledge may be inferred from his conduct and the attendant circumstances, and if the acts proved are of a nature to satisfy the jury that he was aware of the fact that the parties with whom he was acting were engaged in the unlawful activities charged, that is sufficient. Where two or more persons actuated by the common purpose of accomplishing an unlawful act purposely work together in furtherance of the unlawful scheme, every one of such persons becomes a principal in the conspiracy, although the part some of them may take therein is a small or subordinate one or is to be done separately or at a distance from the others.

While the mere declaration of one conspirator cannot alone prove that another is a party thereto, yet any declaration or statement made by one of the con-4557 spirators during the existence therof, in furtherance of the unlawful combination, when it is established, is not only evidence against the one making such a declaration, but is evidence against all the other participants, who are as responsible for such declarations or statements as if made by themselves. But you will understand that, before any such statements or declarations can be considered as evidence against any of the defendants other than the one making them, the facts and circumstances must be such as to satisfy you that an unlawful conspiracy had been formed and then existed, and that the defendants against whom such declarations were sought to be used were parties thereto at the time.

You will understand from what I have stated that mere passive knowledge of the existence of a combination or conspiracy, should you find that one did exist, or mere passive knowledge of the illegal acts of others in connection therewith, is not in itself sufficient to make the one having such knowledge a member of the unlawful association. The evidence must satisfy you, not only that he had knowledge of the existence of the conspiracy and its unlawful nature, but that with such knowledge he knowingly participated to some extent with the members of the 4558 combination for the purpose aiding in the common design. It is sufficient, however, that you find that a defendant, having knowledge, and being in a position to confer authority, authorized or ordered the doing of the illegal thing by or on behalf of his company. For example, the president or chief executive officer of a company may be found guilty of participating in an unlawful conspiracy if the jury should believe from the evidence that he had knowledge of and authorized or ordered his company's participation, and did nothing more. But you must be satisfied from all the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that he did have such knowledge and did, expressly or impliedly, authorize the doing of the illegal act, before you may convict him.

If you do not find that he did have such authority, or that he did not have such knowledge and did not authorize his company to enter into and participate in the conspiracy, then you may acquit him—you must acquit him.

Until such knowledge and participation are shown, a defendant is not bound by the declaration or statement of any other member; but, when shown, he then becomes bound by all acts and declarations of those associated 4559 with him done or made in furtherance of the common design. This knowledge and participation of a defendant are, like the question of intent and the existence of the conspiracy itself, to be gathered from the circumstances. The law, as in proving a criminal combination, permits the proof of circumstances and facts, that is, the relations of the parties, what was done by them and the manner in which it was done; and it is by assembling and considering all these things as a whole that we draw those deductions and inferences which enable us to say what the real relations, knowledge and purpose of a defendant was. But as a result of the evidence there must appear the common knowledge, the common intent, the common purpose and ultimate design moving in the minds of all engaged in the unlawful combination, and the acts done by any defendant, before it or he can be found guilty, must be with knowledge and in furtherance of such common purpose.

And when the conspiracy as charged is shown to exist, if the evidence shows that the activities of the combination were widely extended, embracing and involving acts or movements being carried on in different places and jurisdictions at one and the same time or during the same period, but all intended and having for their object the single ultimate purpose charged, it will make no dif-4560 ference as to the guilt of a defendant, that he should not know what particular acts were being done elsewhere or by whom, to carry out the common design. Under the law, as I have before indicated, by entering into the conspiracy and lending his aid to carry it out, he adopts and becomes responsible for all that is done elsewhere by any and all others concerned in the same unlawful combination, no matter how widely those acts may be separated from the scene of his own activities.

Bearing these considerations in mind, you will be enabled, should you find that a combination or conspiracy existed, to determine whether it had for its purpose the intent to violate the Sherman Act as I have defined it to you. This is so because it is the law that the intent or purpose with which a thing is done is to be determined from the nature of the acts committed and the facts and circumstances surrounding the party charged at the time he did them, and drawing therefrom such inferences and deductions as men of reason and judgment, familiar with the practical things of life, would ordinarily draw or gather from such facts and circumstances.

If you should find that the defendants and the independent refiners acting in combination with them had the power to raise prices, and that their combination was 4561 an illegal one, it does not matter whether or not any of the defendants had any need, immediate or otherwise, for the gasoline which you may find they purchased. Persons are not permitted under the law to combine together to purchase commodities, even if they need the commodities, where such concerted action would have the effect and the purpose of raising prices.

If you should find that the defendants acting together, and those independent refiners found acting in concert with them, did not have the power to raise the level of spot market prices in the spot markets referred to in the indictment, or that they did not combine for that purpose, and if you should find also that the purchase of the said gasoline by the defendants affected the spot market prices only indirectly and incidentally, then you may consider all the circumstances surrounding the activities of the defendants to determine whether they were intended to and did merely eliminate abuses which tended to produce destructive competition and restore competition to a fairer basis and produce fairer price levels. In such event, you may conclude that the purchase of such gasoline in the manner shown by the evidence was reasonable and beneficial and not injurious to the public interest and that, therefore, the restraint of trade was not undue, and not illegal, and you may acquit the defendants.

4562 If you find that the defendants did not have the power to raise the level of the spot market prices in the spot markets referred to in the indictment, and you also conclude that the buying programs engaged in by the defendants were reasonable and not unreasonable restraint of commerce, and that the activities of the defendants did not constitute an unreasonable restraint of interstate commerce, then you will find the defendants not guilty.

However, if you should find that through the purchase of so-called distress gasoline, defendants and the independent refiners and others acting in cooperation with them had the power, and combined for the purpose of directly affecting and raising the level of spot market prices, then, as I have previously stated, the restraint of trade was as a matter of law undue and unreasonable and, therefore, illegal.

Much has been said in this case about the NRA Code for the Petroleum Industry, and it has been suggested that one of the purposes of the Code was to raise the price of gasoline. Whether or not such was an objective of the Code, the defendants would not be justified in combining with others to raise the price of gasoline, assuming that they had the power to do so, unless their activities in this regard were specifically authorized by the Code or approved by the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Interior under the National Industrial 4563 Recovery Act. I instruct you as a matter of law that there is no evidence in this case of Government approval which would exempt the activities complained of from the prohibitions of the Sherman Act.

Furthermore, as you know, the Code and NRA passed out of existence after May 27, 1935, and thereafter even the Government officers had no power to approve a combination, such as I have described; the Sherman Act was restored to full force and effect, and was again the law of the land. The fact that certain activities otherwise violative of the Sherman Act might have been done legally under the Code while it was in existence if those activities were duly approved, does not give the defendants the right or the privilege to do those same things without obtaining the necessary Government approval, which as I have said is lacking here.

Even if you should find that some Government officers knew of or acquiesced in such combination and conspiracy, such knowledge or acquiescence would not excuse the violation of the Sherman Act, if you find that the law was violated.

Again, if you find that the defendants combined in a manner and for the purpose described, you should give no weight to the fact that some of these illegal activities may have been considered or arrived at in Code meetings, or that the defendant Arnott was called "Chief 4564 Stabilizer" under the Code, or that a committee of the defendants was entitled "Tank Car Stabilization Committee", or that any of these matters were brought to the attention of the P. and C. Committee, or that any of the active participants in the combination were paid for their efforts by the P. and C. Committee, or that any of the active participants in the combination were paid for their efforts by the P. and C. Committee. You may consider such matters only in connection with the issue of reasonableness and only, as I have stated to you, if you should first find that the defendants engaged in the combination and the independent refiners and others cooperating with them, together did not have the power to control the prices.

If you so find, then you may consider what I have just discussed—just covered.

Every person is presumed to intend the natural and probable results of his acts knowingly done, and an unlawful act implies an unlawful intent. If a defendant knowingly did acts which the law renders illegal, then he is guilty, irrespective of whether he believed he was violating the law.

Your practical experience and daily observation of men will aid you in determining this question of intent. The intent with which an act is done is sometimes more clearly and conclusively shown by the act itself than by any word or explanation of the actor. Thus, if you found a stranger taking books out of your home without your permis-4565 sion, and he explained to you that he did not intend to steal them, but was merely borrowing them to read, you would undoubtedly infer his intent from his act rather than his words.

In this case, you have the evidence of the defendants' acts, and their explanation of them. If you find that they, or any of them, knowingly did the acts described in the indictment, which the law renders illegal, you must determine with what intent he or they did them, from the acts themselves, from their natural and legitimate consequences, from the defendants' explanations and from all other evidence before you.

In this case the burden of proof is on the Government to establish beyond a reasonable doubt all the elements of the crime charged in the indictment, and if the evidence does not so convince you, then you must find the defendants not guilty.

The Government must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that these men, or at least two of them, entered into a combination with a design and purpose of committing the offense charged in the indictment. You will understand, of course, that one man alone cannot form or create a conspiracy.

You cannot find the defendants guilty unless the prosecution proves each and all of the material and essential allegations of the indictment beyond a reasonable 4566 doubt and to a moral certainty. The indictment charges, among other things, that the defendants have intentionally increased and fixed the tank car prices of gasoline contracted to be sold and which was sold in interstate commerce in the Mid-Western area, including the Western District of Wisconsin, and in turn have intentionally raised the general level of retail prices prevailing in said Mid-Western area, including the Western District of Wisconsin. Even if you should find and believe beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty that the defendants combined and conspired together for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing the tank car prices of gasoline in the spot markets in the East Texas or Mid-Continent fields, or in an alleged spot market at Chicago, Illinois, you must acquit all of the defendants and return a verdict of "Not Guilty" unless you also find and believe beyond a reasonable doubt that they have also intentionally raised and fixed the tank car price of gasoline contracted to be sold and which was sold in interstate commerce in the Mid-Western area, including the Western District of Wisconsin, and in turn have intentionally raised the general level of retail prices prevailing in said Mid-Western area, including the Western District of Wisconsin. I further instruct you that in order to sustain the foregoing charge in the indictment, it is not enough for the prosecution to show an increase in the tank car prices 4567 of gasoline within said area, but you must also find and believe beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty that the defendants combined and conspired together or with others for the purpose of increasing and fixing the same as well as for the purpose of raising and fixing the tank car prices in said spot markets, or one or more of them.

In this case many individuals are named as defendants together with a number of corporations. While these defendants have been jointly indicted and charged with the offenses contained in the indictment, each defendant is entitled to an independent consideration by you of the evidence as it related to his conscious participation in the alleged unlawful acts charged in this indictment. It is your duty to determine the guilt or innocence of each corporation separately, and likewise the guilt or innocence of each individual separately.

You will understand, gentlemen, that you may convict or acquit any or all of the defendants as the facts may warrant. It is not incumbent on the Government, notwithstanding the offense is so charged, to necessarily show that all the defendants alleged to have been concerned in the combination and conspiracy charged were in fact participants in it in order to convict any of them. Because all the defendants on trial are included in one indictment and tried together does not require that you convict all in order to convict any, or that if you acquit any you 4568 must acquit all. If you find that there was such a combination and conspiracy as charged, and that any of the defendants on trial were parties to it, you may convict them although acquitting the others.

Of course you cannot find any defendant, either a corporation or an individual, guilty unless, in accordance with what I have already told you, you are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the unlawful conspiracy charged in the indictment has been proved.

Even if you are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty that the conspiracy alleged in the indictment in fact existed and that any particular defendant corporation was a party thereto, the fact alone creates no inference that any individual defendant who was an officer or employee of such defendant corporation also was a party thereto, because officers and agents of a corporation are not liable for the acts of such corporation merely because they are officers and agents of such corporation. Nor would such officers or agents become criminally liable merely because they knew of the alleged conspiracy or in their official capacities ought to have known thereof; but in order to convict any officer or agent of a defendant corporation, you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that he knew of the conspiracy and its unlawful purposes, and that he knowingly participated therein, either by authorizing, ordering, or doing some act or acts con-4569 stituting, in whole or in part, the unlawful conspiracy.

It is your duty to consider the evidence in this case entirely divorced from any preconceived or any fixed idea you may have as related to corporations. The issue you are to consider is limited solely and alone to the charge against these defendants as made in the indictment, and you are to be governed solely by the evidence submitted in this case, under the charge as I have given it to you. Hatred, passion, prejudice or sympathy have no place in your deliberations, and you must banish these from your hearts and minds.

The purpose of the statute under which these defendants were indicted is to protect the public interest by the maintenance of unrestricted competition in business, and to promote unrestrained trade between the states.

No jury should convict a corporation of a violation of the Sherman Act solely because of its size or the extent of its business. It is your duty to give these corporations the same impartial consideration in weighing the evidence in this case and in arriving at a verdict which you would give to any individual or to any small corporation whose guilt or innocence might be left to your determination.

You are not concerned with the financial condition of any of these defendants. Whether a man be rich or 4570 poor, he is entitled to the same consideration in this Court, and at the hands of this jury, and you must keep that in mind in your consideration of the evidence in this case.

Even if some of the defendant oil companies endeavored to keep track of the purchases of gasoline, as to amount and price, being made by their competitors, in the East Texas or Mid-Continent fields, and even if they governed the amount and price of their own purchases thereby, this would not be illegal provided they acted independently of each other and not in concert.

It would have been entirely legal for any defendant oil company, acting alone, to buy any amount of gasoline it saw fit, in the East Texas and Mid-Continent fields.

If you conclude from a consideration of all the evidence with respect to the purchases made by defendant oil companies that what the defendants did was merely to exchange information among each other with respect to the amount of surplus or distress gasoline expected to be in the hands of independent refiners, which they individually hoped and expected to be able to buy, you will acquit the defendants, no matter what else has been proved.

Each of the defendant oil companies, if it acted alone and not in agreement with other, had the legal right to pay any price it chose for tank car spot gasoline in the East Texas and Mid-Continent fields, whether it was above, at, or below the market, and whether or not its purpose or motive was to aid independent refiners.

4571 The fact that some or all of defendant companies bought gasoline in the East Texas and/or Mid-Continent fields in 1935 and/or 1936, whether in large or small quantities, and whether or not they had bought there before, does not, in and of itself; prove any agreement or understanding between them to buy, either legal or illegal.

The fact that in March, April, May and June, 1935, the spot tank car price of gasoline in the East Texas and Mid-Continent fields rose and thereafter remained stable until January, 1936, when it again rose, does not, standing alone, prove any agreement or understanding between defendants, either legal or illegal.

It was entirely proper for the independent refiners in East Texas to sell their gasoline through the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association as a common selling agency. No inference unfavorable to any of the defendants could be drawn from the mere fact that some of them purchased gasoline through the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association, provided they acted independently of each other, but if they acted together, in concert, for the purpose of raising the price as alleged in the indictment, then their activities would be illegal.

In this case there is evidence referring to the Standard Oil Company of Indiana as the "Market" or "Price" leader in the Midwestern area. The area itself is referred to as the Standard of Indiana territory. There is evi-4572 dence that some of the defendants in making contracts with their jobbers, based their guarantee margin upon the posted price of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana. In some instances their retail price, followed the posted price of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana.

The Standard Oil Company of Indiana became known as the "Market" or "Price" leader because of the fact that it does a larger per cent of the business in the territory than any other single company and because it does business in all parts of the territory. The territory became known as the Standard of Indiana territory because it was the first of the defendant oil companies to do business in this territory. The evidence discloses that fact.

As a matter of law, the mere size of a corporation, however, large and impressive, or the existence of power which it did not exert, would not show any violation of law, and standing alone is not evidence of a conspiracy.

As I have stated, the defendants are presumed to be innocent until proven guilty, and it is your duty to attempt to reconcile the evidence with this presumption. It is your duty to seek for, and if possible, to find a reasonable explanation for the conduct of the defendants in purchasing gasoline from independent refiners, which is consistent with their innocence of the crime charged.

While it is the duty of the court to declare the law, and that of the jury to be governed by it in their consideration of the evidence, it is, on the other hand, as I have 4573 stated before, the exclusive province and right of the jury to pass upon the facts in the case and to pass upon the credibility of the witnesses. With those functions the Court has nothing to do, other than to endeavor to see that only proper evidence is permited to go on before the jury for their consideration, and it is neither the right nor the disposition of the Court to interfere with that duty of of the jury. If, therefore, during the progress of this trial, you have gathered any impressions from anything which the Court may have asked of a witness or may have stated in its rulings or in the course of discussions with counsel, as to the views or judgment of the Court on the question of the guilt or innocence of the defendants or any one or more of them, or as to the weight of any evidence or the credibility of any witness, you will disregard such impression and base your finding upon your own independent judgment as to what the evidence discloses.

Your verdict should not be guided or directed by any action that the Court has taken during the trial with respect to the admission or exclusion of evidence, nor by the denial or granting of any motion made by any counsel during the course of the trial. What the Court did in any such instance, it had to do as a matter of law, and it was as exclusively within the province and the jurisdiction of the Court as the findings of fact upon the evidence in this case are exclusively within the province and jurisdiction of the jury.

4574 Evidence stricken out during the course of the trial should not be considered by you as having any bearing in the case, and is not to be taken into consideration in reaching your verdict. Furthermore, evidence which was admitted as against one or more defendants and not against others should be considered only with respect to the particular defendant or defendants as to whom it was admitted. This instruction should be carefully borne in mind when you consider such items of evidence or testimony as came into the case which were admitted as applicable to only one or more of the defendants.

Where all the substantial evidence is as consistent with innocence as with guilt, it is your duty to return a verdict of acquittal, because facts consistent with innocence are never evidence of guilt; or as otherwise stated, there is no substantial evidence to prove the charges where all the substantial evidence is as consistent with innocence as with guilt.

Suspicion, no matter how well founded, and no matter how strong the ground therefor, never amounts to or takes the place of proof. You cannot find any of the defendants guilty upon suspicion.

4575 Testimony given by some of the witnesses in this case when they appeared before the Grand Jury, was read to them when they appeared as witnesses in this trial. That was done for the purpose of refreshing their memory, and for no other purpose. You will understand that it was not used for the purpose of impeaching the testimony of the witness. The testimony of no witness who has testified here was inconsistent with any of the testimony he gave before the Grand Jury which was read to him in this case.

The responsibility is now upon this jury to pass upon the guilt of these defendants of the offense charged in the indictment. You should do your duty in accordance with your oath and with your best judgment, without prejudice or fear or favor, and with a full and fair consideration of all the evidence in the light of the rules of law which I have laid down for your guidance.

Do not let your anxiety to return to your homes and to your families deter you from giving this case the time that its serious consideration demands and so richly deserves.

Two separate forms of verdict have been prepared for each defendant, one to be used if you find the defendant guilty, and the other to be used if you find him not guilty.

4576 You must be unanimous in your finding. You cannot make any finding without coming to a common conclusion in respect thereto.

Before you begin your deliberations, it will be necessary for you to elect a foreman of the jury, who will sign the verdicts that you will agree upon.

4577 Thereupon, in the presence of the jury and before they retired to deliberate upon their verdict, the following occurred:

The Court: The two alternate jurors,—I have been advised by the Marshal that the first twelve jurors called are in excellent condition of health, so the two alternate jurors, Clifford Huber and Earl Hibbard, are discharged from jury service in this case. You will not discuss this case or what occurred in the jury room with any person, until the other jurors have returned their verdict or have been discharged by the Court.

The Court: Have counsel any exceptions?

Mr. Crawford: We have none.

Mr. Wood: If your Honor please, we have a few additional requests.

The Court: I may say this. All requests for instructions which have not been included in the charge just given, are denied. Those requests are all filed with the Clerk.

Mr. Wood: Will it be necessary for us to state our reasons for requests that have been denied?

The Court: No, it will not be necessary.

4578 Mr. Wood: They will be regarded each as having been renewed, the reason therefor given, and denied?

The Court: That is right.

Mr. Wood: So we understand that—

The Court: Yes; let the record show that all requests for instructions that have not been included in this charge are denied.

Mr. Wood: And in order that it may be clear, that is to be the state of the record in respect to each separate request?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Wood: And each separate exception?

The Court: The Clerk has all requests on file.

Mr. Wood: If the Court please, in addition to the matters that were covered by the written requests given to your Honor, there are one or two exceptions,—a few exceptions, perhaps a few additional requests we would like to make. I wonder if it would be agreeable to your Honor if we did that after recess when we have had an opportunity to consult with each other?

The Court: I think it ought to be done now. I want to dispose of it now, and get this case to the jury. If you have any exceptions, make them now.

4579 The Court: I may say to the jury that I am sending to the jury room a copy of the indictment and also a list of the names of the defendants and the positions they occupied with the companies, which I will be glad to have counsel look over before it goes to the jury.

Mr. Wood: If your Honor please, it is almost impossible for me to speak above a whisper. I hope perhaps I may make these exceptions here.

The Court: Understand, Mr. Wood, that all the requested instructions that are not included in the instructions I have given here are denied.

Mr. Wood: Yes, sir.

The Court: So it won't be necessary to include any of those.

Mr. Wood: Those that we have filed in connection with your Honor's charge,—of the affirmative end of the charge, we wish to specifically except to your Honor's failure to charge substantially as in 4580 the series of requested instructions, beginning with 35 and ending with 42 on the ground that it is a proper submission of what is required to be proven under the indictment, and certainly it is a proper statement of what is required to be proven under the indictment as it has been interpreted by the Government throughout the trial.

The Court: All I can say is that requests for instructions I have not included in the instructions given, are denied.

Mr. Wood: We desire also specifically to except to so much of your Honor's charge as stated that any agreement between persons having for its purpose the raising of prices as distinguished from the fixing of prices was itself unreasonable under the Sherman Act irrespective of other circumstances; and by reason of that exception, and in connection with that exception, we desire to renew our requests previously made, numbered 87,—particularly num-4581 ber 87, which we specifically ask to be given, in light of the exception just made to the charge as given, 88, 89, the finding of circumstances to be taken into account, and the tests as laid down by the Supreme Court. I suppose the request is denied?

The Court: It is denied insofar as it is not covered by the instructions given.

Mr. Wood: Well, we desire, in that connection, to point out to your Honor that the elements set forth in that do not seem to us to have been covered by the instructions given in any particular.

The Court: I think 87 has been covered.

Mr. Wood: In view of a statement by the Court we further except to the failure of the Court to inform the jury that not all agreements in restraint of trade are unlawful, but only those that are unreasonable and that impose undue and unreasonable restraint thereon; and in the failure of the 4582 Court to define to the jury what constitutes lawful and unlawful restraint, and to state to the jury what circumstances they should take into account in determining whether or not a given restraint is reasonable or unreasonable. And it is in that connection and for that purpose, that we have requested the giving of these instructions to which I have called your Honor's attention, to wit, 87, 88, 89 and 90, and others which have been specifically denied.

The Court: May I say, the requests for instruction is denied except insofar as it is covered by the instructions given.

Mr. Wood: And my requests now made, that the Court instruct the jury as I requested, is also denied?

The Court: Yes, denied except insofar as covered by the instructions given.

Mr. Wood: Your Honor charged the jury that these companies had a lawful right to purchase gasoline in any quantities and at any price so long as they acted independently of each other, and it became unlawful only when they acted in concert or in combination. We ask your Honor, in addition, to charge the jury that simultaneous or contemporaneous action is not in itself evidence of combination or concert.

Mr. Chaffetz: We have no objection to that charge, but I don't think the words simultaneous or contemporaneous ought to be used because the 4583 jury may not understand them. I should say mere action at the same time does not prove concert or combination. I think it is covered by the charge.

The Court: Will the reporter read the statement made by Mr. Wood.

(Thereupon the reporter read the following:)

> "Your Honor charged the jury that these companies had a lawful right to purchase gasoline in any quantities and at any price so long as they acted independently of each other, and it became unlawful only when they acted in concert or in combination. We ask your Honor, in addition, to charge the jury that simultaneous or contemporaneous action is not in itself evidence of combination or concert."

The Court: I instruct you, gentlemen, as the court reporter has read, that the companies had a perfect right to buy gasoline at any time, and any place, so long as they did not act in combination and act concertedly.

Now, counsel has asked me to instruct you that simultaneous or contemporaneous action is not in itself evidence of combination or concert, and that is true. The fact that they were buying at the same time is no evidence that they were in combination or concert.

Mr. Wood: Your Honor gave an illustration, a homely one, as to circumstances under which an agreement might be inferred. Although your Honor has not got this request, we ask that the 4584 Court give that as another homely illustration of circumstances under which an agreement may not be inferred, used by Judge Learned Hand, in instructing a jury in similar cases,—in anti-trust cases.

(Thereupon the Court gave the following further and additional instruction to the jury:)

The Court: I think this instruction was given, but I will read it to you:

As the first essential step in the prosecution's case, the defendants must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty to have made an actual agreement with respect to some illegal buying program or programs. This means more than that they merely pursued a similar course of conduct. If I say to you, yesterday was a fair day, and you say yesterday was a fair day, our minds are in accord, but we have not made a contract that yesterday was a fair day. In order to constitute a contract—this is quite important for you to remember—there must be some undertaking on the part of the people who contract; some promise that they will conform their conduct to some standard, some prescribed rule, some course in the future which is defined by the terms of the contract. There must be some promise on the part of the parties by 4585 which they say that they will in the future do certain acts; that they will do something which is defined by the understanding between them.

Mr. Wood: Your Honor charged that if the defendants, in company with the independent refiners, possessed the power to raise the prices as charged in the indictment, and exercise that power, the jury might return a verdict of guilty. We ask that that instruction be limited by the insertion of the words "by the means charged in the indictment, not by some other means"; and that the jury be instructed that the mere fact that they might together, through the exercise of some other means, have that power, is not sufficient. The jury must not only find that they had the power, but they had the power to exercise it to the precise means charged, and not through some other means,—namely through the operation of these buying programs.

The Court: I think I have told the jury it is necessary for the Government to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, all the essential facts charged in the indictment. That is covered. The request is denied.

Mr. Wood: We except to your Honor's ruling, because we do not think that that has been made plain by the charge,—the request I have just made. 4586

We also except to your Honor's failure to charge that even though the defendants alone or in company with others entered into a combination to raise or fix the spot tank car price of gasoline in the Mid-Continent and East Texas field, even though they had the power so to do, and did so, even though they likewise intentionally raised the price of gasoline in the Mid-Western area, that the jury must nevertheless acquit unless the jury finds, beyond a reasonable doubt, that these defendants had the power to control prices in the Mid-Western area, and to maintain them at high, arbitrary and non-competitive levels.

The Court: You may have that exception.

Mr. Wood: We have requested a number of instructions in our separate requests, based upon inducement, instigation, knowledge and acquiescence, variously phrased, none of which I understand are covered by your Honor's charge because your Honor's conception of the legal effect is different from ours. May we understand that each one of those requests is renewed and denied, and exceptions taken?

The Court: Yes, except insofar as covered by the charge.

4587 Mr. Francis: I have two exceptions I want to point out. The first one is, as I understood the Court in its charge, to instruct the jury that if they found that any of these defendants entered into a combination or agreement or conspiracy, the purpose of which was to raise, to any extent, the prices in the markets mentioned in the indictment, that then, and in that event, declarations by any one of the alleged conspirators, either oral or documentary, would be admissible against all of them. Your Honor, I object to that statement of the law, because I do not think that under the law those declarations would be admissible, oral or documentary, would be admissible against anyone, until it was shown by the evidence that he had engaged in a conspiracy or combination or agreement to fix and maintain prices at high, arbitrary and non-competitive levels, as mentioned in the indictment, in the spot tank car markets in East Texas, Mid-Continent and Chicago.

In other words, my exception is to the effect that none of these declarations, oral or documentary, are admissible until it has been shown by competent evidence that a person became a part of the conspiracy 4588 charged in the indictment, and the conspiracy charged in the indictment is not a mere conspiracy to raise prices but is one to fix high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices in certain designated areas.

The Court: You may have the exception.

Mr. Francis: I want an exception to the Court's charge, wherein your Honor states that the mere raising of tank car prices would be sufficient, and in that connection point out to your Honor that it is not sufficient, within the terms of this indictment to prove combination, conspiracy or agreement to raise prices, but the Government is required to show, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendants entered into a combination, conspiracy or agreement to fix high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices, as charged in the indictment; and the Court should instruct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty, unless they find from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendants conspired to fix and maintain prices as set forth in the indictment, and these matters and things are brought to the attention of the Court in charges 35, 36, 37, 38, 39 and 40, and also in charge 43, each of which is separately requested on this particular point.

4589 The Court: And I again state that all requests for instructions, except insofar as they have been covered by instructions given, are denied, and you are allowed an exception.

Mr. Wood: There is one I would like to call your Honor's attention to, which has been rejected. It seems to me, in the light of the argument of Government counsel, in closing, in respect to Mr. Ickes, we are entitled to have it given. That is number 129.

The Court: I will say this to you. Mr. Ickes was subject to a subpoena of this Court, and I presume could be called by either party.

Mr. Wood: That is a witness under control of a party.

The Court: I say, any party may have subpoenaed Mr. Ickes. Your request for that instruction has heretofore been denied.

Mr. Wood: May it be noted that each exception taken is noted on behalf of each and every defendant.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Wood: Each one separately?

The Court: Each defendant has his exception to the instructions given.

Mr. Wood: And each exception that has been noted here is noted on behalf of each and every individual defendant?

4590 The Court: Yes, that has been true throughout the trial.

Mr. Wood: Your Honor has distinguished in this case, in his charge, between direct and circumstantial evidence, has defined each, and has laid down the circumstantial evidence rule.

I think, in view of that instruction, we are entitled to an instruction somewhat similar to our request number 26; namely, to the effect that there is no direct evidence in this case on the part of the Government of the existence of the conspiracy alleged, although there is direct evidence to the contrary by the defendants.

Mr. Chaffetz: I call counsel's attention to the Sus memorandum, if he never heard of that before.

Mr. Wood: That reminds me—it isn't evidence of anything—

The Court: Your request is denied.

Mr. Wood: With respect to the Sus memorandum to which counsel has referred, we ask that the jury be instructed that it may not be considered by them as any evidence of the existence of any conspiracy.

The Court: The request is denied.

Mr. Wood: And we respectfully submit and ask that the jury be instructed that it is not admissible 4591 for any purpose except against the defendant Sinclair Refining Company only.

The Court: The motion is denied.

Mr. Wood: I understand we have exceptions to all these rulings?

The Court: Oh, yes, you have your exceptions. All requests that have been denied, you have an exception to.

Mr. Dorr: I except to the charge as a whole, as failing to give such specific and sufficient explanations of the allegations of the indictment and the law applicable thereto as to give to the jury in a case of the complexity of this one, a sufficient or proper guide to their weighing of evidence as to the particular allegations.

And we also except on the ground that the—to the charge as a whole, as failing to put before the jury the defendants' claims as to the issues raised by the allegations.

I except specifically to the denial by the Court of Instruction 85, which was requested, which asked that the jury be instructed to disregard certain allegations of the indictment as not proved, to wit: the allegation that the prices published in the trade 4592 papers were falsely represented to be the prices of purchases made by the defendants; and the allegation of the indictment that the refinery runs of the independent refiners were curtailed by the activities of certain of the defendants, there being no evidence to support any of those allegations,—no sufficient evidence.

I also except to the Court's charge that a combination to raise a price where there is power to control such price is in itself unlawful and unreasonable, even though that power to affect prices as shown by the evidence, is merely power to remove an obstacle to a healthy, competitive price, and to remove a destructive practice in the industry in and by the methods shown by the evidence, if any; is merely the power to remove that obstacle and permit the price to rise to a fair competitive level—not a fair competitive level,—but a natural, healthy, competitive level.

The Court: You may have your exception.

The Court: Gentlemen of the jury:

You will have access to—we are going to leave the charts and the maps in this room. We will lock the doors, and remove everything from this courtroom except the exhibits that have been received in evidence. You will have access to this courtroom.

4593 I want you to know that we have not been unmindful of the real sacrifices you men have made. You have been away from your homes and your families, while the rest of us have been permitted to be with ours; and it has been much the concern of the attorneys on both sides. And I want you to know that the attorneys on both sides have worked hard toward expediting the ending of this trial.

Is there anything further?

(No response.)

The Clerk will swear the officers that will be with the jury. Will the officers step forward?

I will say this: Mr. Chaffetz was talking to me just now about the exhibits.

I want counsel for both sides to examine the exhibits that are here, and we want nothing left in this courtroom except the exhibits that have been received in evidence. So, while the jury is at lunch, why, that may be done.

The Clerk, or somebody with the counsel, will arrange the Exhibits in their numerical order, from 4594 number 1 up—and that refers to the documents you have in your possession, of course; if you don't have them, you can't do it—so they will be easily available to the jury.

Now, will counsel examine the list of the defendants that I am going to send to the jury? Will you examine those (handing document to counsel)?

The said charges of the Honorable Patrick T. Stone as set forth above comprise all of the instructions given to the jury hearing this cause.

Thereupon, the jury at 1:45 o'clock P. M., January 21, 1938, retired from the court room to deliberate upon their verdict.

4595 Thereafter, on January 21, 1938, the Honorable Patrick T. Stone, Judge of the above Court, made and entered an Order Denying the Motions for Directed Verdict, said Order reading as follows:

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

* * (Caption—11365) * * *

ORDER DENYING MOTIONS FOR DIRECTED VERDICT.

Defendants, Standard Oil Company (Indiana), Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc., Wadhams Oil Company, Cities Service Company, Empire Oil and Refining Company, Continental Oil Company, The Pure Oil Company, Shell Petroleum Corporation, Sinclair Refining Company, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, Phillips Petroleum Corporation, Skelly Oil Company, Barnsdall Refining Corporation, The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Oklahoma), The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Illinois), The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Kansas), Edward G. Seubert, Allan Jackson, Edward J. Bullock, Charles L. Jones, Charles E. Arnott, H. T. Ashton, Bryan S. Reid, A. 4596 G. Maguire, Harry D. Frueauff, O. J. Tuttle, Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy, Henry M. Dawes, C. B. Watson, R. H. McElroy, Jr., Alexander Fraser, P. E. Lakin, J. W. Carnes, Jacob France, Robert W. McDowell, Frank Phillips, A. M. Hughes, W. G. Skelly, E. B. Reeser, I. A. O'Shaughnessy, H. E. Brandli, Edward L. Shea, Noel Robinson, J. W. Warner and Arthur V. Bourque, having moved the Court to direct the jury to return a verdict of acquittal as to each of them, and the Court having considered said Motions, and being fully advised in the premises,

It Is Ordered, that said Motions for Directed Verdict be and the same are hereby denied.

To all of which the defendants may have an exception.

Dated at Madison, Wisconsin, this 21st day of January, 1938.

Patrick T. Stone,
United States District Judge
Western District of Wisconsin.

4597 Thereafter, at 10:25 o'clock A. M., on January 22, 1938, the jury were brought into the court room and rendered their verdict. The foreman of the jury handed to the Clerk of the Court, who delivered them to the Court, the separate verdicts of the jury as to each defendant. Thereupon, the following proceedings occurred:

The Court: You will listen to the reading of the verdicts, gentlemen:

> "We, the jury, for our verdicts in the above-entitled action, find the defendants Standard Oil Company (Indiana), Edward G. Seubert, Allan Jackson, Edward J. Bullock; Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc., Charles L. Jones, Charles E. Arnott, H. T. Ashton, Bryan S. Reid; Wadhams Oil Company, A. G. Maguire; Cities Service Company; Empire Oil and Refining Company, Harry D. Frucauff, O. J. Tuttle; Continental Oil Company, Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy; The Pure Oil Company, Henry M. Dawes, C. B. Watson, R. H. McElroy, Jr.; Shell Petroleum Corporation, Alexander Fraser, P. E. Lakin; Sinclair Refining Company, J. W. Carnes; Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, Jacob France, Robert W. McDowell; Phillips Petroleum Corporation, Frank Phillips, A. M. Hughes; Skelly Oil Company, W. G. Skelly; 4598 Barnsdall Refining Corporation, E. B. Reeser; The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Oklahoma), I. A. O'Shaughnessy; The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Illinois); The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Kansas); H. E. Brandli, Edward L. Shea, Noel Robinson, J. W. Warner, Arthur V. Bourque, guilty as charged in the indictment."

On the same day, January 22, 1938, at the hearing of the above cause before the said Court, the following procedure occurred:

The Court: The record shows now that you have made your motions in arrest of judgment; that the bonds be continued in force; and that you are moving for a new trial, and that you will file those motions in writing.

Mr. Thomas: Within the three-day period.

The Court: Yes. And it is the order of the Court now that a hearing on those motions will be had at some time in the future, to be fixed by the Court. Is that clear?

Mr. Thomas: That is right.

Mr. Brazeau: We will want to examine the verdicts, your Honor.

4599 The Court: Yes, you may examine them.

Mr. Thomas: If the Court please, my attention is called further to the fact that when the motion is made, the reasons should be stated. As I understand your ruling, within the three-day period, we are to file our motions stating the reasons?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Thomas: We are not required to state them at this time?

The Court: No, you are not; that is my understanding.

Mr. Thomas: Now, we may—will we have permission within the three-day period to file a further motion to set aside the verdict because it is contrary to the evidence?

The Court: Yes, you may.

Mr. Thomas: Or such other motions as we may see fit?

The Court: Yes, you may include in your motions to set aside the verdict and for a new trial anything you think you ought to include.

Mr. Thomas: All right, thank you.

4600 Mr. Kirkland: Is your Honor going to set a date for hearing on the motions for directed verdict?

The Court: I am not going to do it now—well, counsel the other day requested that—I have passed on that, or I have filed that. But the same questions can be brought before the Court on your present motions.

Mr. Thomas: This term doesn't expire until December, does it, Judge?

The Court: No, that is right.

Thereafter, and on January 22, 1938, the Clerk of the Court filed the separate verdicts of the jury finding each of the above-named defendants guilty.

> (Said verdicts as to the defendants-appellants are printed at pages 2478-2484 of the Record.)

Thereafter, and on January 25, 1938, certain defendants named therein, by their respective attorneys, jointly and severally filed with the Clerk of the above Court a Motion to Arrest the Judgment in this cause.

> (Said Motion for Arrest of Judgment is printed at pages 2485-2488 of the Record.)

4601 On the same date, January 25, 1938, the defendants Standard Oil Company (Indiana), Edward G. Seubert, Allan Jackson, Edward J. Bullock, Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc., Charles L. Jones, Charles E. Arnott, H. T. Ashton, Bryan S. Reid, Wadhams Oil Company, A. G. Maguire, Cities Service Company, Empire Oil and Refining Company, Harry D. Frueauff, O. J. Tuttle, Continental Oil Company, Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy, The Pure Oil Company, Henry M. Dawes, C. B. Watson, R. H. McElroy, Jr., Shell Petroleum Corporation, Alexander Fraser, P. E. Lakin, Sinclair Refining Company, J. W. Carnes, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, Jacob France, Robert W. McDowell, Phillips Petroleum Corporation, Frank Phillips, A. M. Hughes, Skelly Oil Company, W. G. Skelly, Barnsdall Refining Corporation, E. B. Reeser, The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Oklahoma), I. A. O'Shaughnessy, The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Illinois), The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Kansas), H. E. Brandli, Edward L. Shea, Noel Robinson, J. W. Warner and Arthur V. Bourque, by their attorneys, each filed separate Motions for a New Trial. Each of said Motions is identical, except as to the name of the defendant and the names of the attorneys signing it. To avoid repetition, only the Motion for New Trial of the defendant Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc., is here set forth. It provides as follows:

4602 IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

* * (Caption—11365) * *

MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

Now Comes the defendant, Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc. by its attorneys named below and moves the Court for a new trial in the above entitled cause for the reason that the verdict herein is not sustained by evidence received upon the trial; and because of prejudicial error committed on the trial of said cause, as hereinafter more specifically set forth, whereby this defendant was deprived of its constitutional right to a fair and impartial trial before a jury; among such errors there being the following:

I

Because of error of the Court in submitting the case to the jury upon issues not set forth in the indictment, which issues constituted fundamental variances from the charges contained in said indictment, with the result that the verdict is not based upon the charges specified 4603 in the indictment herein, as appears by the charge of the Court to the jury on file with the Clerk and the record in the case.

II

Because of error of the Court in refusing to instruct the jury as requested by defendant, as more fully appears from the requested instructions, submitted to the Court prior to the charge given to the jury, and now on file with the Clerk, and as more fully appears from the minutes of the Court as set forth in the daily transcript of the proceedings on the trial.

III

Because of error of the Court in instructing the jury to the prejudice of the defendant, as shown by the minutes of the Court and the record of the proceedings, to which instructions exceptions were duly taken by and on behalf of defendant.

IV

Because of error of the Court in refusing to give instructions orally requested at the close of the charge and refusal to modify instructions given in the charge, as requested by defendant's counsel following the giving of the charge, and as set forth in the minutes of the Court and the record of the proceedings.

Because of error of the Court in not admitting in evidence testimony of certain witnesses and certain exhibits, as more fully appears from various offers of proof and from the transcript of the evidence, including, but without limitation by reason of specification:

Offers of proof as to the testimony of the witness, Wirt Franklin, appearing at pages 938-45, 957-60, 960-62, 963-76, 976-80, 980-83, 992-95 of the record;

Offers of proof as to the testimony of the witness John E. Shatford, appearing at pages 1016-17, 1017-22, 1037-41, 1048-56, 1056-57, 1061-62 of the record;

Offer of proof as to the testimony of the witness F. W. Fisher, appearing at pages 1122-24 of the record;

Offer of proof as to the testimony of the witness Marion Travis, appearing at pages 1125-27 of the record;

Offers of proof as to the testimony of the witness James A. Moffett, appearing at pages 1150-52, 1153-54, 1154-55, 1156-57 of the record;

Offer of proof as to the testimony of Stewart M. Vockel, appearing at pages 1344-53 of the record;

Offer of proof as to the testimony of W. J. Brundred, appearing at pages 1354-62 of the record;

Offer of proof as to the testimony of Sidney A. Swensrud, appearing at pages 1428-34 of the record;

Offer of proof as to the testimony of the witness Fred Van Covern, appearing at pages 1491-1503, 1518-20, 1521-33 of the record;

4605 Offer of proof as to the testimony of Louis Titus, appearing at pages 1831-37 of the record;

Testimony of C. E. Arnott excluded, page 1736 of the record;

Testimony of James D. Collett excluded, page 1803 of the record;

Exhibits offered and marked for identification as exhibits numbered 709-711 inclusive; 829-832 inclusive; 834, 844-849, inclusive; 851, 892, 907, 914-916 inclusive; 918-922 inclusive; 925, 943, 944, 955-959, inclusive; 971-973 inclusive; 983, 993, 994, 1030.

The exclusion of the above testimony and exhibits and the exclusion of other testimony and exhibits not specifically listed but of which this defendant complains was duly excepted to on behalf of the said defendant as more fully appears from the transcript of the record.

VI

Because of error of the Court in admitting evidence, both oral and documentary, over the objection of counsel for defendant, to which exception was duly taken, as shown by the minutes of the Court and the transcript of the proceedings.

VII

Because of the refusal of the Court to limit the application of evidence offered by the Government as requested by defendant's counsel to which objection was made 4606 and exception taken, as is more particularly set forth in the minutes of the Court and the transcript of the proceedings.

VIII

Because of error of the Court in denial of defendant's motion to strike certain Exhibits and certain testimony to which refusal exception was duly taken, as more particularly shown in the minutes of the Court and the transcript of the proceedings.

IX

Because of error of the Court in permitting Government counsel to use an alleged and unauthenticated transcript of Grand Jury testimony of certain witnesses for the purpose of impeachment, over the objection of defendant's counsel, and to which exception was duly taken as more particularly appears by the minutes of the Court and the transcript of the testimony and because of the refusal of the Court at the request of defendant's counsel to require the alleged Grand Jury testimony so used to be identified and to be made available to defendant's counsel, as more particularly appears by the minutes of the Court and the transcript of the testimony and proceedings.

Because of error of the Court in permitting Government counsel on the examination of certain witnesses to 4607 use an alleged and unauthenticated transcript of the testimony of such witnesses before the Grand Jury for the stated purpose of refreshing recollection, as appears from the minutes of the Court and the transcript of testimony and because of the refusal of the Court at the request of defendant's counsel to require the asserted Grand Jury testimony so used to be identified and to be made available to defendant's counsel, as more particularly appears by the minutes of the Court and the transcript of the testimony and proceedings.

XI

Because of error resulting from the conduct of counsel for the Government, to which objection was duly made and exception taken by counsel for the defendant in

(a) Questioning of witnesses;

(b) Making highly prejudicial remarks in the presence of the jury concerning witnesses and their testimony, which remarks were outside the record;

(c) Making prejudicial remarks in the course of their arguments to the jury;

(d) Making remarks in the presence of the jury in the course of the trial not supported by the evidence or the record, which were prejudicial to the defendant;

all as appears by the minutes of the Court and the transcript of the proceedings in this case, with the result 4608 that the jury was prejudiced and inflamed against the defendant and said defendant was prevented from obtaining a fair and impartial trial.

XII

Because there was no evidence that the alleged combination and conspiracy was entered into within the Western District of Wisconsin, or that any act pursuant to or in furtherance of such alleged combination and conspiracy was done in said District.

XIII

Because of error of the Court in refusing to direct a verdict of "Not Guilty" at the close of all the evidence.

XIV

Because of error of the Court in overruling the defendant's motion to quash the indictment.

XV

Because of error of the Court in overruling the defendant's demurrer to the indictment.

XVI

Because the verdict of the jury is contrary to law.

4609

XVII

Because the verdict of the jury is contrary to the evidence.

XVIII

Because there was not sufficient competent evidence to sustain the verdict as to the defendant.

Wherefore, the defendant above named prays that the Court set aside the verdict of the jury and grant said defendant a new trial.

Louis Mead Treadwell,
Goldthwaite H. Dorr,
William J. Donovan,
Herbert H. Thomas,
Attorneys for defendant above named,
1 West Main Street,
Madison, Wisconsin.

Dated: January 25, 1938.

4611a On the same date, January 25, 1938, the attorneys for the defendants filed with the Clerk of the above Court a separate Motion to Set Aside the Verdict and to Dismiss the Indictment on behalf of each of the following defendants: Standard Oil Company (Indiana), Edward G. Seubert, Allan Jackson, Edward J. Bullock, Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc., Charles L. Jones, Charles E. Arnott, H. T. Ashton, Bryan S. Reid, Wadhams Oil Company, A. G. Maguire, Cities Service Company, Empire Oil and Refining Company, Harry D. Frueauff, O. J. Tuttle, Continental Oil Company, Dan Moran, Harry J. Kennedy, The Pure Oil Company, Henry M. Dawes, C. B. Watson, R. H. McElroy, Jr., Sinclair Refining Company, J. W. Carnes, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, Jacob France, Robert W. McDowell, Phillips Petroleum Corporation, Frank Phillips, A. M. Hughes, Skelly Oil Company, W. G. Skelly, Barnsdall Refining Corporation, E. B. Reeser, The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Oklahoma), I. A. O'Shaughnessy, The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Illinois), The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Kansas), H. E. Brandli, Edward L. Shea, Noel Robinson, J. W. Warner and Arthur V. Bourque.

In each of said Motions the defendant moved the Court to set aside the verdict heretofore returned against such defendant and to dismiss the indictment herein, for 4611b the following reasons and grounds: (1) that the verdict of the jury is contrary to law; (2) that the verdict of the jury is contrary to the evidence; (3) that there was no sufficient competent evidence to support the verdict as to the defendant; (4) that the Court erred in not granting the prayer of the defendant for a peremptory instruction to the jury to render a verdict of "not guilty" at the close of the Government's case; (5) that the Court erred in not granting the prayer of the defendant for a peremptory instruction to the jury to render a verdict of "not guilty" at the close of the whole case; and (6) for the reasons stated in the various paragraphs of the Motion to Dismiss the Indictment and for a Directed Verdict of Not Guilty filed at the close of all of the evidence, and the defendant respectfully moved that the Court set aside the verdict returned against him and dismiss the indictment herein.

On the same day, January 25, 1938, the defendant Shell Petroleum Corporation, by its attorneys, filed with the Clerk of the above Court, its Motion to Set Aside the Verdict and Dismiss the Indictment. This motion provides as follows:

4612 IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

• • • (Caption—11365) • • •

MOTION TO SET ASIDE THE VERDICT AND TO DISMISS THE INDICTMENT AS TO THE DEFENDANT SHELL PETROLEUM CORPORATION.

Comes now the defendant Shell Petroleum Corporation and moves the Court to set aside the verdict of the jury and to dismiss the indictment as to it, and in support thereof specifies the following reasons and grounds:

(1) The evidence fails to show that this defendant did any act whatsoever with any wrongful purpose or criminal intent. All the substantial, competent evidence herein is as consistent with the presumption of the innocence of this defendant as it is consistent with its guilt of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(2) There is no substantial, competent evidence in the record herein of facts which exclude every other hypothesis but that of the guilt of this defendant of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(3) There is no substantial evidence in the record that this defendant engaged in an unlawful combination 4613 and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in gasoline among the several states in violation of Section I of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, as charged in the indictment.

(4) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 18 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that the defendants and other persons to the grand jurors unknown "have combined and conspired together for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing the tank car prices of gasoline in the aforementioned spot markets, and, as intended by them, defendants have artificially raised and fixed said spot market tank car prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels and at levels agreed upon among them".

The evidence produced totally fails to prove that this defendant combined and conspired with others for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing tank car prices and totally fails to prove that this defendant, with others, artificially raised and fixed the spot market tank car prices, and totally fails to prove that this defendant, with others, maintained said prices at artificially high and noncompetitive levels and totally fails to prove that this defendant, with others, maintained said prices at levels agreed upon among them.

(5) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 19 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that the defend-4614 ants "engaged and participated in two concerted gasoline buying programs hereinafter referred to as
(a) the East Texas Buying Program and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program", which allegation is further explained by the answer (See R. p. 66, Par. 10) to paragraph No. 1 of the Bill of Particulars filed by this defendant, in which answer it is alleged as follows:

> "The government claims that each of the defendants—including Gulf—engaged and participated with the other defendants in a general conspiracy in which two concerted buying programs were used simultaneously and concurrently for carrying it out and for common purposes."

There is no evidence that this defendant participated in the alleged East Texas Buying Program or in the alleged Mid-Continent Buying Program.

The evidence affirmatively shows that this defendant never bought gasoline in East Texas through the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association and only bought gasoline in the Mid-Continent at prices at or below the low quotations in the journals. The indictment does not charge that this defendant participated in the East Texas Buying Program.

(6) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in paragraph 19 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that the defendants engaged in two concerted buying programs "for the purchase by each of them from independent refiners in spot transactions of large quantities of gasoline in the East Texas and Mid-Continent fields at uniform, high and at times progressively increased prices".

4615 The evidence shows that all purchases made by this defendant which were made at a flat price (i. e., a price not determined by published quotations on the date of shipment) were made at prices at or below the low of the published quotations.

(7) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935 and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period this defendant, Shell Petroleum Corporation, engaged and participated in two concerted gasoline buying programs referred to in paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the East Texas Buying Program (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program as alleged in said paragraph.

(8) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in paragraph 21 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that, "said independent refiners have, at the instance of defendant Arnott and the aforesaid Buckley, curtailed their production of gasoline".

(9) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in paragraph 23 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that "each of the defendant major oil companies named in the preceding paragraph has taken a part of the large quantities of gasoline purchased as aforesaid as from time to time allotted to it by defendants McDowell, Tuttle, Bourque and the aforesaid Jacobi".

4616 The evidence wholly fails to show that any quantity of gasoline was ever allotted to this defendant by the defendants McDowell, Tuttle and Bourque and by the witness Jacobi.

(10) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegation contained in paragraph 23 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged as follows: "Said purchases have been in excess of the amounts which the aforementioned defendant major oil companies would have purchased apart from their participation in said buying program and they have been made at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices and from time to time at progressively increased prices, as agreed upon by said defendant major oil companies."

(11) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in paragraph 23 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged as follows: "In furtherance of said unlawful purposes said independent refiners have, at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque, curtailed their production of gasoline". There is no evidence that independent refiners curtailed their production of gasoline at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque.

(12) There is no substantial, competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935 and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment, or that at any time during said period this defendant engaged or participated in any combination, arrangement, agreement, understanding, concert of action or program, whereby or as a result of which this defendant was or became obligated 4617 regularly to purchase any specific amount or any definite share, percentage or allotment of the surplus gasoline available or that would become available for purchase from the independent refiners named in paragraph 22 of the indictment, or whereby or as the result of which this defendant was or became obligated to pay any specific price or any price designated or fixed by any person or persons other than its own officers for such surplus gasoline as it might purchase from said independent refiners or from any of them.

(13) There is no substantial, competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant did any act within the Western District of Wisconsin pursuant to the alleged combination and conspiracy, if any, as alleged in the indictment herein.

Wherefore, this defendant respectfully moves the Court to set aside the verdict of guilty found by the jury as to this defendant and to dismiss the indictment as to it.

Thompson, Mitchell, Thompson & Young,
Atty's for Defendant Shell Pet. Corp.

4618 On the same day, January 25, 1938, the defendants Alexander Fraser, and P. E. Lakin, by their attorneys, each filed a Motion to Set Aside the Verdict and Dismiss the Indictment herein. The Motion of the defendant P. E. Lakin is as follows:

In the District Court of the United States.

* * (Caption—11365) * *

MOTION TO SET ASIDE THE VERDICT AND TO DISMISS THE INDICTMENT AS TO THE DEFENDANT P. E. LAKIN.

Comes now the defendant P. E. Lakin and moves the Court to set aside the verdict of the jury and to dismiss the indictment as to him, and in support thereof specifies the following reasons and grounds:

(1) The evidence does not show that this defendant ever authorized, ordered or did any of the acts or things charged in the indictment.

(2) This defendant cannot be held guilty of crime merely because of the fact that he was vice-president of defendant Shell Petroleum Corporation, even though the said Shell Petroleum Corporation be convicted of criminal conduct, because there is no evidence in this record
4619 that this defendant either participated in, authorized or ordered any action or conduct by the Shell Petroleum Corporation or any of its officers or agents contributing to the commission of any such offense.

(3) There is no evidence that this defendant ever wrote any of the documents received in evidence which were sent under his name, while the evidence does show that such documents were written by other persons. Even if this defendant read or signed any of such documents or received any of the documents received in evidence which were addressed to him, such documents do not contain any matters tending to prove knowledge or authorization on the part of this defendant of participation by Shell Petroleum Corporation in the conspiracy charged in the indictment.

(4) The evidence fails to show that this defendant did any act whatsoever with any wrongful purpose or criminal intent. All the substantial, competent evidence herein is as consistent with the presumption of the innocence of this defendant as it is consistent with his guilt of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(5) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein of facts which exclude every other hypothesis but that of the guilt of this defendant of the offense, if any, charged in the indictment.

(6) There is no substantial evidence in the record that this defendant engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in gasoline among the several states in violation of Section I 4620 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, as charged in the indictment.

(7) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in paragraph No. 18 of the indictment, wherein it is alleged that the defendants and other persons to the grand jurors unknown "have combined and conspired together for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing the tank car prices of gasoline in the aforementioned spot markets, and as intended by them defendants have artificially raised and fixed said spot market tank car prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels and at levels agreed upon among them."

The evidence produced totally fails to prove that this defendant combined and conspired with others for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing tank car prices and totally fails to prove that this defendant, either acting individually or through Shell Petroleum Corporation, of which he is vice-president, with others, artificially raised and fixed the spot market tank car prices, and totally fails to prove that this defendant, acting individually or through Shell Petroleum Corporation, with others, maintained said prices at artificially high and non-competitive levels and totally fails to prove that this defendant, acting individually or through Shell Petroleum Corporation, with others, maintained said prices at levels agreed upon among them.

(8) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in Paragraph No. 19 of the indictment wherein it is alleged that the defend-4621 ants "engaged and participated in two concerted gasoline buying programs hereinafter referred to as (a) the East Texas Buying Program and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program", which allegation is further explained by the answer (See R. p. 66, Par. 10) to Paragraph No. 1 of the Bill of Particulars filed by the Shell Petroleum Corporation and this defendant in which answer it is alleged as follows:

> "The Government claims that each of the defendants—including Gulf—engaged and participated with the other defendants in a general conspiracy in which two concerted buying programs were used simultaneously and concurrently for carrying it out and for common purposes."

There is no evidence that this defendant, acting individually or through Shell Petroleum Corporation, participated in the alleged East Texas Buying Program or in the alleged Mid-Continent Buying Program.

The evidence affirmatively shows that this defendant and Shell Petroleum Corporation never bought gasoline in East Texas through the East Texas Refiners Marketing Association, and only bought gasoline in the Mid-Continent at prices at or below the low quotations in the journals. The indictment does not charge that this defendant or the defendant Shell Petroleum Corporation participated in the East Texas Buying Program.

(9) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in Paragraph 19 of the indictment wherein it is alleged that the defendants engaged in two concerted buying programs, "for the purchase by each of them from independent refiners in spot transactions of large quantities of gasoline in the East Texas and Mid-Continent fields at uniform, high and 4622 at times progressively increased prices."

The evidence shows that all purchases made by Shell Petroleum Corporation which were made at a flat price (i. e., a price not determined by published quotations on the date of shipment) were made at prices at or below the low of the published quotations.

(10) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment or that at any time during said period this defendant, or the defendant Shell Petroleum Corporation, acting through or under the direction of this defendant, engaged and participated in two concerted gasoline buying programs referred to in Paragraph 19 of the indictment as (a) the East Texas Buying Program and (b) the Mid-Continent Buying Program, as alleged in said paragraph.

(11) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in Paragraph 21 of the indictment wherein it is alleged that, "said independent refiners have at the instance of defendant Arnott and the aforesaid Buckley, curtailed their production of gasoline."

(12) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in Paragraph 23 of the indictment wherein it is alleged that: "Each of the defendant major oil companies named in the preceding paragraph has taken a part of the large quantities of gasoline purchased as aforesaid as from time to time allotted to it by defendants McDowell, Tuttle, Bourque and the aforesaid Jacobi."

The evidence wholly fails to show that any quantity of gasoline was ever allotted to the defendant, Shell 4623 Petroleum Corporation, by the defendants McDowell, Tuttle and Bourque and by the witness, Jacobi.

(13) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegation contained in Paragraph 23 of the indictment wherein it is alleged as follows: "Said purchases have been in excess of the amounts which the aforementioned defendant major oil companies would have purchased apart from their participation in said buying program and they have been made at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices and from time to time, at progressively increased prices, as agreed upon by said defendant major oil companies."

(14) There is a total failure of proof in support of the following allegations contained in Paragraph 23 of the indictment wherein it is alleged as follows: "In furtherance of said unlawful purposes said independent refiners have at the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque curtailed their production of gasoline." There is no evidence that independent refiners curtailed their production of gasoline in the instance of defendants Arnott, McDowell, Tuttle, Boggs and Bourque.

(15) There is no substantial, competent evidence in the record herein that during the period beginning in the month of February, 1935, and continuing to the date of the presentation of this indictment or that at any time during said period this defendant or the defendant, Shell Petroleum Corporation, of which this defendant is vice-president, engaged or participated in any combination, arrangement, agreement, understanding, concert of action or program whereby or as a result of which said defendant, 4624 Shell Petroleum Corporation, was or became obligated regularly to purchase any specific amount or any definite share, percentage or allotment of the surplus gasoline available or that would become available for purchase from the independent refiners named in Paragraph 22 of the indictment or whereby or as the result of which said defendant, Shell Petroleum Corporation, was or became obligated to pay any specific price or any price designated or fixed by any person or persons other than its own officers for such surplus gasoline as it might purchase from said independent refiners or from any of them.

(16) There is no substantial competent evidence in the record herein that this defendant did any act within the Western District of Wisconsin, pursuant to the alleged combination and conspiracy, if any, as alleged in the indictment herein.

Wherefore, this defendant respectfully moves the Court to set aside the verdict of guilty found by the jury as to this defendant and to dismiss the indictment as to him.

Thompson, Mitchell, Thompson & Young,
Samuel A. Mitchell,
Truman Post Young,
Attorneys for Defendant P. E. Lakin.

4625 Thereafter, and on June 2, 1938, at a hearing of the above cause before the Honorable Patrick T. Stone, Judge of the said Court, Mr. John Henry Lewin, attorney for the plaintiff, the United States, made a Motion that the Indictment against the defendant Edward Karstedt be dismissed. Such Motion was granted by the Court.

On the same day, Mr. Lewin stated that he was reliably informed that the defendant Frank R. Coates was too ill to stand trial, or to warrant the Government in bringing him to trial. Therefore, he moved that such Indictment against said defendant be dismissed. Such Motion was granted by the Court.

Thereafter, and on July 19, 1938, the Honorable Patrick T. Stone, Judge of the above Court, made and entered an Order providing (1) that the verdicts be set aside and the Indictment dismissed as to the defendants Dan Moran, Henry M. Dawes, Edward G. Seubert, Allan Jackson, Bryan S. Reid, Frank Phillips, W. G. Skelly, Jacob France, Charles L. Jones, A. V. Bourque, and The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Kansas); and (2) that the verdicts as to the defendants Edward J. Bullock, A. G. Maguire, Harry D. Frueauff, H. E. Brandli, O. J. Tuttle, Harry J. Kennedy, C. B. Watson, J. W. Carnes, Edward L. Shea, Noel Robinson, J. W. Warner, E. B. Reeser, I. A. O'Shaughnessy, A. M. Hughes, Alexander Fraser, 4626 Cities Service Company, Barnsdall Refining Corporation, and Standard Oil Company (Indiana), be set aside, and the said defendants be granted a new trial, and (3) that the jury's verdict as to the defendants Charles E. Arnott, P. E. Lakin, H. T. Ashton, Robert W. McDowell, R. H. McElroy, Jr., Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc., Wadhams Oil Company, Empire Oil and Refining Company (now Cities Service Oil Company), Continental Oil Company, The Pure Oil Company, Shell Petroleum Corporation, Sinclair Refining Company, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, Phillips Petroleum Company, Skelly Oil Company, The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Illinois), and The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Oklahoma), be sustained, and that the Motions of said defendants for an Order Setting Aside the Verdicts and for a New Trial be and are hereby denied, and allowed an exception to each defendant.

(Said Order on Motions after Verdict is printed at pages 2488-2500 of the Record.)

On the same date, July 19, 1938, the Honorable Patrick T. Stone, Judge of the above Court, in open court, the individual defendants being present in person and the corporate defendants being present by their attorneys, pronounced sentence upon each verdict of the jury, 4627 with respect to the defendants hereinafter named, and made and filed with the Clerk of the above Court a Judgment providing (1) that the corporate defendants Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc., Wadhams Oil Company, Empire Oil and Refining Company (now Cities Service Oil Company), Continental Oil Company, The Pure Oil Company, Shell Petroleum Corporation, Sinclair Refining Company, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, Phillips Petroleum Company, Skelly Oil Company, The Globe Oil & Refining Company (Illinois), and The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Oklahoma), each pay a fine of Five Thousand ($5,000) Dollars and costs; and (2) that the individual defendants, Charles E. Arnott, P. E. Lakin, H. T. Ashton, R. W. McDowell, and R. H. McElroy, Jr., each pay a fine of One Thousand ($1,000) Dollars.

(Said Judgment is printed at pages 2501-02 of the Record.)

Thereupon, on the same date, July 19, 1938, the Honorable Patrick T. Stone, Judge of the above Court, allowed an exception to said sentences, Judgment and Order as to each of the defendants named in the Judgment above mentioned.

(Memorandum of Exceptions to Judgments of Conviction is printed at page 2502 of the Record.)

Thereafter, on July 20, 1938, the defendants, 4628 Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc., Wadhams Oil Company, Empire Oil & Refining Company (now Cities Service Oil Company), Continental Oil Company, The Pure Oil Company, Shell Petroleum Corporation, Sinclair Refining Company, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, Phillips Petroleum Company, Skelly Oil Company, The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Illinois), the Globe Oil and Refining Company (Oklahoma), Charles E. Arnott, P. E. Lakin, H. T. Ashton, R. W. McDowell, and R. H. McElroy, Jr., by their attorneys, severally filed with the Clerk of the above Court a Notice of Appeals, in duplicate, and served a copy of the said Notice of Appeals upon the attorneys for the plaintiff, the United States.

(Said Notice of Appeals is printed at pages 2503-12 of the Record.)

On the same date, July 20, 1938, the defendants, Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc., Wadhams Oil Company, Empire Oil & Refining Company (now Cities Service Oil Company), Continental Oil Company, The Pure Oil Company, Shell Petroleum Corporation, Sinclair Refining Company, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, Phillips Petroleum Company, Skelly Oil Company, The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Illinois), The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Oklahoma), Charles E. Arnott, 4629 P. E. Lakin, H. T. Ashton, R. W. McDowell, and R. H. McElroy, Jr., severally filed with the Clerk of the above Court a Cost and Supersedeas Bond Pending Appeal.

(Said Cost and Supersedeas Bond is printed at pages 2575-78 of the Record.)

On the same date, July 20, 1938, the Honorable Patrick T. Stone, Judge of the above Court, made and entered an Order granting the defendants-appellants one hundred twenty (120) days from the date said Notice of Appeals was filed within which to settle and file the Bill of Exceptions and Assignment of Errors in connection with the appeals of this cause to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, and made other instructions relative to the said appeals.

(Said Order is printed at pages 2514-15 of the Record.)

Thereafter, and on October 29, 1938, the Honorable Patrick T. Stone, Judge of the above Court, made and entered an Order clarifying the Order of July 20, 1938, by providing that Sundays and holidays are excluded in computing the 120-day period mentioned in said Order of July 20, 1938. Said Order provides as follows:

ORDER CLARIFYING ORDER OF JULY 20, 1938.

It having been brought to the attention of the Court that in the Order dated July 20, 1938 in the above case, it is not specifically stated that in computing time all Sundays and legal holidays occurring within the period of 120 days mentioned in paragraph 1 of said Order and within the period of 90 days mentioned in paragraph 2 of said Order, are to be excluded, and the Court being of the opinion that it is advisable to remove any doubt as to the meaning of such paragraphs in said Order,

It Is Ordered:

That the Order of this Court dated July 20, 1938, entered in the above case is hereby clarified by inserting after the word "days" in the second line of paragraph 1 and in the fourth line of paragraph 2 of said Order the following: "exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays (whether under Federal law or under the law of this State) occurring within such period."

PETITION TO RESCIND AND EXPUNGE ORDER PURPORTING TO SET ASIDE THE VERDICTS RETURNED AGAINST CERTAIN DEFENDANTS AND PURPORTING TO ENTER JUDGMENT FOR SAID DEFENDANTS, NOTWITHSTANDING THE VERDICTS FOR SAID DEFENDANTS.

(Filed Aug. 1, 1938)

Comes now the United States and petitions this Court to rescind and expunge from the record the order and judgments heretofore entered in the above entitled cause purporting to set aside the verdicts returned against defendants Dan Moran, Henry M. Dawes, Edward G. Seubert, Allan Jackson, Bryan S. Reid, Frank Phillips, W. G. Skelly, Jacob France, Charles L. Jones, A. V. Bourque and Globe Oil and Refining Company (Kansas), and to enter judgment for said defendants, notwithstanding the verdicts, on the following grounds:

4632 1. On December 22, 1936, the Grand Jury for the December 1936 term of this Court returned an indictment against certain major oil companies and their officers and employees and others, including the defendants hereinabove named, charging them with conspiring and combining together during the period from February 1935 to the date of the indictment for the purpose and with the effect of raising, fixing, and maintaining the tank car prices and retail prices of gasoline sold in ten mid-western states, including the Western District of Wisconsin, by the operation of two so-called buying programs in the Mid-Continent and East Texas oil fields of the United States, all in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Law;

2. In January and February 1937 all of the defendants later brought to trial filed demurrers to the indictment on the ground that said indictment was insufficient in the law to charge the defendants with the commission of an offense against the United States within the Western District of Wisconsin; and that on March 31, 1937, after hearing, this Court entered an order overruling the demurrers and sustaining the sufficiency of the indictment;

3. On October 4, 1937, trial was commenced on said indictment before a jury lawfully impanelled and sitting in this Court and evidence was introduced on behalf of the Government which substantially established the facts 4633 alleged in the indictment, the violations of law charged therein, and the participation of each of the defendants hereinabove named in the conspiracy charged in the indictment.

4. On November 15, 1937, each of the defendants on trial, including the defendants hereinabove named, at the close of the Government's case filed motions for directed verdict based on the ground, among others, that the evidence was insufficient to establish the commission by the defendants of the offense charged in the indictment; that this Court heard full and lengthy arguments on those motions in behalf of each defendant consuming a period of approximately ten days; that at the conclusion of argument this Court, in open court, directed a verdict of acquittal for certain of the defendants named in the indictment and denied the motions for a directed verdict of the other defendants, including the defendants hereinabove named, on the ground that the evidence against them was legally sufficient to justify submitting the cases against them to the jury.

5. Between the period from November 20, 1937, to January 13, 1938, evidence was introduced on behalf of the defendants, much of which tended further to prove the case as charged in the indictment and further to implicate in the conspiracy charged therein certain of the defendants on trial; at the close of defendants' case evidence was introduced on behalf of the Government on rebuttal; 4634 all of said evidence offered and received in the case was reported and transcribed by the official court reporter of this court, said transcription being incorporated herein as if hereinafter set forth in full;

6. On January 17, 1938, the defendants renewed their motions for a directed verdict upon the same grounds previously urged; this Court purported to reserve ruling on said motions until after the verdict of the jury had been rendered;

7. On January 21, 1938, this Court submitted to the jury for verdict the cases against all the defendants then on trial, including the defendants hereinabove named; on January 22, 1938, said jury returned a verdict of guilty against all of said defendants convicting them of the offense as charged in the indictment;

8. On January 25, 1938, all of the convicted defendants filed motions for a new trial, for judgment notwithstanding verdict, and in arrest of judgment; said motions for a new trial and motions for judgment notwithstanding verdict were based on the ground, among others, that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict against the defendants;

9. On July 19, 1938, this Court entered an order entitled "Order on Motions After Verdict" purporting, among other things, to set aside the verdicts as to the defendants hereinabove named and to enter judgment for them 4635 notwithstanding the verdicts against them on the alleged ground that there was no substantial evidence clearly tending to sustain the verdicts;

10. Your petitioner alleges that said order of this Court, and the said purported judgments entered pursuant thereto, are null and void and without legal effect for the reason that this Court had no power in law or jurisdiction to enter said judgments, notwithstanding verdict; that, although this Court purported to reserve until after verdicts decision on the defendants' motions for directed verdicts, no power in law or jurisdiction existed in this Court to make such a reservation, and such purported reservation was null and void and without legal effect; that after the verdict the power and duty of this Court was limited to passing sentences upon the defendants named or, in the exercise of proper discretion, to grant them new trials;

11. Your petitioner further alleges that said order, and the said purported judgments entered pursuant thereto, are null and void for the reason that this Court in entering the same, although purporting to pass on the legal sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdicts against the defendants, usurped the function of the jury in that the Court acted as a trier of fact to weigh and evaluate the evidence against the defendants and arbitrarily refused to consider and ignored the voluminous evidence in the record hereinabove incorporated herein, which tended to establish 4636 beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants hereinabove named were guilty as charged in the indictment;

12. By reason of the fact that said order and purported judgment are null and void and without legal effect, your petitioner avers that the verdicts of the jury against the defendants hereinabove named are still in full force and effect.

Wherefore, it is respectfully prayed that this Honorable Court rescind and expunge the said order, and judgments entered pursuant thereto, purporting to set aside the verdicts for defendants Dan Moran, Henry M. Dawes, Edward G. Seubert, Allan Jackson, Bryan S. Reid, Frank Phillips, W. G. Skelly, Jacob France, Charles L Jones, A. V. Bourque, and Globe Oil and Refining Company (Kansas), and to enter judgment for said defendants notwithstanding the verdicts, and that the Court pass sentences upon said defendants or exercise the judicial discretion lodged in the Court to grant them new trials.

W. P. Crawford,
W. B. Watson Snyder,
Grant W. Kelleher,
Special Assistants to the Attorney General.

4637 On August 4, 1938, the Honorable Patrick T. Stone, Judge of the above Court, made and entered an Order amending the said Order of January 21, 1938, by providing that the Motions for Directed Verdict at the close of all the evidence were denied subject to the reservation of the Court to pass upon all questions of law incident thereto after the return of the verdict of the jury as of the time the Motions were made. Said Order provides as follows:

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

ORDER.

It having appeared to the Court that an order was presented to the Court on January 21, 1938, denying the motions for directed verdicts made on behalf of all the defendants in this cause, and whereas it was the intention of the Court, as the record shows, to reserve its ruling on the questions of law incident to said motions for directed verdicts, to be passed upon after the verdict of the jury, as of the time the motions were made, and the Court being 4638 of the opinion at all times that it had reserved rulings on said motions for directed verdicts made on behalf of said defendants,

And the Court being now of the opinion that the record should be amended so as to truly reflect the intention of the Court to pass upon said questions of law after the verdict of the jury, as of the time the motions were made,

Now, Therefore, It Is Ordered, that the order of January 21, 1938, referred to herein, be amended so as to read as follows:

> "It Is Ordered that said motions for directed verdict be and the same are hereby denied, subject to the reservation of the Court to pass upon all questions of law incident thereto after the return of the verdict of the jury, as of the time the motions were made.
>
>
> "To all of which the Government has objected, and to which it may have an exception."

Western District of Wisconsin.

On September 21, 1938, at a hearing of the above cause, the Honorable Patrick T. Stone, Judge of the above Court, made and entered an Order correcting his said Order of July 19, 1938. The correction Order of September 21, 1938, reads as follows:

4639 IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

ORDER.

This cause having been further considered by the Court upon the petition of the United States of America to rescind and expunge the order of this Court of July 19, 1938, setting aside the verdicts and dismissing the indictment as to the defendants Dan Moran, Henry M. Dawes, Edward G. Seubert, Allan Jackson, Bryan S. Reid, Frank Phillips, W. G. Skelly, Jacob France, Charles L. Jones, A. V. Bourque, and The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Kansas), the Court is of the opinion that said order is not sufficiently clear and certain, and

Whereas the Court intended to and did reserve rulings on the motions to dismiss the indictment and for a directed verdict made on behalf of the above named defendants at the close of the case, as the transcript clearly shows, and as the order of August 4, 1938, amending the order 4640 of January 21, 1938, denying said motions, now shows, and

Whereas the Court desires to make it perfectly clear and certain as to the procedure it followed and the judgment it intended to enter, does hereby and

It Is Therefore Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed by the Court that the judgment heretofore rendered by it on July 19, 1938, setting aside the verdict and dismissing the indictment as to the defendants Dan Moran, Henry M. Dawes, Edward G. Seubert, Allan Jackson, Bryan S. Reid, Frank Phillips, W. G. Skelly, Jacob France, Charles L. Jones, A. V. Bourque, and The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Kansas), be and the same is hereby set aside and held for naught.

It Is Further Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed That the verdicts of the jury holding the following defendants, Dan Moran, Henry M. Dawes, Edward G. Seubert, Allan Jackson, Bryan S. Reid, Frank Phillips, W. G. Skelly, Jacob France, Charles L. Jones, A. V. Bourque, and The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Kansas), guilty, be and the same are hereby set aside and held for naught, and that the motions to dismiss the indictment and for a directed verdict filed on January 17, 1938, made severally at the close of the case on behalf of the defendants, Dan Moran, Henry M. Dawes, Edward G. Seubert, Allan Jackson, 4641 Bryan S. Reid, Frank Phillips, W. G. Skelly, Jacob France, Charles L. Jones, A. V. Bourque, and The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Kansas), be and the same are hereby sustained, and the defendants, Dan Moran, Henry M. Dawes, Edward G. Seubert, Allan Jackson, Bryan S. Reid, Frank Phillips, W. G. Skelly, Jacob France, Charles L. Jones, A. V. Bourque, and The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Kansas), are hereby dismissed from this cause.

Dated this 21st day of September, 1938.

ORDER ON PETITION TO RESCIND AND EXPUNGE PORTION OF ORDER OF JULY 19, 1938.

Filed September 22, 1938.

At the close of the testimony, motions were made on behalf of each of the defendants for a directed verdict. While the Court was of the opinion that in some cases the motions were well taken, the testimony was so voluminous, the exhibits so extensive in number, that it seemed impelling that no ruling on the motion be made until there was opportunity for a thorough study of the evidence, and a careful and deliberate consideration of the law, with the aid of arguments and briefs. The jury had been sequestered from October, 1937 to January, 1938, which included the Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's Holidays, and to hold it for a further time sufficient to permit the Court to rule properly, seemed a further hardship which I could not inflict upon the jury, and one which should be avoided if possible. Under these circumstances, and with full knowledge and acquiescence of counsel for all parties, the Court denied the various motions for directed verdict under an explicit reservation of its ruling on the questions of law incident thereto, with the right to pass on the questions of law after verdict, as of the time made, and as the record, upon careful study, might require. Not only was no objection made to this procedure, except by one of the 4643 counsel for some of the defendants, but there was no suggestion from anyone that the Court might lack the power to reserve its ruling on these questions of law, or that the practice was in any way out of the ordinary. If any serious question in this respect had been raised, it is obvious that the jury might have been asked to retire until the Court had disposed of the motions. Its convenience would have to yield to the requirement that the Court perform its plain, judicial duty, and not put itself into a position where it would have to take the verdict with but two alternatives, viz. to sentence innocent defendants, or put them to a new trial. American justice recognizes the principle that the protection of the innocent is equally as important as conviction of the guilty.

The Court was in no doubt whatever about the power to reserve its ruling on these questions of law, and to pass thereon after the verdict with the same force and effect as before verdict. Had the practice here followed been as novel and so devoid of judicial power as the Government now claims, it would seem that the Court was entitled to some suggestion to that effect at the time the rulings were reserved. Neither was the question raised on the oral argument on the motions after verdict nor on the briefs filed by Government counsel on the motions after verdict.

Certainly the power as exercised in this case is no broader or different in principle than the admitted power to dismiss before taking a verdict. A question of law does not become a question of fact by an unwarranted submission of the case to a jury. However, in the face of an express reservation of the questions of law involved, such a result is impossible.

4644 The constitutional right of a defendant to a trial by jury requires that all questions of law be decided by the Court and questions of fact by a jury. It is just as important that the defendant be given the benefit of the one as of the other, and if he be denied one or the other, his constitutional right to that extent has been denied.

In the careful and full review of the record and study of the briefs filed on the motions before and after verdict, the Court was definitely of the opinion that as to most of the defendants dismissed by the order of July 19th last, there was no substantial evidence indicating participation in the conspiracy; and that as to others the evidence adduced was clearly as consistent with innocence as with guilt, which raises a question of law for the Court, not one of fact for the jury, and in such circumstances it becomes the duty of the Court to grant the motions for a directed verdict. To do otherwise is clearly error. The following cases hold that where the evidence is as consistent with innocence as with guilt, it is the duty of the Court to direct a verdict for the defendant: Ramona v. U. S., 9 F. (2d), 522 (C. C. A. 2d); Van Gorder v. U. S., 21 F. (2d) 933 (C. C. A. 8th); Salinger v. U. S., 23 F. (2d) 48, (C. C. A. 8th); Leslie v. U. S., 43 F. (2d) 288, (C. C. A. 10th); Tinsley v. U. S., 43 F. (2d) 890, (C. C. A. 8th); Parnell v. U. S., 64 F. (2d) 324, (C. C. A. 10th); Nicola v. U. S., 72 F. (2d) 780, (C. C. A. 3d); Paul v. U. S., 79 F. (2d) 561, (C. C. A. 3d); Nosowitz v. U. S., 282 F. 575, (C. C. A. 2d).

In the following cases the appellate court, having decided that the motions of the defendant for a directed verdict on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence or for other legal reasons should have been granted, reversed and remanded without direction for a new trial: Smith v.

4645 U. S., 151 U. S. 50; Schafer v. U. S., 251 U. S. 466;
Gebardi v. U. S., 287 U. S. 112; Grau v. U. S., 287 U. S. 124; Nathanson v. U. S., 290 U. S. 41; Nosowitz v. U. S., 282 F. 575 (C. C. A. 2d); O'Brien v. U. S., 51 F. (2d) 674, (C. C. A. 7th); Hogan v. U. S., 54 F. (2d) 924, (C. C. A. 5th); U. S. v. Otto, 54 F. (2d) 277, (C. C. A. 2d); Nozzaro v. U. S., 56 F. (2d) 1026 (C. C. A. 10th); Dolff v. U. S., 61 F. (2d) 881, (C. C. A. 7th); Cherry v. U. S., 78 F. (2d) 334, (C. C. A. 7th); Paul v. U. S., 79 F. (2d) 561 (C. C. A. 3d); Sonzinsky v. U. S., 86 F. (2d) 486, (C. C. A. 7th); Kassin v. U. S., 87 F. (2d) 183, (C. C. A. 5th); U. S. v. Kind, 87 F. (2d) 315, (C. C. A. 2d); U. S. v. Buchalter, 88 F. (2d) 625, (C. C. A. 2d) (Sherman Anti-trust violation); U. S. v. Kaplan, 89 F. (2d) 869, (C. C. A. 2d); Copeland v. U. S., 90 F. (2d) 78, (C. C. A. 5th); LaPadura v. U. S., 91 F. (2d) 639, (C. C. A. 3d); Reiner v. U. S., 92 F. (2d) 823, (C. C. A. 9th); Forte v. U. S., 94 F. (2d) 236, (C. C. A. Dist. Columbia); Czarnecki v. U. S., 95 F. (2d) 32, (C. C. A. 3d); Kauz v. U. S., 95 F. (2d) 473, (C. C. A. 5th); Rader v. U. S., 95 F. (2d) 506, (C. C. A. 3d); Merrill v. U. S., 95 F. (2d) 669, (C. C. A. 9th).

In each of the following cases, the appellate courts, having decided that defendant's motion for a directed verdict for insufficiency of the evidence should have been granted, reversed with direction to dismiss the defendant; France v. U. S., 164 U. S. 676; Romano v. U. S., 9 F. (2d) 522, (C. C. A. 2d); Klee v. U. S., 53 F. (2d) 58, (C. C. A. 9th); U. S. v. Bonanzi, 94 F. (2d) 570, (C. C. A. 2d).

The Court is thoroughly satisfied that the procedure here adopted and now complained of by the Government is not only sound in principle, but is fully supported by an abundance of authorities.

In Collenger v. U. S., 50 F. (2d) 345, the Court held that under the ruling in Slocum v. New York Life Insurance Co., 228 U. S. 364, 33 S. Ct. 523, it could not in a criminal case (where no reservation of ruling had been made by the 4646 trial court), remand with instructions to dismiss, but was confined to ordering a new trial. A careful study of the Collenger case does not indicate that it is authority against what was done in the particular circumstances of the case at bar; rather, the contrary seems clear.

The Slocum case was a civil action. In the majority opinion a careful review of the rules of the common law was undertaken in order to ascertain what was the trial by jury guaranteed and preserved by the Seventh Amendment to the Constitution. The Court came to the conclusion that at the time of the adoption of the Seventh Amendment, the common law did not recognize the power to grant a motion for judgment non obstante veredicto (in a case where the trial court had not reserved a ruling), and that therefore the statute of the state of Pennsylvania which authorized that practice was in conflict with the amendment. There was in that case a dissent by four justices, and an opinion by Mr. Justice Hughes, in which it was pointed out that the well recognized practice at common law of demurring to the evidence accomplished the same result, and that in many cases cited against the proposition there were really questions of fact to be decided by the jury, which function the trial court had no right to usurp. He said:

> "The Seventh Amendment provides that 'No fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law.' But wherein has any matter of fact tried by a jury been re-examined? Concededly, there was no fact to be tried by a jury; the case as made was barren of any such fact; and there being none, there has been no re-examination of it. The trial court, in wrongly deciding it, did not convert it into a question of fact; it was not altered by the verdict, but remained the same in its nature—a question for the determination of the court."

And again:

> "But it would seem to be an entire misapprehension to say that trial by jury, in its constitutional > 4647 aspect, requires the submission to the jury of evidence which presents no question for their decision, and that, although there be no facts for the jury to pass upon, still the judgment which follows as matter of law can be arrived at only through a verdict * * * the idea that the jury upon a trial where there is no evidence to sustain a finding by the jury can be reached only through a verdict, could not have been entertained at the time the Constitution was adopted.
> "To repeat and conclude: All that has been done in the present case could, in substance, have been done at common law, albeit by a more cumbrous method. There has been no invasion of the province of the jury. That conclusively appears from the fact that this court holds that there was no basis for a finding by the jury in favor of the plaintiff. We have here a simplification of the procedure adopted in the public interest to the end that unnecessary litigation may be avoided. The party obtains the judgment which in law he should have according to the record. I submit without deference, that in condemning this practice, long followed in the courts below, this court is departing from, instead of applying the principles of the common law, and is extending rather than enforcing the Constitutional provision."

In Baltimore & Carolina Line, Inc. v. Redman, 295 U. S. 654, the court upon a full re-examination of the question reached the conclusion that at common law, at the time of the adoption of the Seventh Amendment, there was a well recognized practice authorizing the trial court to reserve a ruling on motions for "binding instructions" (directed verdicts) based on the insufficiency of the evidence and other questions of law, pending verdict, and thereafter to give judgment as the state of the record required. The opinion in the Redman case, taken in connection with the dissenting opinion in the Slocum case, and the many authorities referred to in this opinion, all seem to approve the procedure here followed. In fact the procedure here employed, under a reservation, is inferentially approved both by the Slocum and the Collenger cases.

4648 In Baltimore and Carolina Line, Inc. v. Redman, supra, the Court said, referring to the Slocum case:

> "A very different situation is disclosed in the present case. The trial court expressly reserved its ruling on the defendant's motions to dismiss and for a directed verdict, both of which were based on the asserted insufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict for the plaintiff. Whether the evidence was sufficient or otherwise was a question of law to be resolved by the court. The verdict for the plaintiff was taken pending the court's ruling on the motions and subject to those rulings. No objection was made to the reservation or this mode of proceeding, and they must be regarded as having the tacit consent of the parties. After the verdict was given, the court considered the motions pursuant to the reservation, held the evidence sufficient and denied the motions.
>
> "The Court of Appeals held that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict for the plaintiff, that the defendant's motion for a directed verdict was accordingly well taken, and therefore that the judgment for the plaintiff should be reversed.
>
> "Thus far we think its decision was right. The remaining question relates to the direction which > properly should be included in the judgment of reversal.

>
> "At common law there was a well established practice of reserving questions of law arising during trials by jury and of taking verdicts subject to the ultimate ruling on the questions reserved; and under this practice the reservation carried with it authority to make such ultimate disposition of the case as might be made essential by the ruling under the reservation, such as non-suiting the plaintiff where he had obtained a verdict, entering a verdict or judgment for one party where the jury had given a verdict to the other, or making other essential adjustments. * * *
>
> "The court of appeals regarded the decision in Slocum v. New York Life Insurance Co. as requiring that the direction be for a new trial. We already have pointed out the differences between that case and this. But it is true that some parts of the opinion in that case give color to the interpretation put on it by the court of appeals. In this they go beyond the case then under consideration and are not controlling. Not only so, but they must be regarded as qualified by what is said in this opinion.
> "It results that the judgment of the court of appeals should be modified by substituting a direction for a judgment of dismissal on the merits in place of the direction for a new trial, and, as so modified, should be affirmed."

4649 It is urged by the Government that the power of reservation in the Redman case was pursuant to a state statute applicable under the conformity statute. So was there a state statute in the Slocum case, which the Supreme Court held violated the Seventh Amendment. The statute was followed because it merely provided a method of procedure in conformity with the rules of the common law at the time of the adoption of the Amendment. That this is true is illustrated by the following language in the opinion in the Redman case:

> "Some of the states have statutes embodying the chief features of the common law practice which we have described. The State of New York, in which the trial was had, has such a statute; and the trial court, in reserving its decision on the motions which presented the question of the sufficiency of the evidence, and in taking the verdict of the jury subject to its opinion on that question conformed to that > statute and the practice under it as approved by the court of appeals of that state."

The practice prescribed by statute conformed to the practice at common law at the time of the adoption of the Seventh Amendment.

But it is said that the Redman case (where the court did reserve the right to later rule on the motions) is a civil case, and has no application to practice in the Federal Courts in criminal cases. The proponents of this proposition insist at the same time that the Slocum case, (where the court made no reservation to rule on the motions) also a civil case, is controlling in this, a criminal case. It is difficult to perceive how one could logically control to the exclusion of the other. The identical question was before the court in each case, and that was the constitutional right of trial by jury. Certainly in the absence of an express ruling to that effect, the court is of the opinion that the Redman case controls in criminal cases where the situation comes within the doctrine of that case. The Supreme Court expressly modified the holding in the Slocum case, when it said:

4650 "Not only so, but they must be regarded as qualified by what is said in this opinion."

It follows that the Slocum case, held binding in the Collenger case, has been modified so that the practice of reserving rulings on questions of law pending a verdict has been given express approval by the United States Supreme Court.

Since in the case at bar a ruling on the motions for a directed verdict was reserved, not only without objection by the Government but with the acquiescence of all parties, it falls squarely within the doctrine of the Slocum case, as modified by the Redman case. There is therefore no doubt in the mind of the Court that the practice adopted in the case at bar has the full support of the Collenger case properly applied.

It is further urged that since the Conformity Act does not apply in criminal cases and there is no common law practice in criminal cases authorizing judgments non-obstante veredicto, such practice in civil cases does not avail. But the proponents of this doctrine rely largely on the Collenger case in which the Circuit Court of Appeals of this Circuit squarely held that the Slocum case, a civil case, was binding.

Nor would it seem that a state statute or practice is material in determining the power of a Federal Court in this respect. The state statute in the Slocum case was held of no effect, because it authorized a practice not sanctioned at common law; while the same statute was approved in the Redman case because it did follow the common law. If, however, a state statute or practice were essential, the Court has here followed a course definitely approved according to the practice in the Courts of the State of Wisconsin; State v. Neen, 171 Wis. 36, 176 N. W. 70.

4651 It is asserted that the rules of the Federal Courts as promulgated in 1934 do not recognize a right to give judgment non obstante veredicto in a criminal case. The Court has failed to ascertain that they prohibit reservation of questions of law pending a verdict; and in the light of the cases cited, and many others, it would seem that if the United States Supreme Court, in promulgating new rules, intended to denounce the practice followed by it in the France and other cases cited above, it would have done so expressly.

By the order of July 19, 1938, which order was amended on September 21, 1938 for the purpose as therein indicated, this Court granted the motions for a directed verdict of those defendants it dismissed, in pursuance to and with the power expressly reserved as of the time made, and with the same force and effect as if done before verdict.

It Is Therefore Ordered and Adjudged that the application of the Government to expunge that part of the order of July 19, 1938, referred to in its petition, be and the same is hereby denied.

Dated September 22, 1938.

Patrick T. Stone,
United States District Judge.

STIPULATION AS TO CONTENTS OF THE BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

It is hereby stipulated and agreed by and between the attorneys for the respective parties hereto in regard to the foregoing bill of exceptions:

1. That it contains a narration of the testimony of all the witnesses in this cause, and that it contains all of the proceedings which occurred in this cause to the extent that they are necessary for the purposes of this appeal.

2. That the inclusion of excerpts from the original record, setting forth verbatim the testimony on the proceedings which occurred in the trial, is necessary because the narration of said testimony and the 4653 description of said proceedings would not otherwise properly present the full meaning of such portions of the record.

3. That all of the exhibits are contained in the bill of exceptions except those which are immaterial or merely repetitious, and that wherever any exhibits have been condensed they contain all of the material data shown on such exhibits, and that such condensation was made solely for the purpose of eliminating the immaterial or repetitious matter.

4. That the bill of exceptions was prepared by counsel for the defendants-appellants and that counsel for the plaintiff-appellee have gone over it and made such revisions as appeared necessary and have no objection to it in its present form.

5. That said bill of exceptions may be approved, settled and ordered to be filed and made a part of the record herein by the Honorable Patrick T. Stone, Judge of said Court, who presided at trial of said cause.

W. P. Crawford,
Attorney for Plaintiff.

William J. Donovan,
Attorney for Defendants.

Dated: December 7, 1938.

4654 Forasmuch as the matters above set forth do not fully appear of record, the defendants tender this their Bill of Exceptions, and pray that the same be settled, signed, approved and sealed by the Judge of this Court within the time allowed by this Court.

Dated: December 9th, 1938.

William J. Donovan,
W. J. Donovan,
Herbert H. Thomas,
H. H. Thomas,
Attorneys for the Defendants.

4655 CERTIFICATE OF JUDGE.

On this 9th day of December, 1938, pursuant to due notice of application for settlement and certification of the foregoing and annexed Bill of Exceptions in the above entitled cause, the defendants who are appealing from the judgments against them, by their attorneys, and the plaintiff, by its attorneys, appeared before the undersigned Patrick T. Stone, Judge of said Court, who presided at the trial of said cause. The attorneys for the said defendants, within the time allowed by the Order, dated July 20, 1938, of this Court, as clarified by its Order, dated October 29, 1938, and within the term of this Court as extended by paragraph 6 of said Order of July 20, 1938, duly presented to the undersigned the said Bill of Exceptions, numbered consecutively from page 164 to page 4654, both inclusive, contained in five volumes together with four volumes of exhibits numbered A, B, C and D as a part of said Bill.

I hereby certify that:

1. The foregoing Bill of Exceptions contains a proper, complete, fair and correct narration of all of the testimony given, and all the complete and correct stipulations, motions, orders, objections, rulings, instructions to the jury given, instructions refused, offers of proof, exceptions 4656 taken and allowed and other proceedings had during the trial and in said cause, which are necessary for the purpose of this appeal to present clearly and fully the questions of law involved in the rulings to which exceptions were reserved in the course of the proceedings.

2. All of the evidence given and proceedings had, as above mentioned, are set forth in condensed and narrative form, save as a proper presentation of the full meaning of such evidence and proceedings has required that they be set forth verbatim or otherwise.

3. All of the exhibits received or offered during the trial which are pertinent or in anywise relating to the questions raised by assignments of errors are contained in the said Bill of Exceptions, except those which are immaterial to the questions involved in these appeals or are merely repititious, and wherever any exhibits have been condensed they contain all of the material data shown on the original exhibits, and such condensations only eliminate immaterial or repititious matter.

4. The statements in said Bill of Exceptions with respect to the Bill of Particulars and the Motions to Strike, and with respect to certain omitted motions and pleadings being identical or substantially identical with certain motions and pleadings set forth are true and correct statements.

5. The foregoing Bill of Exceptions was not settled at the time the original record on these appeals was transmitted and filed with the Clerk of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals on August 19, 1938. 4657

I hereby settle, allow and approve the annexed and foregoing Bill of Exceptions, together with the exhibits contained therein, and order that said Bill with said exhibits and with this certificate attached thereto be made a part of the record herein, and forwarded forthwith by the Clerk of this Court, with a proper certificate attached to each volume, to the Clerk of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

In Testimony Whereof the foregoing Bill of Exceptions is hereby sealed and signed this 9th day of December, 1938, at La Crosse, Wisconsin.

MEMORANDUM OF ORDERS DISMISSING INDICTMENT AS TO TIDE WATER ASSOCIATED OIL COMPANY, DEEP ROCK OIL CORPORATION, LOUISIANA OIL REFINING CORPORATION, CITIES SERVICE EXPORT OIL CORPORATION, THE JOURNAL OF COMMERCE PUBLISHING COMPANY, W. C. PLATT COMPANY, WARREN C. PLATT, AND THE NATIONAL PETROLEUM PUBLISHING COMPANY.

On November 11, 1937, being one of the days of the regular term of the above Court, at a hearing of the above-entitled cause before the Honorable Patrick T. Stone, Judge of said Court, in the United States Court Room, in the City of Madison in said District, the following proceedings occurred:

Counsel for the Government made a motion that the indictment be dismissed against the defendant Tide Water Associated Oil Company, on the ground that the evidence shows that the activities charged by the Government were carried on by the Tide Water Oil Company, as to whom the indictment was previously dismissed because of the dissolution of that company; and that the evidence does not show that the Tide Water Associated Oil Company had been connected up with the activities charged in the indictment. Counsel for Tide Water Associated Oil Company objected to the motion on the ground that a criminal case could not be dismissed without the consent of the defendant, and said counsel urged that Government counsel be directed to proceed with the prosecution against Tide Water Associated Oil Company, or, in the alternative, that the jury be instructed to return a verdict of not guilty in favor of Tide Water Associated Oil Company at the close of the 69 Government's case. After consideration of said motion, the Court, on November 11, 1937, ordered that, there being no competent and substantial evidence in the record which would support a finding of guilty against Tide Water Associated Oil Company, the said motion to dismiss the indictment against Tide Water Associated Oil Company is granted, to which order the Court allowed an exception to the defendant Tide Water Associated Oil Company.

Counsel for the Government made a motion that the indictment be dismissed as to the defendant Deep Rock Oil Corporation, on the ground that the facts as shown to the Government indicate that the assets and affairs of that corporation were in the hands of certain trustees appointed by the Court during the period covered by the indictment and that the corporation could not be held legally liable on the charges in the indictment, and after consideration thereof, the Court, on November 11, 1937, made an order dismissing the indictment as to the defendant Deep Rock Oil Corporation.

Counsel for the Government made a motion that the indictment be dismissed as to the defendant Louisiana Oil Refining Corporation, on the ground that the facts in the possession of the Government indicate that the company's affairs were wound up after the period covered by the indictment, that the corporation is no longer in existence, and that the corporation cannot be held legally liable for the charges in the indictment, and after consideration thereof, the Court, on November 11, 1937, made an order dismissing the indictment as to the defendant Louisiana Oil Refining Corporation.

Counsel for the Government made a motion that the indictment be dismissed as to the defendant Cities Service Export Oil Company, on the ground that the facts indicate that the company was merged with certain other com-70 panies in June, 1936, prior to the date of the return of the indictment, and that that corporation cannot be held legally liable for the charges in the indictment, and after consideration thereof, the Court, on November 11, 1937, made an order dismissing the indictment as to Cities Service Export Oil Company.

Counsel for the Government made a motion that the indictment be dismissed as to the defendants The Journal of Commerce Publishing Company, W. C. Platt Company, The National Petroleum Publishing Company, and Warren C. Platt, on the ground that the Government has been unable to produce sufficient evidence to connect up these defendants with the conspiracy charged in the indictment. Counsel for said defendants objected to the motion on the ground that a criminal case could not be dismissed without consent of the defendant and said defendant's counsel urged that Government counsel be directed to proceed with the prosecution against said defendants, or, in the alternative, that the jury be instructed to return a verdict of not guilty in favor of the defendants at the close of the Government's case. After consideration of said motion, the Court, on November 11, 1937, made an order dismissing the indictment as to the defendants The Journal of Commerce Publishing Company, W. C. Platt Company, The National Petroleum Publishing Company, and Warren C. Platt, stating as reasons for said order that there was no competent and substantial evidence in the record which would support a finding of guilty against said defendants, to which order the Court allowed exceptions to said defendants.

ORDER OF DISMISSAL.

Filed November 12, 1937, H. C. Hale, Clerk.

This cause having come on for trial the 4th day of October, 1937, a jury having been duly selected, impanelled and sworn and evidence having been introduced herein by the United States through witnesses subpoenaed by it and duly sworn by this Court and the United States through its attorneys having stated in open court this 11th day of November, 1937, just before the conclusion of its case that from the evidence adduced no cause of violation of law as charged in the indictment herein has been proven against the defendants Warren C. Platt, W. C. Platt Company (also referred to in the indictment as Platt's Oilgram) and The National Petroleum Publishing Company (also referred to in the indictment as National Petroleum News) and the United States through its attorneys having this day moved the Court for an order dismissing said cause as to the said Warren C. Platt, W. C. Platt Company and The National Petroleum Publishing Company and each of them and said defendants by their attorneys having objected to the granting of said motion and having moved the Court either to issue an order directing the United States to proceed with the prosecution of these defendants under the indictment herein to the conclusion of its case or in the alternative to instruct the jury to return verdicts of not guilty in 72 favor of each of the defendants Warren C. Platt, W. C. Platt Company and The National Petroleum Publishing Company, the Court upon consideration thereof hereby overrules the said motion of said defendants and hereby grants the said motion of the United States and hereby dismisses the indictment herein as to each of said defendants and herewith discharges the said defendants and each of them who may go hence without delay.

The defendants and each of them in view of their objections may have their exceptions hereto.

MOTION FOR ARREST OF JUDGMENT.

Filed January 25, 1938, H. C. Hale, Clerk.

Come now the hereinafter named defendants by their respective attorneys and jointly and severally move that no judgment or sentence of this Court be imposed or entered against them, or any of them, and that each of them be discharged from further prosecution under the indictment, and as grounds for this motion to arrest the judgment say that:

1. The indictment fails to allege that the defendants entered into the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin or that the defendants, or any of them, or any other person performed or did any act pursuant to the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin.

2. The said indictment discloses on its face that the trial of the defendants thereunder in the Western District of Wisconsin has violated the right of the defendants under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States to a trial by an impartial jury of the state and district wherein the crime, if any, alleged in the indictment, was committed.

3. The record, taking into consideration the indictment and the order of the Court dismissing the former de-103 fendants, W. C. Platt, the National Petroleum News, Platt's Oilgram and the Chicago Journal of Commerce, fails to disclose that the defendants entered into the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin, or that the defendants or any of them, or any other person, performed or did any act pursuant to the alleged combination or conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin.

4. The record, taking into consideration the indictment and the order of the Court dismissing the former defendants, W. C. Platt, the National Petroleum News, Platt's Oilgram, and the Chicago Journal of Commerce, discloses on its face that the Trial of the defendants in the Western District of Wisconsin has violated their right under the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States to a trial by an impartial jury of the State and District wherein the crime, if any, alleged in the indictment was committed.

5. The said indictment fails to describe and particularize the alleged combination and conspiracy and the means agreed upon to accomplish the purposes thereof with sufficient definiteness and certainty and so specifically as to charge any offense against the United States and as to enable this Court from an inspection of the said indictment to ascertain whether, if carried into effect, the alleged means could cause a restraint of interstate commerce within the provisions of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (15 U. S. C. A., Section 1.)

6. The record, taking into consideration the indictment and the order of the Court dismissing the defendants, W. C. Platt, the National Petroleum News, Platt's Oilgram
104 and the Chicago Journal of Commerce fails to describe and particularize the alleged combination and conspiracy and to set forth means agreed upon to accomplish the purposes thereof with sufficient definiteness and certainty and so specifically as to charge any offense against the United States within the provisions of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (15 U. S. C. A., Section 1.)

7. The said indictment shows on its face that the conspiracy therein alleged did not and could not restrain interstate trade and commerce in gasoline within the meaning of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (15 U. S. C. A., Section 1.)

8. The record, taking into consideration the indictment and the order of the Court dismissing the defendants, W. C. Platt, the National Petroleum News, Platt's Oilgram and the Chicago Journal of Commerce, shows on its face that the conspiracy therein alleged did not and could not restrain interstate trade and commerce in gasoline within the meaning of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (15 U. S. C. A., Section 1.)

9. The said indictment fails to allege facts showing any violation by these defendants or by any of them of any law of the United States.

10. The said indictment is fatally duplicitous.

11. The said indictment is insufficient and defective for other reasons apparent upon its face.

105 Wherefore, the hereunder named defendants and each of them ask that this motion be granted and that judgment on the verdict be arrested.

ORDER ON MOTIONS AFTER VERDICT.

Filed July 19, 1938, H. C. Hale, Clerk.

Realizing the importance to the Government and the defendants of a correct decision of the questions raised on the motions after verdict, and being conscious of the responsibility necessarily cast upon the Court, I have made a careful and thoughtful re-study of the evidence as it applies to each defendant, separately and jointly. I have considered in detail the contentions of all the defendants as advanced in the motions after verdict, and have studied the many able briefs submitted on behalf of the Government and the defendants. This record runs to more than 12,000 pages, in addition to over 1,000 exhibits.

The convincing force of much of the testimony relates in widely varying degrees to different defendants. It shows that the defendants were in varying situations in relation to the acts complained of by the Government.

The trial lasted nearly four months, during all of which time the jury was kept sequestered and in the custody of the marshal. At the close of the trial there were pre-108 sented motions in behalf of each defendant, requiring, for intelligent disposal, a complete knowledge of this monumental record as it applied to each defendant. I felt then, that to have kept the jurors sequestered while each of these motions received full and careful consideration, would have been unjust and unfair to them.

The charge against the defendants lay in a field of economic controversy. Violations of the anti-trust laws are different from crimes which are mala in se. The Department of Justice has, in each case where it believes a violation has occurred, the choice of a civil or criminal proceeding. It recognizes that the rule of reason, long considered essential in administering the Sherman Anti-trust Act, makes sharply defined standards impossible.

In view of these circumstances, I concluded to let the case go to the jury as to all defendants, and after verdict to exercise, if necessary, the discretion of the Court to prevent any miscarriage of justice.

The indictment charged a conspiracy involving many persons, not all indicted. The acts proved were often known to but a few of the defendants. Many of the acts were innocent enough on their face, so that a defendant knowing only what appeared on the surface, might easily have drawn no inference of violation of law from the mere knowledge of the facts shown. The whole activity of a large part of a great industry in a large section of the country was involved. Legal purchases of gasoline in the ordinary course of dealing and running into millions of dollars were being made, along with the purchases in a much smaller volume that the Government has charged the defendants with having illegally made in the furtherance of the conspiracy. Letters, telegrams, telephone 109 conversations and intra-company memoranda were shown having strong probative force as to some defendants, yet the contents thereof are wholly unknown to others. Large corporations with national distribution of gasoline were committed to a course or policy by agents or officials in charge of one department, where it is not at all clear that the responsible executive in charge of the entire company ever had any knowledge that a small portion of purchases here complained of had been made as a result of this conspiracy. Circumstantial evidence was adduced which applied with great force as to some defendants, yet had no probative force as to others.

As to a defendant shown by direct and positive evidence to have been a party to the conspiracy, or where as to a defendant the circumstantial evidence, properly applied, meets the required degree of proof, it is of course proper to view the record as a composite whole. To apply that rule in cases where there was otherwise no proof or, at most, very slight proof, would be a complete reversal of the American idea of justice. All of the evidence must also be viewed in the light of special circumstances claimed to apply in individual cases.

That the jury was in a position to make the complete and critical study of the proof as it applied to each defendant separately is at least doubtful. It has taken the court a considerable time to do it with the aid of the record and briefs. The jury, acting in an effort to do justice, did get the larger view of the case, and is to be commended for its handling of a most difficult problem.

While I am satisfied that as to some of the defendants, as hereinafter pointed out, the verdict must stand, I am 110 equally satisfied that as to the defendants, Dan Moran, Henry M. Dawes, Edward G. Seubert, Allan Jackson, Bryan S. Reid, Frank Phillips, W. G. Skelly, Jacob France, Charles L. Jones, A. V. Bourque and The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Kansas), there is no substantial evidence in the record fairly tending to sustain the verdicts of the jury, and as to these defendants the verdicts will be set aside and the indictment dismissed.

It Is So Ordered And Adjudged.

I am also satisfied that in the light of the proof as a whole, but applied individually in the light of special circumstances shown as to them, which it would be fruitless to review here but which appear in the various motions and briefs, there is good reason to believe that certain defendants have not had an adequate separate consideration of their defense, in view of the fact that as to some of them direct evidence of participation was lacking or slight, and the circumstantial evidence viewed as a whole may well have obscured other facts and other circumstances shown, in some cases, to be highly suggestive of innocence, and in all cases entitled to be considered and weighed. Once the jury arrived at the conclusion that a conspiracy to fix prices had been in operation, defendants as to whom only circumstantial evidence had been offered were naturally at a serious disadvantage in being charged and tried along with large corporations and other individuals definitely shown to have engaged in the conspiracy. Men who were employed by large corporations may well have had harmful inferences drawn from the fact that their employers, the corporations, participated in the conspiracy.

For these reasons and for many particular reasons set out in the motions and briefs, the verdicts will be set aside and a new trial granted to these defendants, and it is, 111 therefore,

Ordered And Adjudged that the verdicts as to defendants, Edward J. Bullock, A. G. Maguire, Harry D. Frueauff, H. E. Brandli, O. J. Tuttle, Harry J. Kennedy, C. B. Watson, J. W. Carnes, Edward L. Shea, Noel Robinson, J. W. Warner, E. B. Reeser, I. A. O'Shaughnessy, A. M. Hughes, Alexander Fraser, Cities Service Company, Barnsdall Refining Corporation, and Standard Oil Company (Indiana), be set aside, and said defendants are hereby granted a new trial.

Coming now to the remaining defendants tried and not heretofore disposed of, the indictment charges in general substance that the defendant major oil companies, acting through the defendant officers and others not indicted, formulated and carried into effect an unlawful conspiracy to fix prices of gasoline during a period from about March 1, 1935 to about August 1, 1936. The indictment sets out precisely the means by which the conspiracy was carried into effect, namely, two substantially simultaneous buying programs or pools, one in the so-called Mid-Continent field, and the other in the so-called East Texas field. The charge is that in each instance, for the purpose of artificially raising and fixing the price of gasoline at artificially high and non-competitive levels in the so-called spot tank car market and in the wholesale and retail market in the Standard of Indiana territory, the major oil companies conspired to and did, by concerted action and allotment, buy gasoline in large quantities from time to time, in the Mid-Continent area in that spot market and in the East Texas field through the East Texas Refiners' Association in that spot market, which gasoline was not required to meet the needs of 112 the respective major companies at the time, and that this was done for the sole purpose of bringing about an arbitrary and controlled rise in prices of gasoline.

The indictment further charges as a means of the execution thereof that the defendants conspired and designed through such buying to cause the higher and arbitrary and above-market prices at which they were buying to be reported to and printed in the market quotations of the Chicago Journal of Commerce, and in Platt's Oilgram, as though they were bona fide sales of gasoline by independent refiners in these two fields to their independent jobbers and consumer trade, concealing from the rest of the industry and the public the fact that such sales were being made of distress gasoline to major companies who were buying solely for the purpose of bringing about a rise in price. The indictment charges that the conspiracy was carried out by concerted action of the defendants, and that as a result, during the period involved, the defendants did bring about an arbitrary high and artificial price in the said spot market, and that these prices were in fact published as spot market prices, and that as a result the defendant major oil companies received, as they had planned in formulating the conspiracy, arbitrary and unfair prices and profits from the sale of their own products which constituted a very high percentage of the total distribution to jobbers and consumers in the so-called Standard of Indiana territory. It further charges that the conspiracy as thus formulated and executed enabled these major companies, through the concerted purchase of a very small percentage of the total available gasoline for distribution in the Standard of Indiana territory, to raise the price to controlled levels and thereby unreasonably and unlawfully to profit on the sale of their own products.

113 The defendants contend that at and immediately prior to the commencement of the concerted program in the Mid-Continent field, the industry was suffering from serious abuses and bad trade practices which it was not only lawful for the defendants to correct by concerted action, but that such correction was imperative if conditions of free and healthy competition in the industry were to be preserved at all; that the spot tank car price from November 1934 and through February of 1935, and immediately prior to the commencement of the buying program in the Mid-Continent field, was ruinously low; that had not prompt and immediate steps been taken to alleviate this condition, the independent refiners would have been bankrupt very shortly, and the industry deprived of any independent competition in that field; that even the majors were sustaining tremendous losses as a result of the ruinous price. That another cause of the disastrous situation of the industry at the time was the production of unlawful crude and of gasoline unlawfully manufactured therefrom, called in the industry "hot oil", and that this had been a heavily contributing factor in bringing about, over a long period of time, an over supply of crude and thus of gasoline. That the independent refiners were almost without exception poorly capitalized, had not the means with which to supply or acquire storage facilities which would enable them to hold their manufactured product more than a very brief period of time, and that they were thus not in a position to hold their product awaiting seasonable demand or better markets, but on the contrary were under the necessity of making a substantially immediate disposition of all of their products, over and above their current market sales to regular customers, at whatever price they could obtain, and this was usually well below the market price. That the independent refiners could not cut down their supply of crude, being obligated to take the entire output of their 114 various sources of crude or lose those sources entirely.

That buyers among independent jobbers, distributors and the major companies were taking full advantage of this situation, and that this excess gasoline over and above what the independents could sell to their regular trade, and which was called in the trade "distress gasoline", heavily overhung the market, depressed it well below the cost of production, and constituted a serious unfair trade practice and condition which the defendants were fully justified in seeking to remove by concerted action. That concerted action in that behalf was not only lawful, but in the public interest, and calculated to restore and preserve a healthy competition among independent refiners with the major companies, and to bring about for the industry only a fair, reasonable and normal profit upon its manufacturing processes; and that it was entirely legitimate for the major companies to seek the incidental benefit to themselves therefrom resulting. That this situation as to distress gasoline had been the subject and object of Government investigation and efforts for its removal over a considerable period of time prior to the commencement of the buying program in the Mid-Continent field; that their objective in this program was to bring about only such a rise in the spot tank car price as would bring the price of gasoline onto a parity basis with its raw material, crude, and thus enable the industry to recover the cost of manufacture and a normal, healthy profit; that the Government itself had fixed a fair parity ratio between gasoline and crude at 18½ to 1, and that the price of crude was "pegged" by the Government at $1 per barrel, and that the price of gasoline in the spot tank car market in the period in question never at any time exceeded the parity basis. That the attainment of a parity basis between gasoline and crude had been and was a 115 Governmental objective over some considerable period of time prior to the inception of the buying program in the Mid-Continent field. That the concerted action in the Mid-Continent field was taken under the authority of the code for the petroleum industry set up under the National Industrial Recovery Act, and that when the latter had ceased to be in effect, the program was continued with the knowledge of responsible officers of the Government in authority in connection with the petroleum industry. That while there undoubtedly was a buying program in the Mid-Continent field, this did not go at any time beyond a purely voluntary program under which no major company made any commitment to buy at all, no commitment to buy any particular quantity, and no commitment to pay any particular price. That the program consisted of assembling accurate and dependable information as to the location of and amounts of distress gasoline in the hands of independent refiners from time to time, and imparting this knowledge to the major companies who were commited to the general program of removing this gasoline at fair but not higher than market prices. That at all times each of the major companies bought in the light of this information, considering a price which had been recommended but was not at all binding, and that each company, in making purchases, dealt directly with the independent refiner, and made its own bargain and price, and was free at any time to buy or not to buy, as it saw fit, and that there was never any commitment or promise involved in the program. That the arrangement by which each major company operating in the Mid-Continent field is claimed to have assumed responsibility for absorbing or buying the surplus or 116 distress gasoline of one or more independent refiners, called in the program "dancing partner", was one for convenience only, and was a reasonable and fair method of providing for the orderly marketing of distress gasoline. That had not this been done, the buying would have been haphazard, with some independent refiners not disposing of their surplus and others having greater demands than they could meet. That in the Mid-Continent field another evil practice which they sought to remove was that certain independent refiners were better known than others, and could dispose of their product more readily, with the result that they were running more than their fair share of gasoline, while certain other independents, less known, had difficulty in disposing of a fair amount of gasoline, and that the bringing together of a major with its "dancing partner" or partners, was calculated to even up and equalize that situation, and was one which was calculated for the good of the industry, but was not for the benefit of the major companies in particular. That the published prices of sales in the trade journals were actual sales of independent refiners to their independent jobber or consumer customers arrived at in a free and competitive market, and that on no occasion was the sale of gasoline to a major company published as the spot tank car market price. That the major companies did not, in fact, buy gasoline in excess of their legitimate needs and requirements. That taking into consideration their current demand, impending seasonal demands, expected improvement in general economic conditions, and the impending enforcement of the Connally Act, their buying was no more than reasonable, prudent buying for such needs and reasonable inventories. That there was never any buying program or concerted arrangement of any kind in the East Texas field so far as the 117 major oil companies were concerned. That the independent refiners themselves organized a central selling agency to market their distress gasoline. That the independent refiners in East Texas had brought about much of their difficulty and distress by reason of their purchase of unlawfully produced crude, and the manufacturing of the same into unlawful gasoline, or, in other words, they were dealing in "hot oil", and further that this group of refiners had not been found dependable by the industry in respect to the quality or uniformity of their product; that the association was formed by these independent refiners for the purpose of bringing about a condition in which these refiners could make it known to the industry that they had desisted from these bad practices and had become a dependable group with whom majors could safely deal, and that it was an effort to overcome resistance on the part of the majors against buying from this group of refiners which caused the association to be formed. That the entire East Texas program consisted of an effort by the East Texas Association to induce major companies to buy distress gasoline of the members of the association through the association, and that the majors never entered into any concert or agreement of any kind or undertaking with reference thereto, and that the sales of gasoline made through the association consist of two groups:

(a) Purchases by majors who had always bought in East Texas but who had no part in any concerted action or program;

(b) Purchases by majors who may or may not have been purchasing in East Texas regularly, but independent purchases made as a result of the direct solicitation by the East Texas Marketing Association; and that in each case every sale was an independent, isolated transaction involving no concert or agreement with major companies. That such buying as was done by major companies in East Texas was in the light of actual re-118 quirements, and that the evidence as to amounts of purchases by various companies and time of purchase discloses that there could have been no allocation or arrangement between the majors. That through the period only a few purchases of a very small percentage of the total were made at above the low price of the spot tank car market; that a much higher percentage was purchased at the low of that market; and that a majority of the purchases in amount was at from ¼ to ½ cent under the low of the spot tank car market; that these activities were not calculated or intended to and did not bring about an unreasonable price; that the circumstance that the price leveled off from June 1935 through December 1935 was a natural and frequently recurring condition in the industry under healthy, normal competitive conditions; that the price rise of one-half cent in January 1936 resulted naturally from a corresponding rise in the price of crude at that time, and was not the result of concerted action on the part of the defendants. That the program in the Mid-Continent field was conducted openly, publicly and with full knowledge of all the trade, independent and major companies alike, and with the knowledge of responsible Government officials. That at no time was the open and free competition in the spot tank car market destroyed or impaired; that the spot market was at all times a free, open, and fully competitive market; that if the buying program had a psychological effect upon the independent refiners tending to make them more firm in their demands for price, such effect was not sufficient to make them unreasonable for the reason that the program never went more than from week to week, and that there was never any commitment or assurance that it would last beyond the current week. That in spite of the fact that the major companies distribute something in excess of 75% of the gasoline in the Standard of Indiana territory, there never has been a time and 119 there was not a time during the continuance of this program when the major companies were in fact able to control the market, and that even if a group of major companies raise the price, unless the independents follow, the efforts of the majors are fruitless, and they are compelled to restore the former price, and that as a matter of fact they did not among them have the power to control the market. That upon the record there was no substantial evidence to go to the jury as to whether or not the efforts of the defendants were effectual in controlling the price of gasoline as charged in the indictment, or to what extent, if any, the rise in the market price resulted from such activities, as distinguished from other factors then operating, such as enforcement of restrictions on shipments of illegally produced crude under the Connally Act, the natural economic recovery, and the seasonal recovery; and that these latter factors were largely, if not entirely, responsible for the rise in price which took place; that there was no evidence in the record that the portion of the rise in price which could be attributed to the activities of the defendants was unreasonable or unreasonably attained. That the price achieved in the buying movement conceded to have existed in the Mid-Continent field, and the result achieved in East Texas, whether with or without concert, was only a price which was on a parity with the price of crude. That the price was entirely reasonable, and that it is, under the doctrine of the Appalachian Coals, Inc. case 288 U. S. 344, no violation of the Sherman Anti-trust law for individuals or corporations engaged in an industry to get together on a reasonable program calculated to eliminate certain abuses that have grown up in that industry, and that they have not in this case exceeded the limits of what was held in that case to be lawful.

120 The foregoing are most of the contentions of the defendants, some of which are supported by the evidence.

The theory upon which the Government tried this case is grounded upon the Trenton Potteries case, 273 U. S. 392. The Government admits that while there were abuses involved in the nature of bad practices, nevertheless the motivating purpose of the defendants was not the alleviation of this condition, but the arbitrary raising and fixing of prices. It contends that the price attained and the progressive rises in price between March and June, 1935, were in effect "rigged" or controlled prices brought about by the defendant major companies for their own benefit and profit. It concedes that unlawful or "hot" oil had been a factor in bringing about unfair prices, but contends that the passage of the Connally Act and the enforcement of its provisions would naturally have brought about a normal and healthy price level without the intervention of the defendants, and that the defendants knew that circumstance, but nevertheless went ahead bringing about progressive rises in price which they were able to predict to a fraction of a cent each time, showing that the market was actually a controlled market. That the arrangement by which prices were suggested and the various major companies were assigned one or more independent refiners called "dancing partners" amounted to even more than a conspiracy among major buyers and, in fact, included independent sellers, and this for the very purpose of making certain that the market would be under control. That while the buying program in the Mid-Continent field originated at a time when the Petroleum Code was still in effect, that it nevertheless went beyond the authority given by Governmental officers for the alleviation of the conditions of distress gasoline, and 121 then when the code ceased to be in effect, the defendants continued the program, well knowing that it then had no color of legality. That while there is testimony tending to show that the action was voluntary, and that while no commitments were made and nobody was obligated to buy or to pay any particular price, the course of conduct of the defendants in the buying indicates the contrary, and that they did in fact absorb this surplus gasoline pursuant to a concerted arrangement. That the fact that the allocation between the defendants bore no relation to their production or distribution or to the apparent equities of the situation, was another part of the scheme to camouflage the operation and make it appear to be one without concert, but that the references to East Texas movement in the testimony and documentary evidence are adequate and competent to show that it was in fact an action concerted between the defendants. That the leveling off of prices from June 1935 to December 1935 is evidence of the circumstance that the defendants had the market price under control, and that the price rise of one-half cent in January 1936 was purely arbitrary, against seasonal demand, at a time when public buying was at a low ebb, inventories entirely adequate, and that the advance in the price of crude was manipulated and controlled by the defendants. That while the purchases of the defendants were for the most part at the low or slightly under the low of the market, the fact is that the independent refiners could rely upon this buying program for their distress gasoline, which put them in a position to demand higher prices with confidence, and that while the major buying appeared to follow rather than lead the market, in the fact it was the stimulating and activating cause of the repeated rises in market price between March 1935 and June 1935, and of the further rise in January of 1936.

122 The Government contends that there is ample proof in the record that the buying programs were the activating and efficient cause of the price rises, that the market was under the control of the defendants, that the repeated rises did, in fact, result from the activities of the defendants in the two buying programs, as charged in the indictment.

The evidence was, in general, in conflict. It does appear without dispute that a concerted buying movement took place in the Mid-Continent field. Its character was in dispute. If the program was aimed at price fixing as such, it is sufficient that it was artificial and controlled. I am satisfied that there was ample evidence to take the case to the jury on these issues as well as on the issue of whether or not there was a concerted program in East Texas, and as to its character. While that program took an outward form and appearance of a seller's program, there were facts and circumstances substantiating the claim of the Government that it was in fact a program devised and maintained by the defendants, which the jury had a right to believe.

There were proofs sufficient to sustain the verdict as to the allegations in the indictment that the defendants were able to and did effectually tie the jobber's price in the Standard of Indiana territory, which includes the Western District of Wisconsin, to the tank car price in the spot market, and so to the artificial price the jury found the defendants brought about.

It is claimed by the defendants that they did not have the power to control the price as charged, and that inasmuch as some of the large companies did not or have not been shown to have participated in the movement, the 123 power of the defendants in that respect was inadequate for the purpose. This does not follow, for the reason that large buyers both in East Texas and in the Mid-Continent fields, while acting separately, were nevertheless buying for their requirements in these fields, as they had always done and as defendants had every reason to believe they would continue to do. The defendants were thus able to consider that these buyings would necessarily reduce the available gasoline which they proposed to take off the market just as effectively as though these other companies had joined in the program. The amount of distress gasoline would be exactly the same in any event, and the proof shows that the surplus was in fact a very small part of the total, so much so that most of the defendants have shown that its acquisition in addition to other buying did not materially increase their inventories. I am satisfied that there was ample evidence to sustain the contention of the Government that the defendants did have the power to control the market, and that they did so, as charged.

There was, in my view, evidence to go to the jury and to sustain its verdict as to every essential charge in the indictment as to the defendants, Charles E. Arnott, P. E. Lakin, H. T. Ashton, Robert W. McDowell, R. H. McElroy, Jr., Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc., Wadhams Oil Company, Empire Oil and Refining Company (Now Cities Service Company), Continental Oil Company, The Pure Oil Company, Shell Petroleum Corporation, Sinclair Refining Company, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, Phillips Petroleum Company, Skelly Oil Company, The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Illinois), and The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Oklahoma). The jury's verdicts as to these defendants will be sustained, and

It Is Ordered And Adjudged that the motions of 124 said defendants for an order setting aside the verdicts and for a new trial be and they are hereby denied, to all of which the said defendants may each have an exception.

135 Grounds of Appeal:

1. The Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States guarantees to a defendant in a criminal case a trial by an impartial jury in the state and district wherein the crime, if any, alleged in the indictment was committed. This indictment charges a combination and conspiracy in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. There is no allegation that the combination and conspiracy was entered into within the Western District of Wisconsin. The indictment does not show the commission of any overt act within that District. The Court, therefore, erred in overruling the several demurrers to the indictment, the several motions to quash the indictment, and the several motions in arrest of judgment, all filed by appellants and which raised the question whether venue was properly laid within the Western District of Wisconsin.

2. The Court erred in charging the jury, in substance, that sales of gasoline by defendants to jobbers and consumers in the Western District of Wisconsin, during the period covered by the indictment and at prices affected by the defendants in the manner charged in the indictment, would constitute overt acts done in that District, by such defendants, or their agents, to carry out in part or to further the carrying out of the alleged conspiracy.

3. The Court erred in permitting Government counsel on numerous occasions in examining certain important witnesses to use unauthenticated alleged transcripts of the witnesses' grand jury testimony and notes made therefrom by Government counsel to impeach the testimony or refresh the recollection of those witnesses, without showing that such transcripts were read over or examined by the witnesses at the time such testimony was reduced to writ-136 ing, and which said testimony was not given contemporaneously with the facts or occurrences as to which the witnesses were asked to testify before said grand jury, but at a date remote from the date of such facts and occurrences and from the date of trial; in refusing to permit the witnesses or counsel for the appellants at any time to inspect the said grand jury testimony; in reading from said grand jury transcript and permitting counsel for the Government to read from said grand jury transcript in the presence of the jury; and in repeatedly exhibiting and permitting Government counsel repeatedly to exhibit said transcript to the jury.

4. The appellants were deprived of a fair trial because of conduct of counsel for the Government.

(a) In improper questioning of witnesses;

(b) In making improper remarks in the presence of the jury concerning witnesses and their testimony;

(c) In making, during the course of the trial and in the presence of the jury, improper remarks which were not supported by the evidence in the record;

(d) In making improper, inflammatory, abusive and unsupported statements and appeals to prejudice in the course of argument to the jury; and

(e) In stating to the jury that certain matters as to which there was no evidence in the record were true within the personal knowledge of counsel for the Government.

(f) In raising certain issues in the closing arguments to the jury, which issues were not raised by the indictment, but which in fact were materially and prejudicially contrary to the allegations in the indictment.

5. The appellants were deprived of a fair trial because this case was tried and submitted to the jury under a fundamental misinterpretation and misapplication of the provisions of Section 1 of the Act of July 2nd, 1890, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, in that in ruling on evidence throughout the trial and in charging the jury the Court held, in substance, that the activities of a group having the power to affect or control the price of gasoline were not to be judged by the "rule of reason" under the Sherman Act.

137 6. The Court erred in submitting to the jury for its consideration in connection with the guilt or innocence of the appellants issues not raised by the indictment, but, on the contrary, materially and prejudicially at variance with the charges of such indictment, thereby preventing the appellants from receiving a fair trial.

7. The Court ruled that acts of the Secretary of the Interior and of his subordinate officials, operating under the National Industrial Recovery Act and the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, and brought to the attention of the appellants were immaterial in determining whether or not the appellants had entered into the conspiracy alleged in the indictment, and the Court erred in the exclusion of evidence showing these acts and the reliance of the appellants thereon.

8. The Court erred in instructing the jury, in substance, that there was no evidence shown of governmental approval or acquiescence of the conduct of the appellants.

9. The Court erred in refusing to allow the defendants to show the economic history of the events which led up to the conduct of the defendants shown in the evidence, and in refusing to allow the defendants to show the course of prices of gasoline during years previous to 1935 and the efforts of the administrative officers of the Government to raise prices during those years and the failure of those efforts.

10. The Court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that there was no unreasonable restraint of trade involved in the efforts on the part of the defendants to comply with the announced purposes and the known activities of the administrative officers of the United States.

11. The Court erred in failing to instruct the jury
138 properly and fully, in substance, that it was necessary to find from all the evidence in the case that the defendants entered into some agreement, express or implied, which constituted the alleged conspiracy and which, if carried out, would have been capable of accomplishing their alleged illegal purpose.

12. The Court erred in giving certain charges and in refusing to give certain other charges, which charges and refusals to charge had the effect of permitting or compelling the jury to disregard the question of whether the restraint of interstate trade and commerce, if any, imposed by the acts of the appellants was reasonable or unreasonable.

13. The Court erred in charging the jury, in substance, that the allegations in the indictment relative to fixing prices through the medium of false reports of prices sent to and inserted in the trade journals were immaterial and nonessential allegations, the failure to prove which the jury might disregard.

14. The Court erred in charging the jury, in substance, that the allegations in the indictment to the effect that the defendants purchased gasoline from the independent refiners at uniform, high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices and from time to time at progressively increased prices, as agreed upon by the defendant major oil companies, were immaterial and unessential allegations, the failure to prove which the jury might disregard.

15. The Court erred in charging the jury, in substance, that under Section 1 of the Sherman Act any combination or conspiracy having the purpose and intent to raise prices to any extent and by any means whatsoever is illegal.

16. The Court erred in charging the jury, in substance, that under Section 1 of the Sherman Act any con-139 certed action to raise prices to any extent and by any means whatsoever by persons having a power to raise prices is illegal.

17. The Court erred in charging the jury, in substance that if a conspiracy was proved, they could consider the statements of the co-conspirators against all of the defendants, regardless of whether or not such defendants had been proved to be participants in the conspiracy.

18. The Court erred in improperly restricting the scope of counsel's opening statement to the jury on behalf of appellant.

19. The Court erred in admitting incompetent and prejudicial evidence, both oral and documentary, over the objection of counsel for appellants.

20. The Court erred in permitting the Government unlawfully to impound appellants' documents and papers and in permitting the Government to use documents unlawfully taken from the appellants and impounded.

21. The Court erred in denying several motions for a directed verdict at the close of the Government's case by those appellants who rested their cases at such time.

22. The Court erred in denying appellants' several motions to strike exhibits and testimony, originally admitted over objections, or in the alternative to limit their use, which motions were submitted at the close of the Government's case.

23. The Court erred in denying appellants' several motions to strike exhibits and testimony, originally admitted over objections, or in the alternative to limit their use, which motions were submitted at the close of all the evidence in the case.

140 24. The Court erred in denying appellants' several motions for a directed verdict which were submitted at the close of all the evidence in the case.

25. The Court erred in denying appellants' several motions for a new trial.

26. The Court erred in denying appellants' several motions that the verdict be set aside and the indictment dismissed.

27. The Court erred (a) in not admitting certain material relevant and competent exhibits and testimony offered by the appellants; (b) in refusing to give to the jury each of the appellants' requested instructions limiting the admission, the consideration and the use of evidence offered by the Government; (c) in refusing to give to the jury each of appellants' requested instructions which were not incorporated in the charge of the Court to the jury; and (d) in charging the jury erroneously in other respects and in committing other prejudicial errors not specifically mentioned in the foregoing grounds of appeal.

28. All of the grounds of appeal above-mentioned will be amplified and made more specific, and other errors particularly relied upon will be added as grounds for the appeal in the assignments of errors which will be duly filed.

Having been duly notified by the clerk of this court that a notice of appeals, in duplicate, in the above entitled case has been filed with him by the appellants named therein, and a copy of such notice of appeals having been served on the United States Attorney, and having directed counsel for the appellants and the United States Attorney and the Special Assistant to the Attorney General to appear before me at the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Wisconsin, at Madison, Wisconsin, this 20th day of July, 1938;

It Is Ordered as follows:

1. That the appellants are granted one hundred twenty (120) days from the date said notice of appeals was filed within which to settle and file the bill of exceptions in connection with the appeal of the above entitled case to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

2. That counsel for the appellants and counsel for the appellee are to confer with each other for the purpose of agreeing upon the bill of exceptions, and in 145 the event such agreement cannot be reached within ninety (90) days, they are to appear before me at Madison, Wisconsin, with the proposed bill of exceptions and any proposed amendments thereto for the purpose of receiving further directions.

3. That the appellants may file severally a single assignment of errors, and such assignment of errors need not be filed until the filing of the bill of exceptions.

4. That the several appeals be presented to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit upon one transcript of the record.

5. That the appellants shall not be required to file a praecipe of transcript with the clerk of this court and to serve a copy thereof on the United States Attorney until thirty (30) days after the date of filing the notice of appeals, and the United States Attorney shall file his praecipe with the clerk within ten (10) days thereafter.

6. That the term of court for the above entitled case is extended until the date of filing the bill of exceptions, and the assignment of errors, with the clerk of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

7. That the appellants shall file a joint appeal bond in the amount of $25,000.00 with the clerk of this court within ten (10) days.

DEFENDANTS-APPELLANTS ASSIGNMENTS OF ERRORS.

(Stamp) Document Number 847 U. S. District Court West. Dist. of Wisconsin Filed Dec 9 1938 M. Herbert C. Hale, Clerk Case Number 11365 CM.

Now come the Appellants, Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc., Wadhams Oil Company, Empire Oil and Refining Company, Continental Oil Company, The Pure Oil Company, Shell Petroleum Corporation, Sinclair Refining Company, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, Phillips Petroleum Company, Skelly Oil Company, The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Illinois), The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Oklahoma), Charles E. Arnott, P. E. Lakin, H. T. Ashton, R. W. McDowell, and R. H. McElroy, Jr., and severally file the following Assignments of Errors upon which each of them will rely on this appeal.

6237 Assignment No. 1.

The Court erred in denying the motion for a directed verdict made by appellant H. T. Ashton at the close of all the evidence. (R. pp. 1923; 2488; 2432; 2449-50; 2456).

Assignment No. 2.

The Court erred in denying the motion for a directed verdict made by appellant Charles E. Arnott at the close of all the evidence. (R. pp. 1922; 2488; 2432; 2449-50; 2456).

Assignment No. 3.

The Court erred in denying the motion for a directed verdict made by appellant Empire Oil and Refining Company at the close of all the evidence. (R. pp. 1932; 2488; 2432; 2449-50; 2456).

Assignment No. 4.

The Court erred in denying the motion for a directed verdict made by appellant P. E. Lakin at the close of all the evidence. (R. pp. 1971; 2488; 2432; 2449-50; 2456).

Assignment No. 5.

The Court erred in denying the motion for a directed verdict made by appellant Robert W. McDowell at the close of all the evidence. (R. pp. 2003; 2488; 2432; 2449-50; 2456).

Assignment No. 6.

The Court erred in denying the motion for a directed verdict made by appellant Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation at the close of all the evidence. (R. pp. 1991; 2488; 2432; 2449-50; 2456).

Assignment No. 7.

The Court erred in denying the motion for a directed verdict made by appellant Phillips Petroleum Company at the close of all the evidence. (R. pp. 2014; 2488; 2432; 2449-50; 2456).

Assignment No. 8.

The Court erred in denying the motion for a directed verdict made by appellant Skelly Oil Company at the close of all the evidence. (R. pp. 2021; 2488; 2432; 2449-50; 2456).

Assignment No. 9.

The Court erred in denying the motion for a directed verdict made by appellant Sinclair Refining Company at the close of all the evidence. (R. pp. 1981; 2488; 2432; 2449-50; 2456).

6239

Assignment No. 10.

The Court erred in denying the motion for a directed verdict made by appellant Shell Petroleum Corporation at the close of all the evidence. (R. pp. 1963; 2488; 2432; 2449-50; 2456).

Assignment No. 11.

The Court erred in denying the motion for a directed verdict made by appellant Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc. at the close of all the evidence. (R. pp. 1914; 2488; 2432; 2449-50; 2456).

Assignment No. 12.

The Court erred in denying the motions for directed verdicts made by appellants The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Oklahoma) and The Globe Oil and Refining Company (Illinois) at the close of all the evidence. (R. pp. 2031; 2488; 2432; 2449-50; 2456).

Assignment No. 13.

The Court erred in denying the motion for a directed verdict made by appellant Wadhams Oil Company at the close of all the evidence. (R. pp. 1924; 2488; 2432; 2449-50; 2456).

6240

Assignment No. 14.

The Court erred in denying the motion for a directed verdict made by appellant Continental Oil Company at the close of all the evidence. (R. pp. 1940; 2488; 2432; 2449-50; 2456).

Assignment No. 15.

The Court erred in denying the motion for a directed verdict made by appellant R. H. McElroy, Jr., at the close of all the evidence. (R. pp. 1959; 2488; 2432; 2449-50; 2456).

Assignment No. 16.

The Court erred in denying the motion for a directed verdict made by appellant The Pure Oil Company at the close of all the evidence. (R. pp. 1952; 2488; 2432; 2449-50; 2456).

6241

Assignment No. 17.

The Court erred in overruling (R. pp. 23; 50) the Special Appearance and Plea of Appellant Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation to the Court's Jurisdiction and Venue.

The grounds of said Plea were as follows:

That this Court is without jurisdiction or venue to hear and determine the above entitled cause for the reason that the indictment herein fails to show that the alleged crime charged or attempted to be charged therein was committed in the Western District of Wisconsin, or in the State of Wisconsin; but, on the contrary, said indictment affirmatively shows that, if said alleged offense were committed, the same was committed not in, but outside, the Western District of Wisconsin and the State of Wisconsin. That by reason thereof said defendant, Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, is and was not indictable and cannot legally or constitutionally be tried in the Western District of Wisconsin, or in the State of Wisconsin, for the alleged crime charged or attempted to be charged in said indictment. And that said indictment, the summons issued for this defendant on December 23, 1936, and the service of said summons made upon this defendant in the State of Oklahoma on December 29, 1936, pursuant to said indictment are and were null and void, and should be quashed, vacated, set aside and held for naught, for the reason that this Court does not have, by virtue of said indictment, and of said summons and service thereof, any jurisdiction or venue over either the person of said defendant or of the alleged crime charged or attempted to be charged in said indictment. (R. pp. 21-22).

Assignment No. 18.

The Court erred in overruling (R. pp. 24; 51) the Special Appearance and Plea of appellant Robert W. McDowell to Court's Jurisdiction and Venue. The grounds of said Plea were as follows:

That this Court is without jurisdiction or venue to hear and determine the above entitled cause for the reason that the indictment herein fails to show that the alleged crime charged or attempted to be charged therein was committed in the Western District of Wisconsin, or in the State of Wisconsin; but, on the contrary, said indictment affirmatively shows that, if said alleged offense were committed, the same was committed not in, but outside, the Western District of Wisconsin and the State of Wisconsin. That by reason thereof said defendant, Robert W. McDowell, is and was not indictable and cannot legally or constitutionally be tried in the Western District of Wisconsin, or in the State of Wisconsin, for the alleged crime charged or attempted to be charged in said indictment. And that said indictment, the summons issued for this defendant on December 23, 1936, and the service of said summons made upon this defendant in the State of Oklahoma on December 29, 1936, pursuant to said indictment are and were null and void, and should be quashed, vacated, set aside and held for naught, for the reason that this Court does not have, by virtue of said indictment, and of said summons and service thereof, any jurisdiction or venue over either the person of said defendant or of the alleged crime charged or attempted to be charged in said indictment. (R. pp. 22-23).

6243 Assignment No. 19.

The Court erred in overruling (R. pp. 37-39, 53) the several demurrers to the indictment filed by the appellants. Among other grounds recited in said demurrers (R. pp. 25-37) to the indictment are the following:

1—The said indictment fails to allege that the defendants entered into the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin, or that the defendants, or any of them, performed or did any act pursuant to the alleged combination and conspiracy within the Western District of Wisconsin.

2—The said indictment discloses on its face that a trial of the defendants thereunder in the Western District of Wisconsin would violate the right of the defendants under the Sixth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States to a trial by an impartial jury of the State and District wherein the crime, if any, alleged in the indictment was committed.

6244 Assignment No. 20.

The Court erred in denying the appellants' several motions in arrest of judgment.

Assignment No. 21.

The Court erred and abused its discretion, in view of the following circumstances, in denying (R. pp. 2488-2500) the several motions of appellants for a new trial. (R. pp. 2435-2440):

1. The instructions of the Court required the jury, in determining guilt, to find that those participating in the conspiracy had the power to affect or raise or control the market price of gasoline.

2. The Court, by its Order of July 19, 1938, (R. pp. 2488-2500), set aside the verdicts and granted new trials to Standard Oil Company (Indiana), Barnsdall Refining Corporation, Cities Service Company, Edward J. Bullock, A. G. Maguire, Harry D. Frueauff, H. E. Brandli, O. J. Tuttle, Harry J. Kennedy, C. B. Watson, J. W. Carnes, Edward L. Shea, Noel Robinson, J. W. Warner, E. B. Reeser, I. A. O'Shaughnessy, A. M. Hughes, Alexander Fraser;
6245 and also set aside the verdict and ordered the discharge of the Globe Oil and Refining Company (Kansas), Dan Moran, Henry M. Dawes, Edward G. Seubert, Allan Jackson, Bryan S. Reid, Frank Phillips, W. G. Skelly, Jacob France, Charles L. Jones, and A. V. Bourque.

3. The jury found that all the defendants whose cases were submitted to it were guilty. The verdict was equivalent to a finding that all of the defendants had the power to affect or raise or control the market price of gasoline. The verdict, however, did not establish that the jury considered and found that the appealing defendants without the participation of the other defendants who were either dismissed from the case after verdict or were granted new trials, had the power to raise or affect or control prices. This is particularly true in view of the fact that the Government's evidence was to the effect that the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) was the market leader and there was strong affirmative evidence that without the participation of all such defendants so dismissed or granted new trials these appellants did not have such power.

Assignment No. 22.

The Court erred in sustaining the objections of Government counsel to questions asked by counsel for the appellants of witnesses called by the appellants, and in sustaining objections to appellants' offers of proof and exhibit, which dealt with the following matters:

(1) The reasonableness, under the then existing conditions in the Nation and in the industry, of such concerted action as was shown by the evidence to have been taken by the appellants.

(2) The recognition by the Government that the objectives and results of such concerted action were in the public interest.

(3) The encouragement of such concerted action by the Government.

(4) The administrative construction by the Government of the lawfulness of such efforts under the conditions then existing.

(5) The adoption by the oil producing states through their governors, executive officers, and legislatures, and by the United States through its President, executive officers, and Congress, of a public policy of conserving the nation's petroleum resources, and of securing, by concerted effort by members of the industry and divers other means, levels of prices for crude oil and its products which would aid and permit such conservation and the stabilization of all 6247 branches of the industry.

Such rulings of the Court resulted in the exclusion of the following exhibit and offers of proof:

The offer (said offer being made as a whole and separately as to each part thereof) of appellants to show by the witness J. A. Moffett, a representative of the Government on the Planning and Coordination Committee of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, the facts relative to his conference with President Roosevelt on March 8, 1933, as a representative of the American Petroleum Institute, concerning the situation in the petroleum industry and the fixing of minimum prices. The questions, offer of proof, objection, ruling and exception thereto are set out on R. pp. 1149-1152.

The offer (said offer being made as a whole, and separately as to each part or element thereof) of appellants to show by the witness Wirt Franklin, a member of the Planning and Coordination Committee of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, the facts relative to the conference of the Governors of the oil producing states in March 1933, the action taken thereat, and the approval of the proposed program by Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior and Administrator of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry. The questions, offer of proof, objection, ruling and exception thereto are set out on R. pp. 962-976.

Appellants' Exhibit 710, being a copy of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry as of August 19, 1933. (R. pp. 473-475; 908-909; 1012; 1831.)

6248 Assignment No. 23.

The Court erred in sustaining the objections of Government counsel to questions asked by counsel for the appellants of witnesses called by the appellants and in sustaining objections to appellants' offers of proof, which dealt with the following matters:

(1) The reasonableness, under the then existing conditions in the Nation and in the industry, of such concerted action as was shown by the evidence to have been taken by the appellants.

(2) The recognition by the Government that the objectives and results of such concerted action were in the public interest.

(3) The encouragement of such concerted action by the Government.

(4) The administrative construction by the Government of the lawfulness of such efforts under the conditions then existing.

(5) That the United States, through its President and executive officers were instrumental by securing the concerted action of members of the industry and by other means, in raising the price of crude oil to one dollar a barrel, and that thereafter they sought to maintain it at that level by such concerted action and means throughout the life of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

6249 Such rulings of the Court resulted in the exclusion of the following offers of proof:

The offer (said offer being made as a whole, and separately as to each part or element thereof) of appellants to show by the witness Wirt Franklin, a member of the Planning and Coordination Committee of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, the objectives of the Petroleum Administration and said Harold L. Ickes, with reference to crude oil prices, and action taken pursuant thereto. The questions, offer of proof, objection, ruling and exception thereto are set out on R. pp. 956-960.

The offer (said offer being made as a whole, and separately as to each part or element thereof) of appellants to show by the witness Wirt Franklin, a member of the Planning and Coordination Committee of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, the facts as to a threatened cut in the price of crude oil in October, 1934, and the action and the reasons therefor taken with respect thereto by Harold L. Ickes, the Petroleum Administrator and Secretary of the Interior. The questions, offer of proof, objection, ruling and exception thereto are set out on R. pp. 937-945.

6250 Assignment No. 24.

The Court erred in sustaining the objections of Government counsel to questions asked by counsel for the appellants of witnesses called by the appellants and in sustaining objections to appellants' offers of proof and exhibits, which dealt with the following matters:

(1) The reasonableness, under the then existing conditions in the Nation and in the industry, of such concerted action as was shown by the evidence to have been taken by the appellants.

(2) The recognition by the Government that the objectives and results of such concerted action were in the public interest.

(3) The encouragement of such concerted action by the Government.

(4) The administrative construction by the Government of the lawfulness of such efforts under the conditions then existing.

(5) That, in order to relieve the distress of the independent refiners which had resulted from the maintenance of a price of one dollar a barrel for crude oil, the United States, through its executive officers, sought, by securing concerted action among members of the industry and by other means, to raise the price of gasoline to a parity with the price of crude oil.

6251 Such rulings of the Court resulted in the exclusion of the following exhibits and offers of proof:

The offer (said offer being made as a whole and separately as to each part thereof) of appellants to show by the witness J. A. Moffett, a representative of the Government on the Planning and Coordination Committee of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, the facts relative to his conference with President Roosevelt on September 26, 1933, as a representative of the American Petroleum Institute and the Planning and Coordination Committee, concerning the situation in the petroleum industry and the fixing of minimum prices. The questions, offer of proof, objection, ruling and exception thereto are set out on (R. pp. 1152-1154).

The offer of appellants to prove by the witness J. A. Moffett, a Government representative on the Planning and Coordination Committee of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, the facts relative to a conference in October 1933 between President Roosevelt, Petroleum Administrator Ickes, and representatives of the Petroleum Administrative Board and the Planning and Coordination Committee, concerning the fixing of minimum prices for petroleum products. The questions, offer of proof, objection, ruling and exception thereto are set out on R. pp. 1155-1157.

Exhibit 829, being an authenticated order signed by Harold L. Ickes, Administrator of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry and Secretary of the Interior, dated October 16, 1933, declaring it to be an act of unfair competition in violation of the National Industrial Recovery Act and the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry for any producer, wholesaler, jobber, refiner, distributor, retailer, or others, to sell or otherwise dispose of or to buy or otherwise acquire any petroleum or the products thereof at a price less than the price set forth in a schedule of prices attached to said order (R. pp. 954-956; 1831; 1838-1839); Exhibit 830, being an authenticated order signed by Harold L. Ickes, dated January 31, 1934, revoking the said orders dated 6252 October 16, 1933 (R. pp. 955-956; 1831; 1838-1839);

Exhibit 831, being an authenticated order signed by Harold L. Ickes, dated January 19, 1934, giving modified approval to the National Petroleum Agency Agreement (R. pp. 955-956; 1831; 1839); and Exhibit 832, being an authenticated copy of a letter of transmittal dated December 18, 1933, from Wirt Franklin, Chairman of the Planning and Coordination Committee, to Harold I Ickes, enclosing copies of the National Petroleum Agreement and the National Marketing Agreement (R. pp. 955-956; 1881; 1839).

The offer (said offer being made as a whole and separately as to each part thereof) of appellants to show by the witness John E. Shatford, a member of the Planning and Coordination Committee of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, the facts relative to the objectives of and reasons for the April, 1934, amendment to the Refinery Code, which was adopted by the Petroleum Administrative Board and approved by Harold L. Ickes, Petroleum Administrator and Secretary of the Interior. The questions, offer of proof, objection, ruling and exception thereto are set out on R. pp. 1037-1041.

Appellants' Exhibit 848, which is an authenticated copy of a Department of the Interior Press Release dated April 6, 1934 (R. p. 1056).

The offer of appellants to show by the witness John E. Shatford, a member of the Planning and Coordination Committee of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, the facts relative to the Government approved buying programs in 1934. The questions, offer of proof, objection, ruling and exception thereto are set out on R. pp. 1044-1045; 1047-1056.

Exhibit 844, being an authenticated copy of an order signed by Harold L. Ickes, Administrator of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry and Secretary of the Interior, dated November 2, 1934, approving a contract form for the purchase of distress gasoline 6253 (R. p. 1838); Exhibit 845, being an authenticated copy of an order signed by Harold L. Ickes, dated June 23, 1934, approving a contract form for the purchase of distress gasoline (R. pp. 1831; 1839-1840); and Exhibit 847, being an authenticated copy of an order signed by Harold L. Ickes, dated August 13, 1934, approving a contract form for the purchase of distress gasoline (R. pp. 1831; 1840).

Exhibit 846, which is an authenticated copy of an order signed by Harold L. Ickes, Administrator of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry and Secretary of the Interior, dated September 8, 1934, approving the creation and establishment of the Program Committee with the duty of securing markets for the sale of excess stocks of gasoline in the hands of non-integrated and semi-integrated refiners (R. pp. 1831; 1840).

Exhibit 834, which is an original letter dated December 11, 1934, from Harold L. Ickes, Administrator of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry and Secretary of the Interior, to R. G. Cocanower, general manager of Olney Oil & Refining Co., an alleged co-conspirator, relative to the "hot oil" situation in East Texas, the suspension of a buying program due to a change in conditions, and the consideration of a modified buying plan, refinery allocations, the difficult position of the independent refiner, and the duty of the industry to solve its own problems (R. pp. 990-991; 1062).

The offer (said offer being made as a whole and separately as to each part thereof) of appellants to show by the witness John E. Shatford, a member of the Planning and Coordination Committee of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, the facts relative to a conference between I. A. O'Shaughnessy, defendant, president of defendant Globe Oil and Refining Companies, the Petroleum Administrative Board, and the witness in August, 1934, concerning a plan for the withholding of gasoline from the market until it could be sold on a cost recovery basis. The questions, offer of proof, objec-6254 tion, ruling and exception thereto are set out on R. pp. 1056-1057.

The following portion from Appellants' Exhibit 917, which is an official print of the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1935 (R. pp. 1838; 1679):

"During the summer and fall of 1934 wholesale prices for petroleum products were below parity with the current prices for crude petroleum, which presented a particularly serious problem to the non-integrated refiner. Several plans were projected by the industry to solve the difficulty, which was aggravated considerably by the excessive amount of hot oil and interstate movements of hot gasoline in interstate commerce. The Planning and Coordination Committee proposed a form of contract designed to remove distress stocks in East Texas from the market. The form of contract was approved on June 23, 1934, and during the months of July and August gasoline in East Texas was purchased under this form of contract, to which the Administrator was a party and which provided that the sellers would not process 'hot oil.' This program proved insufficient, and a new form of contract for the purchase of current output was approved. But the production of gasoline from 'hot oil' continued, stocks of gasoline mounted, wholesale prices for gasoline remained below parity with crude oil prices, and in the early fall of 1934 the industry approached a serious collapse of the wholesale market. The Planning and Coordination Committee appointed a Program Committee, which proposed a broad plan for the purchase of surplus gasoline with the purpose of also preventing illegal production of crude oil and providing a method of orderly marketing. The excessive amount of overproduction in Texas made the initiation of this program futile, and it was never put into operation."

6255 Appellants' Exhibit 1029, which is an authenticated copy of an order signed by Harold L. Ickes, Administrator for the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry and Secretary of the Interior, dated June 23, 1934, approving the Pacific Coast Petroleum Agency Agreement, whereby certain members of the industry entered into an agreement to aid in the stabilization of the industry by purchasing, holding and liquidating distress gasoline. (R. pp. 1680; 1681-1682).

6256 Assignment No. 25.

The Court erred in sustaining the objections of Government counsel to questions asked by counsel for the appellants of witnesses called by the appellants and in sustaining objections to appellants' offer of proof, which dealt with the following matters:

(1) The reasonableness, under the then existing conditions in the Nation and in the industry, of such concerted action as was shown by the evidence to have been taken by the appellants.

(2) The recognition by the Government that the objectives and results of such concerted action were in the public interest.

(3) The encouragement of such concerted action by the Government.

(4) The administrative construction by the Government of the lawfulness of such efforts under the conditions then existing.

(5) The distressed condition of the independent refiners because of the lack of parity between the price of crude oil and the price of gasoline, as a result of the success of the efforts made at the instance of the Government to maintain the price of crude oil and of the failure of the various efforts made at the instance of the Government to 6257 raise the price of gasoline to a parity with the price of crude; and the fact that the continuance of this condition would tend to make it impossible to maintain the price of crude oil at a level that the Government felt necessary for reasons of conservation.

Such rulings of the Court resulted in the exclusion of the following offer of proof:

The offer of appellants to show by the witness, S. A. Swensrud, a member of the Petroleum Code Survey Committee on Small Enterprise, appointed to such committee by Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, the facts relative to the condition of the independent refiner in 1934 and the first two months of 1935. The questions, offer of proof, objection, ruling and exception thereto are set out on R. pp. 1427-1434.

6258 Assignment No. 26.

The Court erred in sustaining the objections of the Government while the defendant Robert W. McDowell and the witness John W. Frey were on the stand, and during the direct examination of the defendant Charles E. Arnott, to the admission in evidence of Exhibit 891 which was offered by the defendants at those times in connection with the direct testimony of the said witnesses. (R. pp. 1173-1174; 1177-1178; 1291; 1737). This exhibit reads as follows:

"Administrator of the Petroleum Industry
Washington
Interior Department Building

"July 20, 1934

"Mr. C. E. Arnott, Chairman,
Marketing Committee,
Planning and Coordination Committee, Investment Building,
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. Arnott:

"It has been brought to my attention that the market for gasoline and other petroleum products has recently been disturbed by numerous price wars in many different localities and states. This has resulted in causing petroleum products to be sold below cost in some areas in order to meet unrestrained competition, and has in turn depressed the wholesale market for such products, thereby leading to the building up of surplus and to the economic and physical waste consequent thereon.

"Such conditions have a strong tendency toward, and in many instances have resulted in, the payment of wages below the minimum established by the Code, and in the working of employees for a period beyond the maxi-6259 mum hours provided for by it. Furthermore, price wars necessarily injure small independent marketers who are unable to dispose of their products profitably when prices sink to ruinous levels. It would appear, therefore, that we are faced with conditions which would, if uncontrolled, tend to frustrate the purposes of the National Industrial Recovery Act by increasing unemployment, reducing standards of labor, and preventing the rehabilitation of industry, which the Act was intended to achieve.

"Under Article VII, Section 3 of the Code it is the duty of the Planning and Coordination Committee to cooperate with the Administration as a planning and fair practice agency for the industry. I am, therefore, requesting you, as Chairman of the Marketing Committee of the Planning and Coordination Committee to take action which we deem necessary to restore markets to their normal conditions in areas where wasteful competition has caused them to become depressed. The number and extent of these situations would make it impractical for the Petroleum Administrative Board acting alone to deal with each specific situation. Therefore, I am requesting and authorizing you, as Chairman of the Marketing Committee to designate committees for each locality when and as price wars develop, with authority to confer and to negotiate and to hold due public hearings with a view to ascertaining the elements of conflict that are present, and in a cooperative manner to stabilize the price level to conform to that normally prevailing in contiguous areas where marketing conditions are similar. Any activities of your Committee must, of course, be consistent with the requirements of Clause 2 of Subsection (a) of Section III of the Act, and if in any situation it should appear that this Section is not being complied with, the matter should be referred to the Petroleum Administrative Board.

"I trust that I can count on your cooperation.

"Sincerely yours,
(Sgd.) Harold L. Ickes,
Administrator of the Petroleum Industry."

6260 Assignment No. 27.

The Court erred in sustaining the objections of Government counsel to questions asked by counsel for the appellants of witnesses called by the appellants, and in sustaining objections to appellants' offer of proof and exhibit, which dealt with the following matters:

(1) The reasonableness, under the then existing conditions in the Nation and in the industry, of such concerted action as was shown by the evidence to have been taken by the appellants.

(2) The recognition by the Government that the objectives and results of such concerted action were in the public interest.

(3) The encouragement of such concerted action by the Government.

(4) The administrative construction by the Government of the lawfulness of such efforts under the conditions then existing.

(5) The interpretation of a letter, Exhibit 891, dated July 20, 1934, from Harold L. Ickes, Administrator for the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, to the appellant C. E. Arnott.

6261 Such rulings of the Court resulted in the exclusion of the following exhibit and offer of proof:

The offer of appellants to show by the witness, Louis Titus, who was not a defendant, the facts relative to a legal opinion written by him as general counsel for the Planning and Coordination Committee of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, interpreting and construing a letter from Harold L. Ickes, Petroleum Administrator and Secretary of the Interior, to Charles E. Arnott, a defendant, vice-president of defendant Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc., dated July 20, 1934. The questions, offer of proof, objection, ruling and exception thereto are set out on R. pp. 1831-1837.

Appellants' Exhibit 892, which is an original memorandum opinion dated July 31, 1934, from Louis Titus, counsel for the Planning and Coordination Committee for the Code of Fair Competition of the Petroleum Industry, addressed to Charles E. Arnott, a defendant, construing and interpreting a letter dated July 20, 1934 (Exhibit 891) from Harold L. Ickes, Administrator of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry and Secretary of the Interior, to Charles E. Arnott, as Chairman of the Marketing Committee of the Planning and Coordination Committee. Said opinion stated that the letter was full and complete authority for the taking of necessary steps to restore markets in any locality to their normal condition and was, for all practical purposes, a complete protection to him and his committees to engage in all reasonable activities to restore prices to normal levels. (R. pp. 1173-1174; 1177; 1177-1178; 1737; 1795-1796).

6262 Assignment No. 28.

The Court erred in sustaining the objections of Government counsel to questions asked by counsel for the appellants of witnesses called by the appellants, and in sustaining objections to appellants' offer of proof, which dealt with the following matters:

(1) The reasonableness, under the then existing conditions in the Nation and in the industry, of such concerted action as was shown by the evidence to have been taken by the appellants.

(2) The recognition by the Government that the objectives and results of such concerted action were in the public interest.

(3) The encouragement of such concerted action by the Government.

(4) The administrative construction by the Government of the lawfulness of such efforts under the conditions then existing.

(5) The fact that the executive officers of the United States charged with the administration of the oil industry under the National Industrial Recovery Act believed that the activities for which the appellants had been indicted were in furtherance of the objectives of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, and the letter of July 20, 1934, Exhibit 891; and the fact that 6263 Harold L. Ickes, Administrator, through the Petroleum Administrative Board of the Department of the Interior, cooperated with and encouraged the defendants in carrying out such activities.

Such rulings of the Court resulted in the exclusion of the following offer of proof:

The offer of appellants to show by the witness John E. Shatford, a member of the Planning and Coordination Committee under the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, alternate National Coordinator from April 24, 1934, to March 25, 1935, and from March 25, 1935 until the close of the Code, National Coördinator, the facts relative to his contacts with the Petroleum Administrative Board, and through its chairman, with Harold L. Ickes, Petroleum Administrator and Secretary of the Interior concerning the voluntary refinery curtailment plan of March, 1935. The questions, offer of proof, objection, ruling and exception thereto are set out on R. pp. 1014-1021.

6264 Assignment No. 29.

The Court erred in sustaining the objections of Government counsel to questions asked by counsel for the appellants of witnesses called by the appellants, and in sustaining objections to appellants' exhibits, which dealt with the following matters:

(1) The reasonableness, under the then existing conditions in the Nation and in the industry, of such concerted action as was shown by the evidence to have been taken by the appellants.

(2) The recognition by the Government that the objectives and results of such concerted action were in the public interest.

(3) The encouragement of such concerted action by the Government.

(4) The administrative construction by the Government of the lawfulness of such efforts under the conditions then existing.

(5) The interpretation of a letter, Exhibit 891, dated July 20, 1934, from Harold L. Ickes, Administrator, for the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, to the appellant C. E. Arnott.

(6) The familiarity of the executive officers of the United States charged with the administration of 6265 the oil industry under the National Industrial Recovery Act with the activities for which the appellants had been indicted; their belief that such activities were in furtherance of the objectives of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, and the letter of July 20, 1934, Exhibit 891; and the fact that Harold L. Ickes, Administrator, through the Petroleum Administrative Board of the Department of the Interior, cooperated with and encouraged the defendants in carrying out such activities.

Such rulings of the Court resulted in the exclusion of the following exhibits of appellants:

Exhibit 924, which is an authenticated copy of a press release of the Petroleum Administrative Board, United States Department of the Interior, dated March 28, 1935, concerning and embodying the report of the Petroleum Code Survey Committee on Small Enterprises, appointed by Harold L. Ickes, Administrator for the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry and Secretary of the Interior. This report contains an analysis of production, refining and marketing complaints, and concludes that the small, non-integrated refiner is in an intolerable position, due to the lack of parity between the prices for crude oil and refined products. It recommends preferably an increase in the price of refined products to a parity with the posted price of crude petroleum or alternatively a reduction in the price of crude petroleum to a parity with the then posted price of gasoline. It also recommends that the Petroleum Administrator support a program then being considered for the concerted informal buying of distress gasoline by major companies. (R. p. 1324-1325).

Exhibit 1030, which is an authenticated copy of a memorandum dated March 22, 1935, from Charles Fahy, 6266 Chairman of the Petroleum Administrative Board, Department of the Interior, to Harold L. Ickes, ~~Administrator for~~ the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry and Secretary of the Interior, analyzing the report of the Petroleum Code Survey Committee on Small Enterprises. This memorandum pointed out that the Committee in its analysis of the refinery situation emphasized that immediate relief was necessary if non-integrated refiners were not to be eliminated. The memorandum suggested that such relief could only come through an immediate and sustained increase in tank car and retail gasoline prices to a parity with the then posted prices of crude petroleum, or a reduction in the posted price of crude petroleum to a parity with the price of gasoline, and it urged that some of the recommendations of the Committee should be adopted, e.g., "We have encouraged stabilization efforts designed at this time to aid the independent refiner, * * *" (R. pp. 1681; 1886-1889).

Exhibit 993, being an authenticated copy of a letter dated April 30, 1935, from Paul G. Blazer, Chairman of the Petroleum Code Survey Committee on Small Enterprises, appointed by said Harold L. Ickes, to said Charles Fahy, stating, among other things, that the Committee is "going on record that there is no need for a reduction in crude oil prices at this time" in the belief "that small additional advances will be made in both tank car and retail prices of gasoline", stating also that "It appears to be the opinion of a majority of the Committee that at least another quarter cent advance in tank car prices is essential, and that if such an advance should not occur within the near future, a decline of approximately 5¢ per barrel should be made in crude oil prices", and concluding with the statement that:

"Our Committee has been very much pleased with the success of the program to stabilize tank car markets. We believe it has been handled in a manner calculated to benefit the non-integrated refiners and without disadvantage to marketers. Of course, the real question is whether, after parity of gasoline and crude oil price has been obtained, they can be maintained without excessive continued buying by the major companies. It is the opinion of our committee that the final answer to that question will be determined by the effectiveness of efforts to balance crude oil supply and demand. I believe I can speak for our entire committee when I say that we believe fundamental conditions in the industry have been sufficiently improved to bring about and maintain prices for finished products which will justify $1.00 crude oil." (R. pp. 1830-1831.)

6267 Exhibit 994, being an authenticated copy of a letter dated May 7, 1935, from Charles Fahy to Paul G. Blazer, enclosing a copy of a press statement regarding the relationship between crude oil prices and the price of petroleum products. (R. pp. 1830-1831.)

Exhibit 919, being authenticated copies of letters from said Harold L. Ickes to H. B. Fell, Mason Houghland, R. E. Allen, Sidney Swensrud, members, and Paul G. Blazer, Chairman, of the Petroleum Code Survey Committee on Small Enterprises, acknowledging receipt of the report of the Committee embodying an independent survey of the effects of the Petroleum Code on Small Enterprises in the industry, and expressing the Administrator's appreciation of the service rendered and asking that the Committee consider itself still in existence. (R. pp. 1321; 1324.)

Exhibit 921, being an authenticated copy of a telegram dated April 23, 1935, from Charles Fahy to Paul G. Blazer, requesting the informal views of the Committee regarding gasoline prices. (R. pp. 1321-1322; 1324.)

Exhibit 922, being an authenticated copy of a telegram dated April 23, 1935, from Paul G. Blazer to Charles Fahy, stating that there was no need for a reduction in crude oil prices since tank car gasoline prices were now considered almost up to parity with sufficient additional advances anticipated in both tank car and retail prices. (R. pp. 1322; 1324.)

6268 Assignment No. 30.

The Court erred in sustaining the objections of Government counsel to questions asked by counsel for the appellants of witnesses called by the appellants, and in sustaining objections to appellants' offers of proof and exhibits, which dealt with the following matters:

(1) The reasonableness, under the then existing conditions in the Nation and in the industry, of such concerted action as was shown by the evidence to have been taken by the appellants.

(2) The recognition by the Government that the objectives and results of such concerted action were in the public interest..

(3) The encouragement of such concerted action by the Government.

(4) The administrative construction by the Government of the lawfulness of such efforts under the conditions then existing.

(5) The interpretation of a letter, Exhibit 891, dated July 20, 1934, from Harold L. Ickes, Administrator for the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, to the appellant C. E. Arnott.

(6) The familiarity of the executive officers of the United States charged with the administration of the oil industry under the National Industrial Recovery Act with the activities for which the appellants had been indicted; their belief that such activities were in furtherance 6269 of the objectives of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, and the letter of July 20, 1934, Exhibit 891; and the fact that Harold L. Ickes, Administrator, through the Petroleum Administrative Board of the Department of the Interior, cooperated with and encouraged the defendants in carrying out such activities.

Such rulings of the Court resulted in the exclusion of the following exhibits and offers of proof:

The offer of appellants to show certain facts relative to the situation of Pennsylvania refiners and action taken by the Petroleum Administrative Board with respect thereto, as follows:

(1) By the witness S. M. Vockel, president of Waverly Oil Works Company of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, the facts relative to conferences between the witness and the Petroleum Administrative Board in April and May, 1935, concerning the situation of the Pennsylvania refiner and proposed action with respect thereto by the Stabilization Committee, headed by Charles E. Arnott, a defendant, vice-president of defendant Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc. The question, offer of proof, objection, ruling and exception thereto are set out on R. pp. 1342-1353.

(2) By the witness W. J. Brundred, vice-president of Central Pennsylvania Oil Producers' Association, the facts relative to the contacts of the witness with the Petroleum Administrative Board in 1934 and 1935 concerning the situation of the Pennsylvania refiner, and the action and proposed action of the Board with respect thereto. The questions, offer of proof, objection, ruling and exception thereto are set out on R. pp. 1354-1367.

6270 (3) By the witness, John W. Frey, Associate Director of the Petroleum Conservation Division, Department of the Interior, and a member of the Petroleum Administrative Board in charge of the Marketing Division, the facts relative to conferences between the Board and Pennsylvania refiners in May, 1935, and the reasons why the Petroleum Administrative Board wanted Mr. Arnott to assist the Pennsylvania refiners. The question, offer of proof, objection, ruling and exception thereto are set out on R. pp. 1285-1290.

Appellants' Exhibits as follows:

Exhibit 915, being an authenticated copy of a letter dated May 18, 1935, from E. B. Swanson, a member of the Petroleum Administrative Board, Department of the Interior, to W. J. Brundred, vice-president of Central Pennsylvania Oil Producers' Association, Oil City, Pennsylvania, stating that as a result of a conference between Messrs. Fahy, chairman, and Frey and Swanson, members of the Petroleum Administrative Board, the Stabilization Committee of the Planning & Coordination Committee, under the chairmanship of Charles E. Arnott, a defendant, might be of definite assistance in connection with lubricants as they had been in connection with gasoline, and that Mr. Fahy telegraphed Mr. Arnott, who replied that he would take up the matter and thought some good could be accomplished for refiners and others in the Pennsylvania territory. (R. pp. 1330; 1841; 1679-1680; 1886-1889).

Exhibit 916, being authenticated copies of two telegrams, one from Charles Fahy, chairman of the Petroleum Administrative Board, to Charles E. Arnott, a defendant dated May 14, 1935, asking Mr. Arnott to arrange for the Stabilization Committee to consider and undertake both immediate adjustment and long-range correction of disparity between Pennsylvania grade crude and refined prices, which made impossible continued operation of small Pennsylvania refiners who had not benefited equally with others under the stabilization program, and the other a telegram from Charles E. Arnott to Charles Fahy dated May 17, 1935, replying to Mr. Fahy's telegram and stating that he would go into the situation next week to accomplish something constructive for Pennsylvania refiners and others. (R. pp. 1330; 1735-1736; 1841; 1679-1680; 1886-1889).

Exhibit 925, being an authenticated copy of a letter dated May 9, 1935, from said W. J. Brundred to said Charles Fahy, stating among other things that top-heavy inventories of refined products, together with overproduction of crude and excessive refining, had caused demoralization of lubricant markets and prices and was the prime cause of the difficulties of small refiners in Pennsylvania (R. pp. 1354-1355; 1679-1680; 1886-1889).

6271 Exhibit 971, being an authenticated copy of a telegram dated May 17, 1935, from said Charles Fahy to said Charles E. Arnott, thanking him for his telegram of May 14, 1935 (Exhibit 925), relative to the Pennsylvania situation (R. pp. 1679-1680; 1734-1736; 1886-1889).

Exhibit 972, being an authenticated copy of a letter dated May 7, 1935, from said E. B. Swanson to S. M. Vockel, president of Waverly Oil Works Company, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, neither being defendants, stating that every effort has been and is being made under the Petroleum Code to make profitable the operation of petroleum refiners and that considerable progress in that direction has been made during the past several weeks and that under the present relationship between prices of crude and refined petroleum products most refiners can operate satisfactorily. (R. pp. 1679-1680; 1735-1736; 1886-1889).

Exhibit 973, being an authenticated copy of a letter dated May 17, 1935, from said E. B. Swanson to Senator James J. Davis of the United States Senate, telling him of the agreement to place the problem of the small Pennsylvania refiners before the Stabilization Committee of the Planning and Coordination Committee and quoting the telegram from Mr. Fahy to Mr. Arnott and the reply by Mr. Arnott as set forth in Exhibit 916. (R. pp. 1841; 1679-1680; 1886-1889).

6272 Assignment No. 31.

The Court erred in sustaining the objections of Government counsel to questions asked by counsel for the appellants of witnesses called by the appellants, and in sustaining objections to appellants' Exhibit 914, which dealt with the following matters:

(1) The reasonableness, under the then existing conditions in the Nation and in the industry, of such concerted action as was shown by the evidence to have been taken by the appellants.

(2) The recognition by the Government that the objectives and results of such concerted action were in the public interest.

(3) The encouragement of such concerted action by the Government.

(4) The administrative construction by the Government of the lawfulness of such efforts under the conditions then existing.

(5) The interpretation of a letter, Exhibit 891, dated July 20, 1934, from Harold L. Ickes, Administrator for the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry to the appellant C. E. Arnott.

(6) The familiarity of the executive officers of the United States charged with the administration of the oil industry under the National Industrial Recovery Act with the activities for which the appellants had been in-6273 dicted; their belief that such activities were in furtherance of the objectives of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, and the letter of July 20, 1934, Exhibit 891; and the fact that Harold L. Ickes, Administrator, through the Petroleum Administrative Board of the Department of the Interior, cooperated with and encouraged the defendants in carrying out such activities.

Said Exhibit 914 was an official print of the Final Report of the Marketing Division of the Petroleum Administrative Board, Department of the Interior, issued in June, 1936, and containing a review of the stabilization activities undertaken pursuant to the letter dated July 20, 1934 (Exhibit 891) from Harold L. Ickes, Administrator of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry and Secretary of the Interior, to Charles E. Arnott, a defendant, then Chairman of the Marketing Committee of the Planning and Coordination Committee. Said report contains, among others, the following statement:

"As the various problems were offered for discussion at the general stabilization committee meetings, sub-committees were appointed to make recommendations among these subcommittees. One of the most important was the tank-car committee, which attempted to get the tank-car market raised more in line with the price of crude recovery cost on the theory that a firm tank-car market was essential to a stabilized retail structure." (R. pp. 1837-1838; 1680; 1886-1889.)

6274 Assignment No. 32.

The Court erred in sustaining the objections of Government counsel to questions asked by counsel for the appellants of witnesses called by the appellants, and in sustaining objections to appellants' offers of proof and exhibits, which dealt with the following matters:

(1) The reasonableness, under the then existing conditions in the Nation and in the industry, of such concerted action as was shown by the evidence to have been taken by the appellants.

(2) That the activities for which the appellants had been indicted did not raise the wholesale and retail prices of gasoline to, or maintain them at, high, arbitrary and artificial levels.

Such rulings of the court resulted in the exclusion of the following exhibits and offers of proof:

The offer (said offer being made as a whole and separately as to each part thereof) of appellants to show by the witness F. W. Fischer, the facts relative to the crude oil situation in East Texas in 1933 and 1934 leading up to the establishment of the first Federal Tender Board and its effect on over-production and on gasoline prices in October and November, 1934. The questions, offer of proof, objection, ruling and exception thereto are set out on R. pp. 1121-1124.

6275 Appellants' Exhibit 849, which is a composite chart showing the spot market prices for third grade gasoline for the months of October, November and December, 1934, as reflected in Platt's Oilgram and the Chicago Journal of Commerce. (R. pp. 1062-1063).

The offer (said offer being made as a whole and separately as to each part thereof) of appellants to show by the witness John E. Shatford, a member of the Planning and Coordination Committee of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, the facts relative to the increase in the tank car price of gasoline in October and November, 1934. The questions, offer of proof, objection, ruling and exception thereto are set out on R. pp. 1059-1062.

The offer of appellants to show by the witness, Fred Van Covern, the facts relative to the level of gasoline prices from October, 1934 through December, 1934 and their relationship to price levels throughout 1935 and 1936. The questions, offer of proof, objections, ruling and exceptions are set out on R. pp. 1488-1503.

The following portion from appellants' Exhibit 917, which is an official print of the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1935. (R. pp. 1290-1291; 1679; 1831; 1838):
